Vipassana (insight) meditation practice is a systematic examination of the mind/body process through calm and focused awareness. Learning to observe experience from a place of stillness enables one to relate to life without fear or clinging. One begins to accept pleasure and pain, fear and joy, with increasing equanimity and balance. Life is seen as a constantly changing process. Insight is the deepening experience of the process itself, free of interpretation, leading to wisdom and compassion.

This seminar is designed for those who have had no previous meditation experience as well as for those who wish to deepen their practice. Meditation instruction, the philosophy behind the practice, group discussions, and actual practice periods will be offered. Special emphasis will be placed on how to integrate Vipassana practice in daily life after the workshop is over.

Minding the Body, Mending the Mind and the Soul

Joan & Myrin Borysenko

We are at an emerging crossroads where science, medicine, and spirituality are coming together as a new force for healing, where mending the soul is recognized as integral to minding the body and mending the mind. Physical illness, addiction, anxiety, depression, loneliness, and guilt are all opportunities for learning to embrace life with gratitude and enthusiasm, learning the skills of psychospiritual growth, and remembering our connection to the spirit, or Source of life, that we all share.

Exploring medicine, science, psychology, and the perennial philosophy of the ages, we will share a weekend of soul-mending that includes practical methods of breathing, meditation, imagery, prayer, dream work, and poetry. The underlying philosophy of the group work will be that we are already whole and that we can learn to pay gentle attention to the messages from mind and body that call us to remember our deeper unity and identity with spirit.

A Look Within

Jessica Moore Britt

This will be a week for participants to attend to and explore themselves away from their usual busy lives. As they settle into the grandeur of Big Sur and the quiet within, they can begin to penetrate through their conditioned views of themselves and the world.

The point of inquiry will be the relationship of the mind, body, and emotions and the essential nature of the self. Participants will focus on understanding who and what they are, especially as beings of compassion, strength, will, power, joy, and presence. They will explore how their past conditioning and present beliefs block their awareness of these qualities in themselves. The tools for self-discovery will be an interplay of Eastern and Western practices, including Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, touch, movement, and Reichian/gestalt work. This time, dedicated to being present and looking within, holds the possibility for participants to open their perceptions so they might obtain a deeper appreciation for who they are.

Imagery and Healing: Shamanism and Modern Medicine

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

The image is an ancient and potent healing tool, a source of creative ideas, and the basis for rituals performed since the beginning of time. It is a midwife or interface between inner experience and conscious expression.

This workshop will examine ways to integrate the power of the imagination back into our culture, giving balance to the art and science of healing self, others, and community. Material will include scientific validation, studies of persons with catastrophic and chronic disease, and ways to integrate imagery and related psychospiritual modalities into daily life and into the helping/healing professions (counseling, medicine, nursing, and other fields of health care). Guided imagery, music, and traditional shamanic tools will be used for journeys into the self.

Delicious Movement Workshop

Eiko & Koma

The Delicious Movement Workshop is designed for people who love to move with delicious feelings. Eiko and Koma encourage each participant to develop a lifelong pleasure in dancing anytime, anywhere, professionally or nonprofessionally. Raised in Japan but imbued with Western aesthetic concepts, the leaders build on Eastern awareness of physical nuance and time, and a Western recognition of the individualistic creative act.

A movement vocabulary which employs images, body articulation, and floor work is provided as the common ground for this workshop. However, the aim is not to teach this vocabulary. Rather, the participants, through their personal digestion of the material and the improvisational partnership which supports it, are encouraged to acquire personal taste and flexible discipline to suit their own moving bodies.

How Hungry Am I and For What

Mariah Fenton Gladis

The road to recovery for adult children of alcoholics and others whose parents have been dysfunctional or abusive is challenging and can be deeply rewarding. It requires determination, lifelong commitment, and positive experiences. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health. Group members will work toward transforming their personal histories from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom, focusing on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of chronic trauma.
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries.
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation toward stability and abundance.
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

The workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals working with ACAs.

Hands of Light: Introduction to Healing and High Sense Perception

Barbara Brennan

Barbara Brennan writes: "An important fact of existence is that we create our own experience of reality. The physical body exists within a larger body, a human energy field or aura, which is the vehicle through which we create that reality, including illness and health. It is through this energy field that we have the power to heal ourselves. It is also through this energy field that 'high sense perception' takes place. High sense perception is the ability to sense reality beyond the normal ranges of human sensing, commonly referred to as psychic sensing."

This workshop will emphasize simple healing methods and the development of high sense perception. It will include lectures, guidance, and healing by the leader, and hands-on practice by participants. Barbara Brennan, a former research scientist for NASA, will draw on her work with the human energy field. She will be accompanied by harpist Marjorie Valerie, who improvises music for meditation and healing.

How Do I Love Thee, Let Me Count the Ways

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared—by their family backgrounds or society—to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor.

This workshop is for people who want to remain well and be in a position to help others remain well. Wellness here is defined as the direct experience of freedom, whether physical, emotional, mental, or spiritual.

Participants will be introduced to and experience various healing tools. One day each will be spent on: the traditional Chinese system of acupuncture, homeopathic philosophy and practice, Bach flower remedies, food—the best medicine, Rolfing and deep tissue work. A short, morning t'ai chi practice will be taught. There will be chanting and meditation, an afternoon herb bath, and evening talks on spirituality.

Freedom to Act

Paula Sholachman Shaw

It is oftentimes difficult to express something on the outside as strongly as it is felt on the inside. People sit in dark theaters, spectators to those who can play out what's locked inside, from villain to hero, spanning the full spectrum of human emotion. Participants in this course will do just that, exploring the full range of the actor's instrument—themselves.

Even those who thought they could never perform in front of an audience will perhaps amaze themselves with how powerfully expressive they can be. There will be exercises in personal presentation, performance, emotional expression, and improvisation. Requirement: a one-to-three minute memorized performance piece of any kind. The leader requests: "Leave your performing standards behind and bring your risky fears along."

Women's Wisdom: Celebrating Sacred Dimensions of the Feminine

Jean Shinoda Bolen & Jan Lovett-Keen

By tapping intuitive sources of wisdom, creativity, and spirituality, life takes on deeper meaning. We are nourished by what we feel and know and dream and express. In the outer world, change and transitions are inevitable. What we often miss is time to reflect upon the meaning of events and to take stock of who we are becoming.

This retreat invites women to take time for inner reflection in the nurturing company of other women in an environment of natural beauty. Jean Shinoda Bolen, author of Goddesses in Everywoman, will lead participants inward through myths and meditation to their personal symbols and to the truth in their dreams. Jan Lovett-Keen, a musician and body worker, will teach participants to care for their bodies and to be attuned to their vulnerabilities, pain, trust, and strengths. Through music, participants will touch sources of inspiration and creativity and be reminded of the profound connection between women's nature and Mother Nature, between music and body knowledge.

These five days will provide women with an opportunity to experience their inner trusting child, the grown woman choicemaker, and the wisewoman aware of the sacred dimension of ordinary life.

On Being a Man

David Schiffman

Many men today have sought to honor and embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result of this emphasis, the right to celebrate and honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man's sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own natures which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood, and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and good will, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the "wild man" within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

A variety of experiential processes will illuminate these and similar issues. Traditional initiation rituals and purification ceremonies using drumming, chanting, and a sweat lodge will be incorporated in this journey as well.

The Right Work

John Caple

What is work? And what is not work?
—The Bhagavad Gita

In this workshop participants will rediscover work-related dreams, draw power from life experiences, and clarify their vision of what they want their worklife to be. They will refine their sense of what is work and what is play, and what is right for them.

The approach will be practical, though grounded in the longings of the soul, and worldly, though enriched by the resources and culture of Esalen. There will be concepts to stimulate the intellect, processes to awaken intuitive wisdom, and a chance to bring it all together in a personal life plan. Participants will learn eleven steps to determine what work is right for them and specific strategies for getting that work, whether it involves a shift in responsibilities, a new job, or a complete career change. Some time will be available for individual work.

The Shadow of Love

Ayala Pines

Whatever the essence of the love that binds two people will be the essence of the shadow this love will cast when threatened. Jealousy, envy, anger, fear, and other powerful emotions are all part of the shadow of love. In most cases, they are not a result of individual pathology, but of a certain dynamic in the relationship. They are useful signals that partners can interpret and take advantage of to improve themselves and the relationship.

Through group discussion, role-playing, and guided fantasy, participants will learn to identify the threat triggered by the shadow of love and how to protect their relationships in positive and constructive ways. This workshop is for anyone who seeks better understanding of love and the emotions in its shadow, including issues related to love and jealousy. It may also be interesting for counselors who work with people for whom these issues are important.

The Shamanic Journey, Power, and Healing

Michael Harner

Shamanism is an ancient human strategy for personal learning and for acting on that learning, using normally neglected or hidden potentialities of the heart, mind, and spirit. Shamanic methods can contribute to virtually any aspect of living, as they have for tens of thousands of years, and are especially useful for problem-solving, well-being, and healing.

In this experiential workshop, participants will be introduced to basic methods of the shaman (a specific type of medicine man or woman) and initiated into the classic shamanic journey. Otherwise known through myth and accounts of great spiritual experiences, this visionary method can be used to enter nonordinary reality to obtain knowledge, to answer personal questions, to maximize power to achieve personal goals, and to contribute to the health of oneself, others, and the Planet. Participants will be aided by traditional drumming and movement and will be provided with methods for journeying to discover and study with their individual spiritual teachers in nonordinary reality, a classic step in shamanic practice.

The shamanic journey can be utilized to help restore spiritual power and health and has practical applications to contemporary daily life. Practices this weekend will include comparison of discoveries and work on personal problem-solving and wellness.

Please bring a bandanna to cover your eyes, a pen and notebook to record your journeys and, if you have them, a drum and/or a rattle. Wear comfortable clothing.

On Being Good Enough

Heather Maycock-Ogilvy

Being a good enough parent, a good enough therapist, a good enough teacher, or a good enough spouse is an art not a science, a creative endeavor that must be entered into with an open mind and an open heart. This workshop offers no detailed instructions or rules but rather encouragement to develop an empathy with those with whom we would be—not perfect—but good enough.

Problem situations in love or work, childhood memories, dreams, and guided imagery will serve as material for the work. Psychodrama will be part of the process as will discussion, massage, play, and meditation.

Yoga, Body Work, and Somatic Awareness Practices

Deborah Anne Medow & Til Luchau

A strong relationship exists between the inner sense of the body and the way we do what we do in the outer world. It could be said that inner somatic experience shapes outer activity. When learning yoga and massage together, this inner/outer relationship becomes apparent. The inner practice—yoga—gives a clear, proprioceptive sense of what it is like to be a body. This inner sense naturally informs the outer practice of giving a massage with a knowing authenticity and sense of presence.

In this workshop, participants will be given instruction in massage and gentle forms of ashtanga yoga, with awareness practices designed to integrate the somatic lessons gained from each. It is appropriate for both beginners and those with yoga or massage experience. Bring loose, comfortable clothing.

Exploring Trance and Developing Self-Hypnotic Potentials

Marc Lehrer

Hypnosis, autogenics, Jacobsonian relaxation, computerized biofeedback, and other trance-enhancing tools for the mega-brain form the core of this experiential program. Goals for the week include: developing trance states to enhance everyday living; altering physiology to warm the hands and feet for stress relief (such as indicated for Reynaud's disease and hypertension); increasing or reducing sensation awareness to enhance sensuality or to alleviate pain; creating a communication strategy for working with the unconscious mind; and applying these learnings to habit patterns that have been difficult to change in the past.

Participants will practice methods for deepening, individual and group inductions, and trance awareness in movement and exercise. There will be time to discuss personal experiences and to enjoy the Esalen environment. Bring a small tape recorder with headphones or a pillow speaker if you are interested in working on sleep suggestions, and a favorite percussive soundmaker (small drum, shaker, bell, sticks or rocks) for daily rhythm practice.

This workshop is about all the steps involved in learning to experience, respect, and honor one's feeling process in a way that can increase vitality and personal effectiveness. Men and Their Fathers: Unfinished Business

Samuel Osherson

Fathers are immensely important figures in men's lives, yet they often are shrouded in mystery and silence. Career goals, relationships with women, other men, their children, even men's attitudes toward spirituality are often linked to unfinished business with their fathers.

This workshop, open to both men and women, will explore the origins of the wounded father/son relationship and the paths to healing. Participants will consider current research and theory on the role of the father and mother in men's psychological development and discuss the changing place of the father in modern families. Using group and individual exercises, case studies, and contemporary poetry and music, they will explore the following themes:

- the key role of fathers in men's identities
- ways men try to complete their relationships with their fathers through children, wives, and mentors
- normal dilemmas of the father/son bond
- what happens when fathers are deceased or absent
- ways of letting go of past battles
- women's roles in the father-son relationship

The process will include ample time for discussion and personal reflection.

Achieving Sustained High Performance

Jerry & Kathleen Fletcher

Most people have had the experience of having something they were doing "take off" and go much better than expected. Yet many assume such times are lucky accidents, that it is not possible to create or sustain such performance deliberately or without stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout.

The results from ten years of research by the workshop presenters demonstrate that these times of exceptional performance are not capricious. Each individual has a pattern of actions that produces his or her best results. Once people learn their personal high performance patterns, they can carry out activities in a way that fits them and produce much better results for the same effort over sustained periods of time.

This seminar takes participants through a process in which they identify their individual high performance patterns and learn to apply them to their life and work. Developed through years of work with successful managers, executives, professionals, and work teams, it offers an approach to sustainable high performance, a welcome alternative to the stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout that accompanies constantly forcing oneself to peak periods of high output.

Embodied Gestalt Practice: Training for Professionals

Edward Smith

Embodied gestalt practice is a way of personal growth which focuses on the embodiment of experience, the living out of that embodied experience, and the choice for change. This is applied existential phenomenology, and it is applied Taoism. Personhood is highly respected as the subtle and tender process of awareness unfolding in the here-and-now. Edward Smith has developed embodied gestalt practice from gestalt, Reichian and neo-Reichian work, and Eastern body-oriented growth methods. The format is experiential.

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive

Ayala Pines

When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. Unfortunately, more often than not, with the dampening effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, and it is not caused by major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfactions, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find their own romantic schemata and to rekindle the romantic images they shared at the beginning of their relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive in their relationships and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

A Basic Course in Healthy Eating

Andrew Weil

This workshop will cover principles of nutrition, including information about calories, cholesterol, protein, carbohydrates, and fat. How much protein do you really need? Can vegetarian food be totally nourishing and satisfying? Should you use olive oil or safflower oil, margarine or butter? Is pasta the perfect food? Do you need to drink milk, and where can you get your calcium if you don't?

These and other questions will be answered as participants prepare innovative dishes and meals that they will be able to duplicate at home. Group members will cook and eat together as they discuss aspects of diet and health, including vitamins and supplements, culinary and medicinal herbs and spices, and special diets for particular needs. The role of healthy eating as an aspect of preventive medicine will be stressed.

Andrew Weil draws on his experience as a physician, botanist, food lover, and cook in leading this workshop, as well as his association with Canyon Ranch Spa in Tucson, Arizona, where he directs the Natural Healing Program. This is an opportunity for participants to learn facts and methods not easy to find elsewhere while having fun, being creative, and doing something good for themselves in the bargain.

Non-Adversarial Child Care: The Continuum Concept in Practice

Jean Liedloff

For parents, parents-to-be, and baby and child care professionals, this seminar will examine the true meaning of sociality as an innate characteristic of homo sapiens. Drawing upon her years of living with Stone Age Indians in South America's jungles, the leader propounds an approach neither punitive nor permissive that takes into account the generally unrecognized expectations and abilities inherent in our young.

Why do babies and children so often seek attention they don't need? Why do we see tots in underdeveloped countries and cultures following their parents and helping them with chores so early, while ours are frequently chased and tended, opposed, tolerated, and socialized for nerve-wracking, guilt-laden, unappreciated decades of drudgery and sacrifice ending in one degree or another of alienation?

As professor Robert Aldrich of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development said, "Basic things about human nature we forget or ignore at our peril."

What relationship does this energy have to one's functioning? To character structure? To the phenomenon of the aura? To the manifestation of the divine spirit?

The Sacred Actor: the Shaman Within

Elisa Lodge

Marvel at the ingenuity in which divinity hides itself in order to find itself.—Alan Watts

The wisdom we seek for personal healing and transformation arises largely from a sense of self-worth and trust. The "shaman within" is a sacred actor who embraces and recreates the roles and masks that have covered the beauty and truth of our essential nature. This player of players, having no set identity, is no longer "lost in the part," but is able to respond authentically; he or she is a wounded healer who can transform old wounds into resources for greater empathy and creative action.

This group will create a shamanic theater, journeying within to tap elemental sources of power and expression not always accessible to ordinary consciousness. Participants will use performance art, ritual, masks, sound, movement, meditation, and trance dancing to reclaim that which has been lost.

The Modern Warrior: LET in Action

George Leonard

A man or woman with outward courage dares to die;

A man or woman with inward courage dares to live.

—Lao Tzu

The Modern Warrior is not one who goes to war but rather one who exhibits integrity in every aspect of living, one who seeks to attain control then act with abandon. For the Modern Warrior, life is vivid, immediate, and joyful. He or she lives each day to the full, and is fulfilled in serving others. This workshop is based on the premise that to achieve peace in the world and harmony in daily life, it might well be necessary for men and women to reown the warrior ideal.

Through the centering and movement exercises of LET (Leonard Energy Training) as well as through various new games, participants will be invited to get in touch with their own unacknowledged powers, and thus to discover the hidden warrior within. Guidance will be offered on how to apply the warrior ideal to daily life. This workshop will not be physically strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

A Week with Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)

Laura DeNuccio writes: "This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

"The emphasis of this workshop will be on learning how to embody this new awareness, bridging one's personal growth and inner experience with outer involvement in the world. Inquiry will be made into the beliefs and assumptions that shape somatic reality, with special attention given to personal issues. The group will draw from breath, movement, sound, gestalt practice, imagery, and meditation to enliven, balance, and transform energy blocks and patterns in the body. For some individuals, unconscious thoughts and feelings that reside in the body tissue may come to life, which can then be consciously integrated into a new level of wholeness and well-being—physically, mentally, sexually, and spiritually.

"Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of the body. This will be encouraged through music, dance, creative use of the Spoken Word, and ritual. Practices that cultivate sensitivity, compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others will be included. In this way, the group can co-create an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore the ever-unfolding adventure of spirit and discover a deepened sense of the interconnectedness that is inherent in all life-forms."

Transitions

Elliot Waker Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg-Thomson

Disorganization is a natural part of transition and facilitates reorganization. People are almost constantly in a state of transition—whether it be getting married, beginning a new career, becoming a parent, letting go of a relationship, or moving on to the next stage in the life cycle. These changes can be exciting and, at the same time, can evoke a loss of internal balance. The result can be loss of self-esteem, confusion about one's identity, and doubts about one's perceptions. New feelings and ideas are fragile during these periods of transition and require special nurturance.

The goal of this workshop is to gain perspective on the process of making transitions. Through guided fantasies, self-exploration, and didactic presentations, participants may develop ways of enhancing their understanding of themselves and increasing their overall effectiveness.

Intermediate Craniosacral Workshop

Hugh Milne

This workshop provides a deeper and broader understanding of craniosacral work to those who have completed an introductory class. It offers several models for understanding how the head, spine, and pelvis act as an intimately reciprocal unit throughout life, and how subtle alterations of osseous rhythm or dural tension can produce remarkable effects on the function of the body/mind/spirit.

Participants will expand their range of technical cranial expertise and refine the arts of both deductive and intuitive diagnosis. The sacro-iliac, spheno-basilar, and tempero-mandibular joints will be examined in detail. The class will also include a review of the reciprocal tension membrane system and an analysis of known brain and chord function as related to craniosacral work.

The relationship between meditation, perception, and the still point will be explored as a foundation, with emphasis placed on the daily practice of demonstrated techniques so that a high standard of individual consciousness in this work can be attained.

Talking to Russians

Robert Bathurst & Brit Broch Bathurst

When Americans are too nice, Russians become suspicious; if a business contract is too elaborate, Russians assume deception. Peace between the superpowers is the problem and communication is the key, but it is very difficult to say what you mean cross-culturally.

This is a workshop for citizen diplomats and those concerned with constructive approaches to this cross-cultural problem. Participants will talk with Russians, practice bargaining and negotiating for peace, learn about hidden language and cultural differences. In doing so, they will become more aware of unconscious values and more effective, perhaps, in finding strategies for peace.

Singing Gestalt

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about feeling and expressing.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. Video feedback may be incorporated. But the workshop is really about you—singing.

A Weekend Workshop for Couples

Daniel Brown & Marushka Glissen

This workshop is for couples who want to improve their communication skills and increase their understanding of each other. Ways for resolving conflict and practical methods for becoming self-assertive and self-transcending in a partnership will be taught. Some of the work will address how the family-of-origin and past conditioning contribute to the bonding as well as the conflicts. Time will also be spent on how to find satisfaction, mutual support, relaxation, solitude, and play in day-to-day living as partners. Helping couples discover the wider purpose of being together through a sharing of values, love, and perhaps a spiritual vision will be emphasized.

Experiencing Aikido

Annie Styron Leonard

To experience aikido is to feel both energized and relaxed, to be stronger and at the same time more gentle. To learn this sophisticated martial art takes many years, but some of its mysterious powers can be sampled over the course of this weekend.

Participants will practice enhancing the flow of vital energy through and around the body, relaxing under pressure, moving from the hara, or center, and extending inner force. They will be introduced to and have the chance to practice a few basic aikido moves and learn alternative, nonaggressive ways of dealing with attacks. This weekend is designed for those who simply wish to get in touch with and use their own latent powers as well as those who are planning to begin practicing a martial art.

Self-Acceptance: The Freedom to Be

David Schiffman

Each of us has unique capacities to feel and express tenderness and strength, anger and affection, autonomy and needfulness, as well as compassion, humor, and wisdom. The degree to which we allow the fullness and vibrance of each of these qualities determines how alive and gratified we are.

In this workshop, participants will focus on how they diminish or affirm these essential qualities as they are expressed through their bodies, sexuality, creativity, relationship to power, friendships, and expectations. In an atmosphere of tenderness and support, participants will clarify the nature of who they are and how they can best take care of themselves, both at Esalen and on returning home. The workshop will be grounded in gestalt, group process, guided fantasy, massage, and bioenergetics.

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will be to enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder of meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and movement are one."

Wellness and Well-Being

Daniel Brown & Marushka Glissen

Current understanding of what contributes to physical wellness and psychological well-being will be the focus of this workshop. Participants will look at how illness develops, how it can be prevented, and how to work toward optimal physical health (wellness). They will also consider how psychological problems develop and how to promote optimal psychological health (well-being).

The following topics will be explored: stress (life change, daily hassles, environmental stress); thinking, attitude, and outlook on life; intimate relationships and social networks; personality; patterns of emotional expression; self and self-esteem; daily routines, healthy and unhealthy habits, and other lifestyle issues. The week will blend didactic presentations reviewing scientific research in behavioral medicine and psychoneuroimmunology with experiential sessions in role playing, guided imagery, visualizations, and meditation.

Advanced Enneagram Intensive

Helen Palmer

The enneagram is an ancient psychological typology that describes nine personality types and their interrelationships. Each type is defined by a chief mental and emotional preoccupation to which attention habitually returns. The types correlate well with the current categories of psychological practice, but can open us to the fact that the repeating preoccupations of heart and mind that we in the West tend to dismiss as merely neurotic can also be used as access points into states of awareness like empathy, omniscience, and love.

Beginning with a review of the nine types, this workshop will focus on advanced material that can best be understood through oral teaching methods. These include learning to recognize type by listening to the differences in people's stories, by learning to ask key questions, and by paying attention to one's own internal impressions when in the presence of the different types.

This program is for those who are already familiar with the nine personality types and who wish to broaden their understanding of the system. It is intended for anyone who is interested in: recognizing ways in which the nine types relate to each other in intimate partnership and in work-related settings; determining strategies for working with the types; developing competency with the patterns of attention that support each type; gaining an understanding of the higher human abilities that can develop from working with the issues of type. This intensive can also be applied toward requirements for the enneagram teacher training program.

Zen Practice in a Work and Social Action Environment

Bernard Glassman-sensei & Helen Yuho Glassman

The dharma is abundantly inherent in each person. It is not manifested without practice; it is not attained without realization.—Dogen Zenji, Japanese Zen master (d. 1252)

Practice in the everyday life of giving and receiving will be the heart of this beginning meditation class. There will be talks on the five traditional approaches to Zen practice; on practice and enlightenment; on faith, doubt, and determination; on cause and effect. The leaders will talk about Zen as it is practiced in everyday work at the Greyston Bakery and in social action at the Greyston Family Inn, both of which are part of the Greyston Community Network created by the Zen Community of New York in Yonkers. Participants' questions and concerns will be an important part of the program.

Generativity

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

Erik Erikson called the crucial issue of maturity "generativity versus stagnation." Generativity erupts at midlife, when certain people feel the wish to make beauty, not just money. The urge to immortality, to make a body of work, arises when a healthy individual begins to measure time remaining rather than time passed.

Given enough freedom from neurotic problems to function more or less effectively in love and work, what regularly emerges is a generative impulse—the urge to give of oneself. No longer desperately self-preoccupied, we wake up to ourselves and our world. Theory has it that there is energy left over that was previously bound up with inner conflicts. When the brittle false self no longer needs full-time vindication, and when the sense of being over the hill has its impact, the real self seeks expression. Mortal happiness begins to look around for something to create.

This workshop is designed, not for the Ruskins and Tolstoys, the Schweitzers and Dickinsons, whose lives were oriented early toward creative work, but to contemporary men and women who have awakened only in midlife to the desire to contribute. "Someday the sluice gates will open!" cried E.M. Forster in Howard's End. For each person who comes into psychological maturity without a lifetime of committed expressivity, the heartfelt reply is, "Yes, but how?"

But how? Life habits, patterns of relationship, and self-perceptions that developed without the generative urge often act as hindrances. We have something to express but don't know exactly what it is nor, often, by what means to bring it forth. Using discussion, interaction, meditation, and experiential exercises, participants will grapple with the issues they confront when, dissatisfied with the level of meaning in their lives, they feel they must make a creative contribution.

Couples' Workshop

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead, they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

Dream Drawing

Rachael Dutton

Under the archetypes, below the threshold of myth, are simple, sensory fragments of experience common to both primal and personal memory: the rolling motion of a hip joint as weight is shifted from one leg to another, the coolness of shadow on skin, the heat of day radiating from earth underfoot at twilight. These are details out of which symbols in dreams are constructed. They give the images value, an emotional valence that enables the dreamer to touch and respond to the mystery beyond.

Workshop participants will draw images from their dreams, using rhythms of line, color, and shape as vital, enlivening details that communicate with the non-verbal roots of dreaming, working with images in such a way that the mystery is enhanced, not erased, by giving it form. Dream Drawing is open to experienced and occasional dreamers, experienced and occasional drawers. Bring one tablet large-size drawing paper, one tablet similar-size tracing paper, soft pencils, erasers, oil pastels, and dreams.

The Art of Saying Goodbye

Paul Rebillot

The loss of a loved one, whether through death or separation, is a huge rent in the fabric of one's life. It is difficult to get on with other relationships until that rent is attended to. The pain of the loss needs to be released, and the difficulty of day-to-day existence after the loss needs to be acknowledged.

To learn something from suffering makes it worthwhile; to create something makes it bearable. Using open seat and emotional release, workshop participants will deal with their losses—not just in anguish, not only in pain—but artistically, musically, creatively. They will seek to give birth to new life, to create an artwork, a ritual both of letting go and of gathering within themselves the strength and the love which they have felt from those who have gone.

This workshop gives participants the opportunity to say goodbye, to experience the tears, the grief, and the potential for emotional renewal, and most importantly, to reconnect with the source of their own lives.

An Introduction to Classical Homeopathy

Ananda Zaren

The basic principles, theory, and practice of classical homeopathy will be introduced in this short course. Some common homeopathic remedy pictures useful in home and first aid situations will be delineated.

Ananda Zaren recently completed a research project in an allopathic hospital in Germany where she homeopathically treated 700 OB/GYN cases, with a 92% success rate. Traditional allopathic tests and examinations were documented before and after the remedies were given, and each homeopathic session was videotaped. A few of the most dramatic cases will be shown this weekend so participants can see homeopathy in action and the profound changes that occur as a result of accurate prescribing.

The Subtle Self in Motion

Judy Blackstone

This workshop offers subtle, concentrated work to help participants truly inhabit their bodies. Mind-breath-body exercises will be used to awaken consciousness of the inner depths of the body, to attune to the emotional underpinnings of bodily tensions, and to release the bound energy of old pain.

The personal themes which emerge from this work will be explored verbally in a supportive group setting and in a free movement class for the expression of non-verbal experience. There will be daily meditation practice as well as sound and visualization exercises for penetrating to the core of the body-mind, to a level of unified awareness. Through this unbroken contact with the self, participants may discover the joy, health, and spontaneity of their essential nature. This workshop will not be physically taxing; the emphasis will be on introspective work.

Reflections of Self: A Reichian/Gestalt Workshop

Jessica Moore Britt

This will be an introduction to intensive intrapsychic inquiry using Reichian breath work and gestalt practice. Reichian breath work utilizes breath and sound to energize and deepen the process of self-awareness by softening the body's patterns of physical tension and emotional holding. Gestalt practice is an awareness approach focusing on physical sensation, image, thought, and emotion. By emphasizing a person's experience in the present moment, gestalt moves toward developing a more conscious sense of self. In a supportive group atmosphere, participants will have the opportunity to explore thoughts and feelings formed by past experiences. With this exploration, the possibility is opened to respond in the present.

Magnetic Fields and Human Behavior

Buryl Payne

This workshop will introduce methods for measuring the effects of artificial magnetic fields of low frequency and amplitude on the body. Using an instrument designed by the leader, participants will learn how to "read" the endocrine system. By applying magnetic fields, they will determine if a gland or organ is hypo- or hyperactive and, using the same instrument, correct any imbalances. They will also measure adverse and beneficial magnetic influences in their lives by means of a device which shows the presence of magnetic disturbances on one's personal energy field.

"It matters to me"

Joan Buresch

C.G. Jung spoke often about the importance of giving one's inner world a conscious form. This requires time and energy and seems imbedded in the common everyday phrase, "It matters to me." This will be a week for exploring this idea, to see what is meant by matter, what is meant by the immaterial, and how the two work together in the human ecology of the body/mind unity.

Gentle experiments in thinking, imagining, feeling, and action will help participants see how they might give fuller form to their inner world, and how they are already doing just that. Story and image, relaxation, and movement will be used to build personal awareness.

Overcoming Overeating

Jane Hirschmann

Compulsive eating is an understandable response to a variety of internal and external difficulties. Most approaches to the problem suggest that people learn to control their desire to eat. This seminar presents a radical new way to understand and work with compulsive eating. It will explain the pitfalls of the diet/binge cycle and offer a solution to the problem, which requires acceptance of its tenacity, an understanding of its dynamics, and a reeducation in the process of eating in response to physiological hunger. Didactic material will be presented, with time for discussion of its personal and professional use. This seminar is suitable for both the lay public and professionals.

Sensing Our Way of Life

Judyth Weaver

In our busy lives we do so much—but how do we do it? Are we fully aware of our actions and the consequences of what we do? Are our actions as beneficial to ourselves as they could be? Could our lives be easier or more energetically economical? What are we doing to/with ourselves, and how does that affect us and others, our health, our longevity, our relationships, work, well-being?

This workshop encourages participants to "tune in" and become more aware of how they live on many levels. The work is experiential; through awareness of breath, self, and each other, and by focusing on everyday activities such as walking, sitting, and standing, participants develop a fuller sense of mindfulness. This direct study of one's experience provides a practice ground for change and may suggest how to go about it. Such awareness of personal needs, desires, and hopes can increase one's chances for becoming a fuller, more realized, and healthier human being.

Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming

Stephen LaBerge

People do not usually realize they have been dreaming until after they have awakened. However, a fascinating exception, called lucid dreaming, sometimes occurs in which dreamers become aware that they are dreaming while still in the dream. Lucid dreamers are fully aware that the world they are experiencing is a mental creation; as a result, they can deliberately influence the course of their dreams; they can do things that would be impossible in waking life.

For most individuals, lucid dreams are as rare as the waking peak experiences to which they are analogous. This need not be so, and workshop participants will be shown how to develop the skill of lucid dreaming. They will be exposed to a variety of uses of lucid dreaming, including self-exploration, creative problem-solving, healing, adventure, and perhaps most important, a way of self-integration leading to the transpersonal realms. They will also discuss the latest scientific research on the topic.

The scope of the workshop will extend beyond the dream state to discussions and experiential demonstrations of the nature of consciousness and how individuals construct their perceptual worlds. This workshop is intended for avid dreamers and people seriously interested in self-exploration and the development of consciousness.

The Hakomi Method

Ron Kurtz

Hakomi is a body-centered practice based on the principles of mindfulness, unity, organicity, non-violence, and body-mind holism. Hakomi incorporates non-doing as a major methodological principle and trusts in every individual's inner wisdom and power for self-healing. Using the body as a rich source of information about the unconscious mind, hakomi can assist people in turning inward to those special states of consciousness where change takes place, to explore core beliefs which determine the quality of experience.

Hakomi work embraces the body-mind unity, supports the client's resistance, and encourages respect for and awareness of inner processes. This can be used by counselors, health practitioners, educators, body workers, and anyone invested in personal growth. This workshop also serves as a prerequisite for the formal hakomi certification process.

Five-Day Lomi Intensive

Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff

In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality. This loss fosters suffering.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one's authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work.

Myers-Briggs Type Indicator: A Tool for Personal and Organizational Transformation

Maggie Seeley & Mark Lipton

Differences in personal preference create excitement, attraction, and synergy. They can also be the source of great tension and misunderstanding between friends, lovers, colleagues, and family members. Understanding differences can transform these relationships.

Based on Carl Jung's observations of personality and behavior, the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator is a simple, accurate indicator of personal preference in the areas of:

- Focus of attention (extraversion/introversion)
- Information collection (sensing/intuition)
- Processing of data (thinking/feeling)
- Decision-making (judgment/perception)

Workshop participants will use the Myers-Briggs to become more aware of their own needs and preferences, thereby gaining a fuller appreciation of themselves. Their focus will then shift to relationships with others. The course will mix theory, practice, type-watching, and field work. By mid-week, participants will choose an area of concentration with the MBTI such as counseling, management, relationships, teaching, marketing, spiritual development.

This workshop will help soothe and heal the inner self by directing energy into sound-making, rhythmic grooving, chant-shouting, poem- and sculpture-designing, group productions, breath perception, meditation, smiling, clowning, chamber music inspiration, instrument-inventing, and humor.

Participants are asked to bring instruments that they want to learn to play or that they can play now. Percussion instruments will be provided. The voice will be, of course, the center of the entire process: where it is, how it is, what to do with it.

Conscious Femininity: Mother, Virgin, Crone A Workshop for Men and Women

Marion Woodman

This seminar will differentiate three archetypes of femininity as they are evolving in the consciousness of women and men: 1) the conscious mother, interested in taking care of self, others, and the planet; 2) the virgin, the maturing woman who evolves out of the ground of the mother; and 3) the crone, the detached, wise old woman.

A healing feminine awareness is struggling to emerge not only in the individual psyche, but in the collective as well. In dreams, a powerful feminine figure repeatedly demands the attention of the ego, attempting to guide consciousness toward new values that are releasing, frightening, and ruthlessly honest. Such values evoke somatic and psychic responses that are experienced personally as upheavals in traditional attitudes and collectively as a new cultural ethos. It is the new feminine consciousness that is able to rescue and heal the abandoned soul.

The weekend will consist of lectures, small group discussions, and gentle body work and dance.

Exploring the Roots of One's Personal Culture

Robert Greenway

The roots of one's culture are intertwined with "ultimate being," remaining largely hidden except as they appear in dreams, reverie, intuition, spontaneous behavior, or in addictions, neuroses, etc. If we are to fundamentally change what appears to be a destructive culture, we must uncover personal cultural roots. This workshop will facilitate participants' explorations via work in diads and small groups, storytelling, myths, dreams, symbols, psychodrama, poetry.

Dream Discovery

Joyce Frazee

Each night the Self disappears below the surface of the psyche, and what is remembered from the journey is a dream. In this workshop, participants will use their dreams for emotional and spiritual growth and to connect with alienated parts of the Self. They will have the opportunity to explore the multidimensional aspects of a single dream, noticing the most immediate, pressing, unfinished business of their lives, and uncover personal symbols.

Since many people forget dreams, exercises in dream recall will be offered. By keeping a dream journal, some people recognize that dreams come in series, presenting and exploring a continuing theme. Participants will draw dream mandalas to be used for insight and healing. Feelings will be explored using gestalt and bioenergetics. Methods of dream control and lucid dreaming will be discussed.

Performance Art Workshop

Dianne Laurence

Participants in this workshop will create performance pieces which will be presented at the end of the week to an invited audience. They will focus on physical presence and command of space, voice control, emotional flexibility, ease of expression, sensitivity to the audience, and development of a creative relationship to the subconscious.

The class will be limited to 10 people, with each performance taking 10-15 minutes. Half will be presented during daylight hours, the other half in the evening. Participants are encouraged to bring 5 items with them to incorporate into their work.

Risk-taking and trust can stimulate self-discovery and expression. Performance can be exciting and magical as subconscious impulses make synchronistic connections with materials and environment. We find that we can begin with little else but ourselves and make something interesting and meaningful happen.

To make effective, creative choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set—the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressures of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

In this week, participants will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and bouyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery.

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

This workshop is open to anyone interested in learning to recognize, trust, and use their psi abilities. The leaders will use exercises designed to aid participants in recognizing their perceptive styles and trusting the intuitive input they normally receive. Anne Armstrong will use her tracking abilities, acquired from over twenty years in this field, to assist participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

One of the basic objectives of the workshop is to demystify the intuitive/psychic process and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives—personal, professional, and spiritual. The workshop will include personal psychic scans and practice on selected cases.

Developing Crazy Wisdom and the Comic Perspective

Wes "Scoop" Nisker & Paul Krassner

This workshop will explore the humorous side of the tragicomedy of life, emphasizing the development and expression of the crazy wisdom in each of us. Examining traditional uses of humor, from old Sufi tales, Zen Haiku, and coyote trickster stories, to audio and videotapes of the modern satirists and comedians including Charlie Chaplin, Lenny Bruce, Laurel and Hardy, and Woody Allen, the class will aim to help participants learn not necessarily how to be funny, but how to see funny.

The group will look at humor in the news, the lighter side of the search for enlightenment, and the crazy wisdom approach to life and death. Class work will include theater and writing exercises aimed at developing a sense of humor and finding skillful ways to use the comic perspective to ease the difficult moments in life.

Sight/Insight: A Photographic Journey

Daniel Bianchetta & Cynthia Johnson Bianchetta

Like our dreams, photographic images can provide a rich resource for unearthing our true Self. With them, we may uncover and explore our personal culture and evolution. What we produce through visual imagery often reflects our innermost thoughts, how we view the world, how we manifest what we envision for our lives.

Through quiet meditative contact with our deeper Self, we are able to ask what these images may be revealing to us. And often as a result of this quiet contacting of insight, we begin the process of "listening through our eyes." Thus by "allowing the eyes to see" rather than "looking at," we invite observations and glimpses into the realm of true seeing, the power of insight.

In this workshop, movement, intuition, energy awareness, gestalt, and play will be the tools for exploring new awareness and experiences of our inner and outer imagery. It is open to anyone and is not about photographic technique. Some camera knowledge is helpful. Please bring a 35mm camera, black and white 35mm film, a journal, and your photographs. Some processing of film may be provided following a field exploration.

The Feldenkrais® Method and Cortical Re-education

Harriet Goslins & Mark Bender

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain/muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk of injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for the average person who feels chronically tired and stressed and wants to learn how to take better care of his/her neck, shoulders, and back, to improve his/her posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provider approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

The Enneagram and Intuition

Helen Palmer

Helen Palmer writes: "For the past several years I have been teaching people ways in which they can develop their intuition as a reliable source of information. It has become increasingly clear that many of us are intuitively sensitive to issues that, as children, we were attracted to or needed to defend ourselves against. For example, a loved child may develop the ability to merge with the wishes of others, and so become highly intuitive about the means of gaining their approval. Or, children who were systematically intimidated may become precognitively sensitized to anger or negativity in others. These psychic abilities, centered around the survival issues of childhood, become an integral part of the adult personality, but the grown up child is usually not conscious of operating from anything other than intellectual information.

"The enneagram is an ancient Sufi system that acts as a bridge between intellect and intuition. It has been taught for generations in the oral tradition, and in its present form is set in the language of psychology to identify nine personality types and their interrelationships. Each type has a unique way of looking at the world, and this viewpoint is reflected in a set of habitual thoughts and emotions. The viewpoint of a type can also be expressed through a particular intuitive style.

"In this workshop, participants will see and hear groups of the same type on video and on live panels within the class. By observing each of the nine types in action, they can identify their own type within the system, learn about the issues that preoccupy each of the nine, and discover the intuitive way in which each type senses information that supports its private concerns.

"The enneagram workshop may be especially useful to those who are working to understand their own psychological issues, or who find themselves in a situation that demands reliable access to intuition."

Helen Palmer also leads an advanced enneagram workshop. Please see February 18-23 and June 24-29 for more information.

Sessions will include sitting meditation, chanting, a thorough physical warm-up, opening the voice, and exercises designed to integrate sound and movement. Participants will also have opportunities for developing technical performance skills, but the focus of the week will be improvisational expression of impulses, feelings, and ideas as they arise moment-to-moment.

Hypnosis, Trance, and Body Work

David Robinette & Lila Daniels Klapman

The body reflects the unconscious mind in subtle and dynamic ways, from the communication revealed in body language to the meaningful expression of symptoms. In this course, participants will employ the principles of hypnosis to bridge verbal communication with body work. They will explore trance induction, Ericksonian hypnosis, the creative use of suggestion, metaphor, and story. Simple body work will be used for opening and working with energy centers, physical symptoms, and bodily processes.

The focus will be to access and release unconscious patterns that shape thoughts and feelings. The work will be done in an atmosphere of gentle caring and humor, incorporating music, dance, and games. Participants of all levels are welcome.

Self-Healing: Myth and the Body

Sam Keen

The myths and value systems we unconsciously adopt from our families and from the economic, political, and religious cultures into which we are born shape both our minds and our bodies. Our scripts, stories, life-styles predispose us to treat our bodies in certain ways and therefore to contract certain diseases. An urban, competitive way of life, for instance, leads predictably to a high incidence of heart attacks, cancer, respiratory infections, and diabetes. By discovering somatic aspects of our myths, the way they shape our bodies, form our character armor, dis-ease us, we can begin to recover the power to heal ourselves. Topics posed to participants include:

- Personal history. What disease scripts did you get from your family? What did you learn about the body, about sensuality and sexuality from your parents?
- Social and political myths. What religious, economic, and cultural myths are informing your life- and death-styles? What price do you pay in health and happiness for living by the myth of competition, success, progress?
- Somatic cryptology. How do you decipher the messages of your pain and disease?
- The art and methods of self-healing. How do you use memory, visualization, dreams, meditation, touch, to change your disease scripts and enter into a more healing relationship with yourself?
- Healing and the body-politic. How much disease is a cry of loneliness and despair? What are the unheard voices that speak to us out of violence? How do we recover the communion that is necessary to health?

Courage, Risk, and Self-Acceptance

Phyllis Shankman

Although it is understood that growth and change require courage and the willingness to risk, many of us find ourselves unable or unwilling to make a move until we feel certain of the outcome. And while we hesitate, we often miss out on enjoyable or important opportunities. Courage requires a blend of self-acceptance, heart, boldness of spirit, a sense of humor, and the willingness to trust oneself and the goodwill of others.

This workshop offers participants a supportive environment in which to experience themselves as courageous and able to successfully take risks. Group activities will include gestalt, discussion, massage, meditation, art imagery exercises, dance, and play.

Golf in the Kingdom . . . an exploration of the inner game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

We'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart.—Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It may be experienced not simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

In these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two of the days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Non-Ericksonian Advanced Hypnosis for Professionals

Randall Churchill

Ericksonian hypnosis and neurolinguistic programming have been highly influential in many hypnosis circles for nearly two decades. But there are various advanced contemporary forms of hypnosis besides those developed by Erickson. This program is for experienced Ericksonian and non-Ericksonian practitioners who want to expand and develop their options; each day will include lectures, demonstrations, and practice in advanced modalities.

Tapping into strong emotions during hypnosis often creates splendid opportunities for movement. Participants will explore which situations are best to encourage abreaction and, when appropriate, how to transcend resistance to it. They will work with comprehensive strategies, including the integration of the affect bridge, gestalt, transactional analysis, body work, inner child processes, hypno-analysis, reeducation, inner support systems, and transpersonal hypnosis. Other topics include ideomotor methods and advanced systematic desensitization for overcoming phobias. Practice of rapid induction and deepening methods, including skillful use of authoritarian styles, will give participants a greater range in assisting clients enter and respond to hypnosis.

So as not to miss the forest for the trees . . . cultivating compassion, rapport, and mental expectancy are more important than any methodology and will underlie the work of this week.

Family Regeneration: Moving Beyond the Family Trance

Jane Parsons-Fein

Anything you do in a conscious state, you can do better in a trance state.—Milton Erickson

Authentic change can only take place on unconscious levels.—Virginia Satir

Most people invariably recreate in their work and relationships the emotional environment they experienced as children. They operate out of the parental inductions they received and the assumptions they made consciously, which have since become unconscious.

Through discussion, games, movement, self-observation, psychodrama, and communication stances, participants will identify common areas of communication breakdown (between parents, children, couples, friends). They will have the opportunity to reconnect with more natural, fulfilling, and loving ways of being together and generate new levels of change.

Creative Writing Brainstorming

Herbert Gold

From feeling to expression to communication, this workshop will carry participants into the possibilities of making literature. Exploring an experience different for everyone, yet shared by all, they will probe for the riches within.

Participants should bring typewriter, word processor, pen, soft pencil, or clay tablets and stylus to the meetings. A situation will be called forth—love, death, ambition, pride, fear, hatred, jealousy—and after preparation in the discussion, participants will write. Then they will read and rewrite each other's work. They may expect to go from truth to lying: from recollection to art.

What may develop is a sense of style and control as a part of the mastery of experience. Participants will practice the freedom of imagination by giving shape to it.

New Competences for an Age of Uncertainty

Donald Michael

Because we live with unprecedented levels of complexity and uncertainty, an abiding crucial challenge for each of us is learning how to be better learners. The old answers and questions are increasingly ineffective. Yet, conventional definitions of competence encourage each of us, and organizations, too, to avoid learning by denying or disguising uncertainty so that we appear to know what we are doing. The result is ever more stress, anxiety, and inadequate personal and organizational performance.

This seminar will introduce a set of interlocking skills or "new competences" necessary for making humane and effective decisions when uncertainty can provide the occasion for learning—in work places and in interpersonal and family situations. These skills include: acknowledging and specifying high levels of uncertainty, error embracing, being future-responsive, boundary spanning, interpersonal communication, and self-knowledge.

The approach will be both cognitive and experiential. Participants will have the opportunity to become more comfortable with the vulnerability that accompanies facing their uncertainties; to question the need to act over-cautiously out of fear of making a mistake; and to reexamine the incentives for those defensive posturings that make it so hard to act responsibly and compassionately. As a previous participant said, "This seminar is for those who are ready to move beyond the personal and want to effect change in public and private organizations."

Dance as an Ally in Healing Cancer

Anna Halprin & Rana Vassau

Since illness reflects the breaking down of the immune system, it makes sense to go to our deepest source, the body itself, to rebuild, renew, and rebirth to our natural state. This workshop emphasizes what participants can learn from paying attention to how they move, feel, and image.

Dance has been used as a healing art since the beginning of time, and Anna Halprin has bridged healing rituals of the past with those of today. As a result of having had cancer herself, she has pioneered an approach to dance called psycho-kinetic-visualization, which utilizes the feedback process between instinctive movement and deeply-buried feelings. Participants visualize their natural killer cells as vigorous and alert allies in the immune system, destroying the diseased cell. They then embody these visualizations and dramatize them through movement in their own creative dance-rituals. Guided movement meditations for relaxation and to enliven the life force are also used.

This workshop is designed for people with cancer, support persons, and health care professionals and is suitable for people of varying levels of physical capacity. There will be a slide show and videotape of case studies to illustrate ways this approach has been applied. For more information contact Tamalpa Institute, P.O. Psychology of Spiritual Essence: Introduction to Ridhwan Work

Hameed Ali & Ridhwan Work School Faculty

Ridhwan, translated from Arabic, means contentment. The Ridhwan Work School is dedicated to the development of the human essence. It uses primarily the Diamond Approach, a modern, psychological method used as a spiritual practice, to guide students to a precise understanding of their personal experience. By understanding one's discontent, longing, emptiness, and life situations, it becomes possible to realize the innate aspects of love, awareness, will, and joy. Such precision offers psychological clarity and ultimately leads to spiritual presence.

This workshop will use conceptual presentations, interpersonal exercises, meditation, and personal emotional work to activate the essential aspects of presence and resolve the psychological barriers against them. It is for individuals who have done a lot of emotional and growth work, and speaks to the longing of the heart for what will truly fulfill it. In such a short time, participants may only get a taste of this essence, but they can go a long way in terms of awakening their sleeping potential. Private sessions will be available for an additional fee.

Negotiating Career and Family: A Delicate Balance

Ayala Pines

Those people who are deeply involved in a highly demanding career face the danger of career burnout. Those who are deeply involved in a highly demanding relationship face the danger of relationship burnout. Negotiating between the two does not have to be more stressful than dealing with just one.

The goal of this workshop is to help individuals and couples better negotiate the demands of their lives so that, instead of being the cause of burnout, they contribute to personal and couple growth. Achieving balance between work and relationships not only leads to a richer and more satisfying life, it can also offer protection from over-involvement (and with it the danger of burnout) in either one of them.

This workshop is recommended for dual-career couples, for individuals juggling a career and a family, and for therapists working with such individuals and couples.

Can archaic values give meaning to the now apparently inevitable dissolution of our ages-long link to this green and watery world? How can we facilitate our departure from the cave of forgetting and our immersion into the real politic of membership in the galactic collectivity of mind? We will discuss who we are, where we came from, and where we are headed as a species. This seminar will explore a universe that is stranger than we can suppose.

The Hero's Journey

Paul Rebillot

Paul Rebillot writes: "Again and again in my work with people I have seen the suffering and confusion caused by our society's lack of significant rites of passage. Without shamans or ritual masters to guide them, modern women and men must find their own lonely and usually traumatic paths from one stage of life to another—whether it be a child's discovery that there is no Santa Claus, an adolescent's awkward approach to puberty, an adult's marriage or ending of one, or a change of career. Every such change requires a movement from one level of being to another.

"Seeing this need, I created a rite of passage universal enough to allow people to discover the pattern of change, whatever that change might be. That pattern is exemplified in the myth of the hero. The new stage of life that is to be reached calls forth a heroic action on the part of the person taking the journey. At the same time, as soon as a new goal begins to emerge, all of the resistance to that goal emerges as well. I call these two forces 'the hero' and 'the demon.' In order for the new state of being to be realized, these two forces must discover how to communicate with each other and how to work together. The old forms must fall away so that the new form can emerge.

"My purpose is to give people a chance to experience a rite of passage so that they can go into the changes in their lives with a sense of joy and greater context. My hope is that through this process people will awaken to their own creative genius and enter into the drama of their lives with imagination and delight."

Clinical Ground and Spiritual Depth

Stephen Schoen

The major symptoms of psychic pain—anxiety, depression, confusion, self-doubt—have a spiritual dimension. They speak of a smaller gestalt that we feel trapped in and must break out of, with a sense of danger akin to the fear of death, but still as the one way of life. This seminar will explore ideas of Lao Tzu, Buber, Bateson, and Krishnamurti and consider how they address the coming into a larger gestalt, a sacred world. For the theory and practice of psychotherapy, these writers make specific contributions to attitude and method. The seminar will be presented in lecture, experiential work, and discussion.

Weekend of May 18–20

A Weekend with Paul Rebillot

Paul Rebillot writes: "Within each of us there lives a demon—our own personal critic—whose greatest joy comes from criticizing, denigrating, and destroying every experience we have. We're either too early or too late, too old or too young, too fat or too thin, and when we fall in love, we're never good enough. This demon, who commands us to be who we aren't in order to satisfy someone we can never satisfy, is the demon that we will seek to exorcise during this workshop.

"Why not take the chance of looking inside ourselves and finding the completeness of who we are, instead of limiting ourselves with who we think we should be and who we hope we are not? When we find the truth about ourselves, our natural response is to want and to work for the best that we can be.

"People in the helping professions who have experienced this form have found it adaptable and useful in their own work."

Living an Authentic Life: Implications of Truthtelling

Jeffrey Masson & Daidie Donnelley

Jeffrey Masson's book The Assault on Truth has been described as a Watergate of the psyche. Accused of telling too much about the Freud Archives, of which he was a director, and of blowing the whistle on psychotherapy in his new book, Against Therapy, his activities brought him into conflict with the psychiatric establishment. His autobiography, The Making and Unmaking of a Psychoanalyst, will be published this Fall. Daidie Donnelley, a psychologist, is a partner in Berkeley's Chez Panisse restaurant and co-founder of the Daily Bread Project. Her interest in integrating personal and social truth has been a thread that has united her work in psychology, photography, film, and community organizing. They write:

"We live in an age where it has become increasingly risky to tell the truth, whether in a business deal, in politics, in the media, or in personal relationships. But it is also clear that unless we make a determined effort to seek out true information and true facts and present them truly, our personal lives, our emotional selves, and our entire planet may be doomed.

"This workshop will look at this issue in a wide variety of situations (politics, the media, writing, psychiatry), but will focus on truth in one's own autobiography. Is it possible to de-mythologize one's own life? Have you ever been in a situation where you agonized over whether to tell the truth? We will discuss these issues and attempt to reach conclusions that can help each of us have a more authentic relationship with other people, with the environment, and with other creatures. The goal is to get away from gurus, psychiatrists, professors, and bad lovers and move toward friends, oceans, and good food."

Luisah Teish & Wade Davis

This workshop will explain the relationship between ecology and spirituality in the traditions of the African diaspora. Areas covered will include West Africa, Brazil, Cuba, and Haiti. Participants will learn about folklore regarding the forces of nature, the spiritual-medicinal power of herbs, and ritual dances of African-derived traditions. The Buddha, the Goddess, and N.L.P.

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

The Buddha is a model for compassionate emptiness. The Goddess is a model for passionate involvement in form. Neuro-linguistic programming (N.L.P.) is a structure for understanding, modeling, and changing human behavior and consciousness. It can be used for leaving behind old baggage and focusing or polishing the filters of perception. Set in the context of Buddhist psychology and practice, N.L.P. offers the choice to utilize gracefully the core issues of life as ally and teacher.

This workshop combines the power of hypnosis and N.L.P. within the context of a spiritual journey. Participants will use Zen meditation, Taoist yoga, movement, and trance work to invoke the perfected states of the Buddha and the Goddess already within.

Presence: A Fluidity of Being

Elisa Lodge

Elisa Lodge writes: "Presence is a power that arises from a deep sense of self-worth and trust. It reflects a broadened vision and whole-hearted acceptance of the varied facets of being. It is a state of dynamic balance where there is no unnecessary strain of self-defeating awkwardness. One is at home in oneself and at ease with the world.

"During this week, participants can gain a deepened appreciation of the elements in themselves that contribute to this timeless state of fluidity and ease. They will have an opportunity to experiment and explore how their bodies' shapes and forms, emotional histories, and self-images are intimately intertwined. This growing awareness is the basic grounding from which the creative experience of presence can be known. Movement patterns, the ways we walk and breathe, also reveal how we inhibit or allow our personal power. As we become more comfortable with ourselves, we transform not only the way we might carry our head or make contact with another, but our whole way of being in the world.

"This work is based on an approach woven from gestalt, psychosynthesis, Rolf movement, and performance art. Video feedback will be used."

Sculpture: Inner and Outer Visions

Rachael Dutton

The seat of the soul is where the inner and outer worlds meet.—Novalis

Rachael Dutton writes: "My work is based on interactions of images from my dreams with the animism of materials such as branches, earth, and grasses. These materials function as collaborators, mediating between inner and outer worlds.

"Workshop participants will work individually with images gleaned from dreams, memory, or moments of presence, using low-tech methods of construction and the natural resources of the farm area at Esalen. Additive sculpture methods, such as bundling, tying, stacking, can be just as personal as imagery; ways of linking physical components mirror associative processes in the mind. Participants will explore a multi-dimensional awareness of self as process and self as internal landscape coming to meet external landscape, using natural materials and the raw beauty of the Big Sur coastline to embody their personal visions.

"The workshop is open to artists at all levels of experience. Bring sketchbook, scissors, string, rags, and a plastic bucket."

Somatics: Internal Mastery of Muscles and Emotions

Thomas Hanna

The founder of the journal Somatics will teach basic principles of somatic learning, central to which is controlling neuromuscular responses to emotional states. Uncontrolled emotional responses lead, eventually, to distortions of lower back, shoulders, and neck with, typically, chronic stiffness and soreness in these areas. Learning control of one's emotional response can lead to inner calmness as well as ease in muscular tone and body posture.

The Psychotherapist as Shaman: Methods for Madness

Joan Halifax

In many indigenous cultures across the world, the shaman has functioned as healer and therapist in the physical, psychological, intellectual, transpersonal, social, and environmental domains. During this weekend, anthropologist Joan Halifax will look into the traditions of shamanism for those practices and methods possibly relevant for use in contemporary psychotherapy. Included will be the function of art in personal, social, and environmental healing; the role of ritual in individual and community process; the use of entheogens in psychophysical transformation; and the relationship of the natural environment (as reality and metaphor) to the healing process. This program includes experiential practices, teachings, and discussion.

Finding Inspired Work in Mid-Life

Peller Marion

At 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people don't live to be 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them largely because their lives seem effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop, drawing from a conceptual base of adult development theory and models of aging, will explore these issues. Through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, What's my dissatisfaction? Who am I? What's my definition of success? the leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain a clarity, focus, and direction of one's life contributions. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

Opening the Feelings

Dale Cummings & Gena Mayer Sorensen

Participants will employ Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants. Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexuality intensify and merge.

Completion

Will Schutz

Incomplete actions, be they personal or social, result in many of humankind's troubles: emotional—replaying early stuck relations; physical—chronic tension from unfinished actions; health—blood poisoning from uneliminated waste products; aging—caused by incomplete events; ecology—waste disposal problems, especially nuclear; spiritual—karma, unfinished business; education—Montessori's insistence on putting toys away; sports—the concept of the killer instinct.

What are the resistances to completion? What must happen to a self-concept to propel it toward completing cycles? These and other questions will be explored via the following concepts: theory of energy cycles, life history completion, health through imagery.

Movement, Touch, and the Healing Process

Patrick Douce

This workshop will approach the concept of a free, effortless body through Moshe Feldenkrais' work in movement and touch. Balinese and other Indonesian systems of working with the human body's energy field will broaden the Feldenkrais work.

Participants will be introduced to the complexity and simplicity of the spinal column. They will use soft, conscious movement to increase their sensitivity for safe, hands-on explorations. Moving away from the notion of a straight, stiff, rod-like back, they will find that posture and overall flexibility of the spine improves.

This program is designed for both beginners and professionals interested in movement and touch. Individuals with chronic tension or stress, and those with lower back, neck, shoulder, or hip pain, may find alternatives through learning more about the human body's possibilities.

The Further Reaches of Human Energy

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

This workshop begins with a basic grounding in Leonard Energy Training (LET), in which problems can become opportunities, stress and pain can be transformed into gifts of energy, personal and social options can be multiplied, and the flow of vital energy enhanced. In addition to its practical applications, the workshop offers participants the possibility of experiencing their own latent powers of intuition and extraordinary sensing.

After their introduction to LET, participants move into experiments that push the limits of what are termed "normal" human capacities. Through such processes as scanning, tuning in to others' energy, focused surrender, and remote viewing, the group is given a chance to experience a crystalline state of intense aliveness without expectation and prejudgment. As George Leonard wrote in The Ultimate Athlete, "Simply by considering possibilities commonly ignored by our culture, we find ourselves in a far more fascinating universe. We discover adventures that do not require the burning of fuel or the rape of the planet: sensing the energy field of a friend or a tree, making connections that defy conventional space and time. . . . We realize, with the sorcerer, don Juan, that our world is awesome, mysterious, and unfathomable, and that our life is filled to the brim and altogether too short."

The Body is Spirit

Robert Hall

There is no difference between the bioenergetic streaming of daily body life and the divine spirit current or life force. We experience both as an on-going felt body sense. The human ego operates under the false assumption that it is somehow separate from that sense. So we spend our lives in constant negotiation and seeking: the so-called human condition. From this position, alienation is inevitable.

This workshop is designed to explore the possibility that we are that felt body sense, that spirit current, and we are constantly, by nature, in relationship to everyone and everything that exists. Hopefully, we'll laugh a lot, too. There will be time for gestalt, individual body work, meditation, and getting to know each other well in a short time.

Yoga: A Week of Learning and Rejuvenation

Ganga White & Tracey Rich

Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and which combines grace and flow with postures, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the art of enlightened living.

Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies. Through Jnana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.

Participants of all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at: White Lotus, 2500 San Marcos Pass, Santa Barbara, CA 93105; (805) 964-1944.

Rituals for Healing

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Laulis

Rituals give meaning, richness, and structure to life's passages. They are for communication and celebration, for solemnity and deep inner silence. They are a visible manifestation of common human experience. Most of all, rituals are ceremonies of healing.

During this workshop, participants will explore components of healing ritual and discuss why rituals work. Sounds and symbols of rituals from several cultures will be experienced. The group will create and participate in healing rites which incorporate ancient wisdom with the belief systems from modern medicine, science, and psychology. The focus of the ritual work will be the healing power of the imagination.

This program may be of interest to health professionals and others who are on a healing path—seeking harmony, balance, and wholeness.

Poetry as Food for a Full Life

Brother David Steindl-Rast

Poems are high-energy food for our inner and outer journeys through life. Some people have been nourished by this fare for a long time: for them, this workshop will be a time to delight in a festive meal. Others may have been estranged from poetry ever since their high school days: they are likely to be as surprised during this weekend as if they had discovered in their own house a room they had never entered.

Why does school spoil for many young people the taste for poetry? Why does Sunday School turn so many away from religion? These two phenomena are closely connected, but it is never too late to rediscover our heart's passion for meaning.

The Art of Receiving

Elliot Waker Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg-Thomson

This culture makes it difficult to receive gracefully. Many of us learn early in life to equate receiving with weakness, helplessness, and dependency. One source of difficulty originates from a deep-seated belief that we do not deserve the love, attention, praise, or affection that is offered. Another stems from a fear of being obligated by the other person's expectations. Our willingness to receive brings greater honesty to our desire to give to others. The openness to receiving allows us to fully experience our relationship with another person, opens our hearts to the love and compassion of others and, in times of crisis, enables us to reach out for help.

Participants in this workshop will examine the beliefs and expectations that created their internal blockages and will learn new ways of receiving wisely, gracefully, and with dignity.

Contemplation and Film

Francis Lu & Brother David Steindl-Rast

Film provides many of us with moments of genuine aesthetic enjoyment. Do we realize how close we are at those moments to contemplation in the traditional sense? In this workshop, Francis Lu and Brother David will help build bridges between realms of meditation and movie-making.

Participants will view a series of remarkable films and discuss key issues of film appreciation and of spirituality. A film festival of this kind needs no further justification; beyond it, however, the leaders hope to open for participants access to a deeper sense of the transpersonal in everyday life.

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for: people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably.

Healing, Meditation, and Dzogchen

Sogyal Rinpoche

In the stillness and presence of meditation we discover a pure awareness, beyond the ordinary thinking mind, and catch a glimpse of our true nature, something long lost to the busyness and turmoil of our lives. The core of meditation practice is the releasing of heart and mind in deep ease and relaxation, dissolving tensions, and connecting with that tremendous source of healing within. Health is a state where all aspects of body and mind are in balance. Through meditation practice, the mind's natural freedom begins to shine through whatever arises in everyday life, bringing us confidence and skillfulness in our action.

At the heart of the Buddha's teachings lie the ancient meditation practices of Dzogchen, taught by Sogyal Rinpoche, a master who is heir to the 2,500 years of wisdom of Buddha. This weekend he will talk about Dzogchen and the Buddhist perspective. Some meditation practice will be included.

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods to improve their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

CAROL-ANNE PIEPPONT

Climbing is an everyday activity at Gazebo.

Although this workshop will be of value to anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health-care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility—painlessly and immediately.

Accessing Creative Process

Dianne Laurence

This workshop is for artists and non-artists who are having trouble starting or developing creative work. Mistaken notions about oneself, fears of imperfection, a need for control, and a tendency to emphasize results are some of the obstacles to imagination. Creative vitality and the ability to express oneself effectively arise from being attentive to one's fascinations, accessing impulses beyond the confines of the intellect, developing a healthy, critical eye and ear, and becoming a risk-taker.

Creativity is not something that just a few gifted people possess, but a natural part of everyone's make-up. Skill, intellect, emotions, and imagination are the cornerstones of creativity. In this class, participants will use exercises in writing, acting, and painting to expand emotional vocabulary, develop imagination, encourage spontaneity, and instill confidence in the expression of their inner life. Pushing against limitations is essential to articulating the areas to be developed, so this is a hands-on, risk-taking class. Participants will be supported, encouraged, and given the opportunity to confront their walls and turn them into stepping stones.

Mountains and Waves: Movement in Wilderness

Susan Harper & Steven Harper

Mountains and Waves is an invitation to explore natural movements inspired within the human organism by participation in nature. We listen to impulses within and to impulses of wilderness until "inner" and "outer" disappear. As we surrender to the intelligence which creates life in all its varied forms, we find ourselves moving in unexpected ways. Our awareness expands. We feel a larger sense of Self and wilderness and the creative wholeness of a greater dance.

The summer solstice occurs during this week, and we will take special time to create a ceremony in honor and celebration of our longest day. Sessions will be both indoors and outdoors. Evenings, some day sessions, and most meals will be at Esalen. We will also take short day hikes in Big Sur's backcountry. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance.

Help for Adult Children of "Normal" Parents: The Continuum Concept

Jean Liedloff

Jean Liedloff has developed a set of principles that guides clients toward an understanding of the beliefs and expectations formed in baby- and childhood that chronically undermine their capacity to act from accurate, adult perception of Self and Other. In her years of living in the South American jungle with Stone Age Indians, Liedloff observed a norm of human well-being that offers a reliable paradigm of mental and emotional health that has been missing from our attempts to attain individual and social fulfillment. Her work with clients is based on principles extrapolated from these observations. Normalcy, as we know it, is viewed as a pathology and new (ancient) criteria suddenly make sense of many of our problems.

This workshop will present methods that can change a client's self-defeating beliefs, at his or her own optimum pace, which participants will experience from both the client's and guide's points of view. It is for professionals and non-professionals. Please see page 38 to arrange for child care at the Gazebo.

The Mystical Wellspring of Neo-Platonism

Terence McKenna & Michael Murphy

Few streams of mystical philosophy run as broadly or as deeply through the growth of Western civilization as does that of the Roman philosopher Plotinus and his students Proclus and Porphyry. These mystical followers of the Pythagorean Plato illumined the tumultuous world that anticipated the fall of Rome, and twelve hundred years later, during the birth pangs of the Renaissance, this same Neo-Platonism offered a visionary alternative to the dominant theology of Christianity. In our own times what we have called the "New Age" or "Archaic Revival" is often the wine of Neo-Platonism poured into new bottles. We will discuss Neo-Platonism in the light of modern ideas concerning evolution and the physical world. Come join two Irish enthusiasts for the mystical way; we will drink from a river of ancient insight that continues to flow from the Neo-Platonic reservoir of Western mystical yearning.

Childhood Sexual Abuse: A Healing

Jessica Moore Britt

To guard against the hurts, fears, and confusion that sexual invasion of a child's physical and psychic boundaries can create, the child often abandons the place of conflict—the body. This withdrawal, though protective in nature, slowly begins to separate the child from her/his essential nature. This may be reflected in tension patterns, numbness, and oversensitivity and may further the child's sense of alienation from the world and self.

During these seven days, participants will move gently toward reintegrating their bodies and feelings with self. They will use gestalt practice, Reichian breath work, movement, touch, and meditation to re-enter their private world of memories and feelings. They may gain a deeper understanding that the learned idea of self as bad, based on the sexual abuse, is not the essential truth of who they are. The focus will be on allowing the hurt, negative feelings and doubts to be acknowledged, felt, and used as energetic seeds for reawakening a positive sense of self. Through the supportive group atmosphere, participants may discover that it is safe once again to embody beauty, life, and love.

Emotional Healing: From Co-Dependence to Aliveness

Karen Paine-Gernée & Terry Hunt

Children who grow up in alcoholic, abusive, or otherwise unhealthy homes often develop certain disabilities which last through their lifetimes unless they are deliberately addressed, among them: an inordinate need to control, an over-developed sense of responsibility, fear of authority figures, inability to trust, difficulty having fun, compulsive behavior, fear of abandonment, and chronic lack of self-esteem.

Alcoholism is a disease of denial. ACAs tell themselves that it really wasn't so bad, and they learn not to feel what they cannot tolerate. As they deny pain, they screen out joy, and their adult lives are often filled with depression and loneliness. ACAs are often survivors, though, and most have emerged as successful-appearing adults. Yet they often spend so much energy managing and controlling work and relationships that they have little left for themselves.

A necessary part of recovery is moving from the state of being co-dependent in one's life toward a state of emotional sobriety. Through self-exploration, participants will have the opportunity to access, express, and release blocked emotions that they still carry from childhood and to tap the aliveness that was sacrificed when they buried their anger, fear, and grief. Points of focus for this workshop will include:

- Emotional Sobriety: Having a personal sense of balance and physical boundaries from which to find peace and a capacity for genuine sharing and pleasure.
- Pleasure/Addictions: Learning that true pleasure is a life-affirming non-addictive experience.
- Sexuality: Separating the unmet needs of the wounded child from adult intimate sexual relationships; learning basic tools for nurturing and sustaining healthy relationships.
- Boundaries: Looking at the tendency to alternate between fusing with another and then completely isolating oneself.
- Spirituality: Learning to have faith in the face of the horror experienced in childhood.
- Self-Esteem: Realizing that self-doubt is oftentimes based on old mental patterns, not on reality.
- Learning New Behaviors: Identifying and overcoming old ways of reacting.
- Looking Beyond the Label: Knowing when to stop calling oneself a co-dependent.

transformative process of consciousness. The course will cover:

- Psychology of the Self: Participants will work with early unfinished situations that interrupt their sense of well-being and interfere with their relationships in the present. Sexual implications of this work will be dealt with in body work and in lecture.
- Body Work (Integrative Body Approach): This will be theoretical and practical application, combining Integrative Body Practice, exercise, and massage.
- Transformative Process of Consciousness: As the inner journey progresses, one's figure/ground is shifted from "doing" and "having" to "being" and to one's relationship with the eternal. Participants will explore ways to integrate and sustain these new awarenesses in their everyday lives.

Certification in Clinical Hypnosis

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

This course will synthesize neurolinguistics and Ericksonian hypnosis, drawing heavily from the enneagram of character fixation. It satisfies the hypnosis coursework requirements for the M.F.C.C. and complies with the California state requirement for hypnosis certification.

While the use of hypnosis in habit control and symptom removal will be covered, a primary focus will be on hypnosis as a tool of spiritual emergence. Starting with the presupposition that we already live in trance and that the goal is waking up, the roots of personality structure and the filters of perception in the creation and transformation of reality will be carefully explored. Participants will have the opportunity to experience the power of trance to transform their lives, which will create a model for working with clients.

The structure of rapport, pacing and leading, and various hypnotic patterns of induction will be demonstrated and practiced along with a variety of clinical interventions, including reframing, change history, metaphors, and storytelling. There will be videotapes of Erickson and other well-known leaders in the field of hypnosis. Participants will have daily practice with each other and the opportunity to be videotaped doing a hypnotic induction. Daily zazen, Taoist yoga, and movement led by Antoinette Varner will also be a part of this program.

Upon completion of this course, participants who want to be certified must demonstrate a high level of professionalism as well as proficiency in technical skills to the satisfaction of the instructors before certification will be granted. After certification by the Institute for Advanced Hypnosis (testing and certification fee, $300) additional certifications are available from the American Council of Hypnotist Examiners ($125) and the Society of NeuroLinguistic Programming ($200).

Required reading: J. Haley, Uncommon Therapy (Norton); Grinder and Bandler, Trance-Formations (Real People Press), Frogs into Princes (Real People Press), and Reframing (Real People Press); Chogyam Trungpa, Shambhala (Shambhala); P.D. Massage Practitioner Certification Program

Esalen offers a California state-approved massage program. Upon completion of the two-month massage work study track (January 14-March 11; see page 41 for more information), or a four-week massage practitioner workshop (February 25-March 23), and after giving 30 additional massages elsewhere, graduates will receive their certificates. This program provides at least 130 hours of instruction, including anatomy, supplemented by study in body-mind disciplines such as yoga, gestalt awareness work, and movement, fulfilling the state requirement.

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring Project offers outreach, education, and referrals that extend Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent, service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring operates a global referral system, linking visitors to Esalen with body workers, counselors, and teachers from their home areas. There are ongoing programs at Esalen and a traveling workshop service in the U.S. and abroad. Instructors teach self-healing, Esalen body work, yoga, breath and body awareness, dance and centering movement, and meditation. Many instructors have experience in gestalt practice and movement continuum.

The Healthspring Library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, philosophy, yoga, nutrition, and organic gardening which may be borrowed by seminarians for a two-week period while at Esalen. Donations of books or periodicals are greatly appreciated.

Access to the referral system and the traveling workshop program is available by writing to Laurie Lioness Parizek at Esalen, c/o Healthspring.

Esalen Wilderness Programs Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered. To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, we require a deposit of $200. The balance of the fee is due 14 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited.

April 27-May 5
Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center
Steven Harper & Andrea Juhan

Nature can provide opportunities to stretch one's limits and explore one's inner wilderness. By living in a natural environment it is possible to expand one's sense of self and depth of being.

The group will spend a day and a night at Esalen, leaving the next morning to hike through the Ventana wilderness. Participants will travel "light," with instruction in minimum impact camping, ecology, geography, and cultural history of the area.

Wilderness will be a mirror and primary teacher as the group lives simply and in direct contact with nature. Participants will explore their inner world of dreams, feelings, and sensations as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice and group process. Taking inspiration from natural and native purification practices, they will create a time of cleansing and contemplation, culminating in a 24-hour period alone. The group will hike on to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center, deep in a rugged wilderness valley with natural hot springs, for their last night together. There, meditation instruction will be available for those who wish it.

Backpacking experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity. More information will be sent upon registration.

■ WORK STUDY PROGRAM

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in total immersion in the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically. Only rarely is it restful. Participants make a commitment to work 32 hours per week in such areas as gardening, landscaping, the farm, maintenance, kitchen, and cabins. Assignments to departments are made according to community labor needs. During the first month, assignments are made primarily in the kitchen and cabins. No participants will be accepted as work students in Gazebo or the office until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

Most evenings and one intensive weekend are spent together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, Reichian work, massage or body work, etc. Participants in the focused programs must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program.

Focused programs planned thus far for 1990 include:

December 17, 1989–January 14, 1990: Paula Sholachman Shaw offers an arena for risky, outrageous self-expression and creativity using acting, improvisation, and other tools and tricks of the theatrical trade.

January 14–March 11: Robert Helm and other practitioners will lead a two-month program in body work, massage, movement, and self-care. For more information see Massage Practitioner Certification Program, Special Programs, page 38. The cost of this program is $1000 the first month, $950 the second month.

March 11–April 8: Mary (Devarani) Goldenson's program of letting go and moving on will employ Reichian methods, Radix[8], dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

April 8–May 6: David Streeter will focus on the art and discipline of contemplation, combining yoga, gestalt, and meditation.

May 6–June 3: Julie Bowden's program for adult children of alcoholics and trauma will provide time to look back, grieve, and go on, drawing from guided imagery, age regression, and other approaches.

June 3–July 1: New concepts in gestalt practice will be incorporated in Anne Nechama Simkin's program. Massage will also be offered.

July 1–29: See December 17, 1989-January 14, 1990.

July 29–August 26: See March 11-April 8.

July 29–August 26: Focus on learning: the what, how, when, and where. Janet Lederman will lead this program for professionals involved in public education today.

August 26–September 23: Karuna Licht offers women a month of healing and recovery. Emotional work, meditation, art, dance, and ritual will be the modalities.

September 23–October 21: Janet Zuckerman will teach emotional release work using basic gestalt practices. This is a practicum, with emphasis on the participant as facilitator.

October 21–November 18: Terry Hunt will lead a program in emotional sobriety for adult children of alcoholic and abusive parents.

In as much as the Work Study Program is a complete program in itself, please do not plan to take regularly scheduled catalog workshops during your stay. Professional services, such as massage, are available at staff rates.

Accommodations are shared, with up to four people to a room, usually at South Coast Center, a staff complex located 1 1/2 miles north of Esalen.

A deposit of $350 in U.S. currency is required with your application. The cost of all 28-day Work Study Programs, except the two-month body work program, is $700 the first month, $650 the second month, $600 the third month. Work students may be invited to remain for a second or third month depending on space available and community needs. There are no scholarships available for the Work Study Program.

For more information contact Bette Dingman: (408) 667-3010.

Note: Application is not registration in the program. Registration is made only after approval of application and upon receipt of deposit. The balance of the fee is due on arrival. Of the original deposit, $100 is non-refundable and may be transferred to other programs within one year of receipt. Please return the application form (see page 42) with your deposit to:

Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

Language and Reality

by George Leonard

Writers who care about felicity of expression would do well to avoid the exploration of new cultures and unfamiliar states of being. At some point, the prudent novelist or poet connects his boldest adventuring to a well-known legend or a secure tradition. He anchors his words to the common rhythms and verities of the human experience. Thus he enlists unacknowledged and tireless co-authors. The Oedipus legend was already working upon Sophocles's audiences when they came to experience his particular rendering of it. The stern tradition of the seafaring life stands beside Melville on every page of Moby Dick. Browning's arrangement of the words, "Oh, to be in England/Now that April's there," is a notable achievement, but the work done by "England" and "April" is not inconsiderable.

The skillful writer who uses what is old and sure in human life wears a magician's cape. With the slightest touch of his wand he calls up a world within us. With few and simple words, he conjures up odors, images, childhood memories: "It is autumn; the leaves are falling."

But what if we are from another world in which there is no autumn and there are no trees? How many pages would it take to explain, not only the mechanism of autumn, but all the poignant associations? And how would we go about describing a leaf to one who has never seen a tree? Seven words might easily grow to seven pages. The writing would tend to show signs of overwork. In the end, the most heroic effort might be dismissed as trivial by those who live in a seasonless, treeless world while being judged obvious by those who know trees and seasons. What writer would choose to put himself in such a situation?

But there are movements in human evolution when what is old and sure becomes doubtful, and a whole new world of being beckons. If we wish to enter, we must leave our most comfortable and elegant modes of expression behind, and take our chances with language.

Striking out in new territory, we are tempted first of all by jargon. To describe new conditions, we make up new terms easily ridiculed by proponents of "straight talk." In many cases, however, these constructions represent a petition for inclusion, for a change in consciousness. When we call streetcleaners "sanitary engineers," we are urging their inclusion in a larger human group to whom we give a certain consideration and respect. When we say "chairperson," the word may have a clumsy, embarrassing ring to it, but we are forced just by saying it to include another sex in the class of those thought capable of wielding a gavel.

Jargon may proliferate when we try to pin down experiences not yet experienced by the culture as a whole. Linguistic purists are understandably offended by words and usages associated with new adventures of the body and spirit—encounter, gestalt, Rolfing, human biofield, spontaneous-enactment techniques, peak experience, self-actualization. The purists have probably forgotten that the Freudian terms they now so casually use were once new and clumsy and challenging, a key element in Freud's historic attempt to make the invisible visible. To the extent these terms have entered common discourse, the culture has changed.

Shaping new modes of expression shapes our perception of reality and thus, in some real sense, reality itself. We would hesitate to create a reality based on cheap jargon. But we might as well not waste energy struggling for modes of expression that will draw praise from conventional critics. Any excursion into a significant new reality will be perceived as barbaric by some, no matter how it is expressed. In fact, there is reason to suspect that the most effective verbal expression in this respect will be most violently resisted. Beneath the criticism there lies the fear of the intrusion of a new reality.

What these times demand, I believe, is a work as bold as, or even bolder than, Diderot's encyclopedia. Not exactly an encyclopedia, for that format is too slow in preparation, too ponderous and fixed to meet the challenges of the current period. But we do need the encyclopedic spirit, something like a comprehensive "instruction in the circle of arts and sciences" for an age of transformation of consciousness. Perhaps it has already begun, not just in books and papers and seminars but also in tapes, films, and videotapes, for there are many authors, thinkers, and adventurers today who are concerned, in sometimes separate ways, with being and transformation. This work, if we can conceive it as that, is only in its first stages. But awareness that a new encyclopedia is in progress can quicken our spirits, focus our energies, and help us cast off caution.

In the end, reality itself, the essential ground of all being, cannot be described in words alone. This notion finds simple and lovely expression in Witter Bynner's version of Lao Tzu's Tao Te Ching:

Existence is beyond the power of words
To define:
Terms may be used
But are none of them absolute.
In the beginning of heaven and earth there were no words,
Words came out of the womb of matter;
And whether a man dispassionately
Sees to the core of life
Or passionately
Sees the surface,
The core and the surface
Are essentially the same,
Words making them seem different
Only to express appearance.
If names be needed, wonder names them both:
From wonder into wonder
Existence opens.

We use words to discover no-words. We regard life with the passion of language in order to see its manifest forms. We still that passion in order to experience the Tao, "All That Is." Existence is word and no-word. Words are both our prison and our way out of prison. What we have called paradox does not represent the contrary or the exceptional. As we move from mere appearance toward the basic structure of existence, we find that paradox, complementarity, is precisely the way things are, the Tao itself.

Experiments on the optic nerves of frogs have shown that only a tiny fraction of the rich world available to our sight ever gets past the retina of the frog's eye. The frog can see a small dark object moving toward its eye but cannot see it if it is moving away. A leafy tree, unmoving, simply does not exist for the frog. A lovely sunset makes not a ripple in frog consciousness.

In his linguistic explorations, Noam Chomsky claims to have discovered a "deep structure" of language that exists in all human creatures, and that undergoes "transformations" as it emerges into expression as various tongues or symbols. Chomsky suggests that this structure is innate. As human beings, all of us may be born with a certain, fixed way of processing reality. If Chomsky is right, we have to consider the possibility that our linguistic structure, like the structure of the frog's optical system, shapes our perception and finally limits what we can perceive. There may be another, far richer world beyond the tree and the sunset, beyond words. Language itself may hold our eyes fixed on the moving shadows within the cave.

Again, paradox, for there is a different way of looking at the same formulation. On the deepest level, our language, our symbolic system, seems to resonate perfectly with All That Is. To approach the essence of the symbolic may be to approach the essence of the universe itself. Physicists are finding increasing wonder in the fact that purely abstract statements, totally disconnected from physical reality, can make such quick and powerful connection with the material universe. A human being can state, in effect, that what we call energy is locked in what we call matter in the proportion of the mass of that matter multiplied by the speed of light multiplied by itself—and not long afterward there is a sunburst in the New Mexico desert, a kind of "reality" that we can see and hear and feel. Modern science seems to take us back toward ancient wisdom: "In the beginning was the Word." The physical universe is a mere shadow of the symbolic realm.

But why dichotomize or assign priority? Why not say that the deep structure of language resonates with the deep structure of the material world, coexists with it? At the utter depths, what we call language must be a voiceprint of the infinite, a template from which we can generate words to enable us to interact with the Many, and with the One.

We have eyes to see with and ears to hear with, and we have words to tell us what we may or may not see and hear. We bring words up from the depths to tell us we may build an atomic bomb or an airplane or a worldwide communications network. But there are also words to tell us that in the primal forests are wonders now unseen. Words have killed the dryads. Words can bring them back to life (as we have learned from Blake, Hopkins, and Yeats), and words can allow us to sense again the shimmering connectedness between the trees, the flowers, the wind, the moss, and ourselves. From the possibilities of language we have dredged up a powerful discourse of separation and instrumentality. A language of union and being also exists. Only timidity and inertia prevent us from helping it rise to the common speech of this culture.

For a long time, words have been used to block the way toward transformation. Now the situation is so urgent that we would be unworthy of our own insights if we stepped aside from the task of seeking words for a new world, no matter how difficult or embarrassing the effort may be. Perhaps our knowledge that transformation is possible comes from the realm of no-words. But we will need words to let it happen.

George Leonard, a member of Esalen's Board of Trustees, is a contributing editor of Esquire. His forthcoming book, Mastery, The Key Moves, will be published next January.

The Writer's Way

by Nancy Bacal

1977. A hot September afternoon. The scream of tires. A violent death that leaves me alone in a house with two cats, a typewriter, and a sea of grief treacherous enough to drown in. My capacity to cope dwindles, and I soon find myself with one remaining hope. I begin to write.

For four years I write every day, with the one hour I initially devote to this practice swelling to five or six, and often more. Unencumbered by expectation, I watch the pages accumulate swiftly. The first several hundred are crammed into one single-spaced paragraph. Nothing matters—not how it looks, reads, or is received—except that I keep writing. In time, the desire to find a more interesting way to present the story arises naturally. Despite my initial disregard for results (most likely because of it), the quality unmistakably improves. Line by line, the ordeal that threatened to destroy me is reclaimed as material, and in the process, the image of myself as victim drifts away. No longer am I writing to keep myself alive; I am actually enjoying life because I am writing.

Even the most unspeakable event can be transformed by the power of the pen. And if the writer is propelled by the heart rather than the need to meet some arbitrary requirement of style, content, or emotional decorum, the piece will ultimately design its own form without exciting the critic. Reporting the event from a safe place, however, is not the practice. The writer's task is to re-enter the experience completely, to know it again from the inside out, even to the most irrelevant detail, then to get out of the way and permit the tale to unravel in a manner of its own choosing.

The form 'personal story' demands commitment to truth—not so much the truth of what happens, but the truth in one's heart. It is a process that seeks out the feelings beneath the facts, where skill is a product of authenticity as opposed to an ability to follow rules, where material finds its source in personal experience, even as the mind searches desperately for something meaningful to write.

Stories are everywhere. Mostly they are hidden in what is familiar. They pop out of jacket pockets and drawers; they lurk in kitchens, bathrooms, childhood memories, and dreams. The gifts we have lie in the details of who we are. All of them. Particularly the ones we wish we didn't know. The activity of writing offers a container large enough, compassionate enough, interested enough to tolerate all aspects of the self, where both the writing and the healing thrive on the same process. No experience is too salty, too trivial, or too revealing. Our ability to recognize this material is dependent on the way we value what we see, feel, and know. If we can't yet do that, with perseverance, the writer will teach us how.

Nancy Bacal leads annual workshops at Esalen and on-going creative writing seminars in Los Angeles. Her work includes the screenplay for the award-winning film "Raga," starring Ravi Shankar. She is a long-time student of aikido and meditation.

How to Suffer From Writer's Block

by Herbert Gold

Writer's Block is where no writer likes to hang out. It grows hair at midnight on its teeth and knuckles. It has stark staring eyes. Writer's Block makes you question if the world has magic. The answer to the question is: Maybe later.

When trying to roll a writer's block up Mount Olympus, you soon reach the sign which says: WRONG MOUNTAIN.

Your friends speak comforting words, all lies, and tell how they too have suffered—all truth. Everyone loves you more, especially your writer friends, but you love them less. You mope.

You may try drink. This adds headache and liver trouble to the block.

You may try shrink. This adds a debit balance to your income.

You may try drugs, speedy ones. This can move the block at the cost of a desert windstorm of futile words. The brain jangles. The soul dries up. In olden times, people had the chance to sell their souls to the devil, but no one wants to buy a dessicated soul. Chemical gain subtracts.

The shortage of paper is discouraging.

The failures of felt tip pens and word processors.

The fickleness of readers.

Despite this description, which may make Writer's Block seem like fun, there are things any writer would prefer, such as a tax audit by the IRS or news that his health plan does not cover his current fatal illness.

In advanced stages of Block, the speech synapses short out. You are no longer Captain Name-the-World. The language becomes unfamiliar, like your home town after a twenty-year absence. Your head is choked with the useless ash of ideas and I forgot what I was just going to say. You live alone and don't like it, unless you live with someone, in which case he or she will not like you.

You look at fat volumes entitled "The Rise of —" and think only of the fall of blood in your veins, the drying of the mouth, the eroding of memories, the shrinkage of the brain. You may seek refreshment in religion, politics, or love, and perhaps not find it. You may seek renewal through quarrelsomeness, travel, abrupt decisions to do something weird or at least different.

Nothing helps. Give up. "I surrender," —and you wave your white sheet to the enemy out there unseen in the mist.

Hello!

Something helped.

What was it?

Time passed, the battery took a solar charge, the owl begat an image and the image begat an anecdote and the anecdote begat a series of dreams which require an alert metabolism. You are available.

And so you sit up and continue that magic sentence which begins: Once upon a time there lived some curious people full of juice who did the following complicated things with their lives . . .

Words Arise

by George Leonard

There was a time when there were no words
There is a now of no words
Words arose
Words arose from
I reach for the key it's not there

There was a time in the forests
Beneath the trees
Across the endless open spaces
Grasses, stones as far as eye can see
When there were no words
Words arose
From where from what?

Before words there was only thankfulness
Unspoken again and again
Endlessly repeated
A bird's flight a distant sound
Endless thanksgiving

In the microchip, in the heart of the computer
There are no words no shapes no sounds
Yet words and shapes and sounds arise
From where from what?

Soundless shapeless eternal
Words arise
Our future holds our past
Now encompasses all

The Writing Life: A Review

by Annie Dillard
Harper & Row; $15.95

Reviewed by Keith Thompson

You take one more look at the words flashing on the monitor before instructing the computer to save what is clearly your best writing ever. You allow yourself to admit there is beauty—yes!—in this book you're writing, even—dare you say it?—a hint of genius. Finally, you have arrived, an inner voice confirms. But your satisfaction is short-lived. Another voice whispers, Something is wrong here, forcing your eyes back to the screen. Recognition comes in waves, all dreadful. "What you had planned will not do," Annie Dillard puts it—as gently as possible—in The Writing Life, confirming suspicions you assumed you could outlast. "Either the structure has forked, so the narrative, or the logic, has developed a hairline fracture that will shortly split it up the middle—or you are approaching a fatal mistake," Dillard adds. Instantly you realize minor surgery (consulting the thesaurus, dropping a sentence or two) will be useless, for what's false in the work happens also to be completely necessary to the work's present form. Dillard's warning that the book will "explode or collapse" if you remain on your present course only compounds your distress. There is no real choice: You must begin again, even though this means salvaging little, if any, of what a moment ago you called your best.

Yet because there is indeed genius in your project—in the classical sense of genius as the prevailing deity governing a place or a work, a spirit intent upon realization—you find yourself returning to the starting chute, seemingly by fate. The work demands to be fulfilled; you are its instrument. But, Dillard adds, you are also possessed of the most remarkable freedom: to select your own materials, to invent your own task, to pace yourself; the freedom also (within certain limits) to author blasphemies, even outright lies. Dillard is quick to state the obverse of this freedom, namely the possibility that your work is "so meaningless, so fully for yourself alone, and so worthless to the world, that no one except you cares whether you do it well, or ever." Unlike a shoe salesman, you (as writer) are free to make thousands of close judgment calls daily "as a by-product of your day's triviality." The shoe salesman, however, will be missed if he fails to appear at work one morning; a writer will not. Since there is a greater need for shoes than books, "Why not shoot yourself, actually, rather than finish one more excellent manuscript on which to gag the world?"

If you have shepherded a creative project or two through more than one visionary beginning and more than one blind alley, you've probably asked a version of Dillard's question yourself, perhaps many times. It should—it is meant to—challenge you to examine your life for the "hairline fracture that will shortly split it up the middle," regardless of what or even whether you write. Perhaps you will find one; perhaps not. (Amazingly, sometimes our lives are found to be on course!) Either way, such challenges offer much of value to those living "any life of dedication, absurdity, and daring—any life at the edge," Dillard's characterization of people who've simply elected, in her simple phrase, to "get to work."

To enter this book is to experience, palpably, a new blossoming of one of our most gifted writers. When Annie Dillard proposes that "original writing fashions a form . . . unrolls out into nothingness . . . cell to cell, bough to twig to leaf," she captures the soul of her own artistry. Immediately we recognize parallels between what Dillard says of original writing and what's true of original living: both fashion form. "Any careful word may suggest a route, may begin a strand of metaphor or event out of which much, or all, will develop," she continues. One has only to place "or action" after "any careful word" and the author's focus becomes the whole of life, human life in particular, as creativity. To her credit, Dillard inspires her readers to sprout for themselves such larger connections from seeds she plants throughout the book.

This is what makes The Writing Life a joy to read, that a specialist in matters literary (Dillard received the Pulitzer Prize for Pilgrim at Tinker Creek) should so simply and movingly render the craft of her particular art as to invoke the spirit, the genius, of universal truth.

Keith Thompson is currently working on a book probing symbolic meanings of the UFO phenomenon, to be published by Addison-Wesley.

In addition to Dillard's The Writing Life, several books on writing are available through the Esalen Bookstore. These include: John Gardner's The Art of Fiction and On Becoming a Novelist; Natalie Goldberg's Writing Down the Bones; Irving Polster's Every Person's Life is Worth a Novel; and Strunk and White's Elements of Style. Please see the Mail Order Books insert for ordering information.

and something ignited in my soul, fever or unremembered wings,
and I went my own way, deciphering
that burning fire,
and I wrote the first bare line, bare, without substance, pure foolishness, pure wisdom
of one who knows nothing, and suddenly I saw the heavens

CONFERENCE ON SUSTAINABLE AGRICULTURE

This last January 9-12, Esalen co-sponsored an invitational conference with the Committee for Sustainable Agriculture. The result of this meeting was a document, the Asilomar Declaration for Sustainable Agriculture, that discusses the problems of current agricultural practices and outlines a vision for the future. Participants hope to build a coalition of environmental and conservation groups around these concerns and to influence Congress for more support of sustainable agriculture in the 1990 Farm Bill.

Participants included Robert Rodale, Wes Jackson, Amory Lovins, and representatives from government, private, and public organizations. For a copy of the declaration, contact CSA, P.O. Box 1300, Colfax, CA 95713.

ESALEN ECOLOGY GROUP

Alarmed at the growing global environmental crisis, individuals in the Esalen community have formed the Esalen Ecology Group. The group researches, advises management, and implements ecologically-sound products and procedures throughout the property. They have recently installed depots for recyclable waste and are working on a project to lower electricity consumption. The kitchen is maximizing efforts to purchase more organic produce and range-fed meat. This issue of The Esalen Catalog is printed on recycled paper. Future programs include invitational conferences that will address environmental issues on local and global levels. The ecology group is also promoting the establishment of a recycling center for the Big Sur community and has organized an outreach program for concerned people throughout the Big Sur area.

Esalen Institute has long been equated with the development of human potential. The world has reached a time, however, when that potential will likely be arrested unless there is increased human action to improve the biosphere's dwindling potential. It is up to the local citizen to act responsibly in his or her home, town, and network. As the pace of change in the world quickens, we are all tempted to take the convenient path instead of considering the long-range results of our choices. However, we must choose what's good for us and the earth, not simply what's expedient. This includes changing patterns of consumption and redefining what constitutes worthwhile economic goals.

In our own community, the Esalen Ecology Group is striving to bridge the gap between the kind of "personal ecology" that Esalen has promoted since its inception and the practice of globally-responsible ecology necessary for planetary survival and well-being.

■ WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from a tour of the garden on a Sunday afternoon to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on page 49. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops.

In addition, there are other events which enrich life at Esalen. There are frequent forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, choirs, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. Finally, there is a community workshop program which goes on daily and provides opportunities for personal growth.

■ ESALEN SEMINARS

KATHLEEN THORNOD CARR

Week of April 29–May 4

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

This workshop is open to anyone interested in learning to recognize, trust, and use their psi abilities. The leaders will use exercises designed to aid participants in recognizing their perceptive styles and trusting the intuitive input they normally receive. Anne Armstrong will use her tracking abilities, acquired from over twenty years in this field, to assist participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

One of the basic objectives of the workshop is to demystify the intuitive/psychic process and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives—personal, professional, and spiritual. The workshop will include personal psychic scans and practice on selected cases. $630

Courage, Risk, and Self-Acceptance

Phyllis Shankman

Although it is understood that growth and change require courage and the willingness to risk, many of us find ourselves unable or unwilling to make a move until we feel certain of the outcome. And while we hesitate, we often miss out on enjoyable or important opportunities. Courage requires a blend of self-acceptance, heart, boldness of spirit, a sense of humor, and the willingness to trust oneself and the goodwill of others.

This workshop offers participants a supportive environment in which to experience themselves as courageous and able to successfully take risks. Group activities will include gestalt, discussion, massage, meditation, art imagery exercises, dance, and play. $630

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart.—Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It may be experienced not simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

In these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two of the days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Non-Ericksonian Advanced Hypnosis for Professionals

Randall Churchill

Ericksonian hypnosis and neurolinguistic programming have been highly influential in many hypnosis circles for nearly two decades. But there are various advanced contemporary forms of hypnosis besides those developed by Erickson. This program is for experienced Ericksonian and non-Ericksonian practitioners who want to expand and develop their options; each day will include lectures, demonstrations, and practice in advanced modalities.

Tapping into strong emotions during hypnosis often creates splendid opportunities for movement. Participants will explore which situations are best to encourage abreaction and, when appropriate, how to transcend resistance to it. They will work with comprehensive strategies, including the integration of the affect bridge, gestalt, transactional analysis, body work, inner child processes, hypno-analysis, reeducation, inner support systems, and transpersonal hypnosis. Other topics include ideomotor methods and advanced systematic desensitization for overcoming phobias. Practice of rapid induction and deepening methods, including skillful use of authoritarian styles, will give participants a greater range in assisting clients enter and respond to hypnosis.

So as not to miss the forest for the trees . . . cultivating compassion, rapport, and mental expectancy are more important than any methodology and will underlie the work of this week.

Family Regeneration: Moving Beyond the Family Trance

Jane Parsons-Fein

Anything you do in a conscious state, you can do better in a trance state.
—Milton Erickson

Authentic change can only take place on unconscious levels.—Virginia Satir

Most people invariably recreate in their work and relationships the emotional environment they experienced as children. They operate out of the parental inductions they received and the assumptions they made consciously, which have since become unconscious.

Through discussion, games, movement, self-observation, family-sculpting, psychodrama, and communication stances, participants will identify common areas of communication breakdown (between parents, children, couples, friends). They will have the opportunity to reconnect with more natural, fulfilling, and loving ways of being together and generate new levels of change. $630

A Workshop for Couples with David Schiffman

This workshop will focus on reawakening and developing positive, mutual supports that are at the root of satisfying couple relationships. The emphasis will be on creating clear and truthful expressions of loving and personal integrity. Participants will reexamine their beliefs and habits through the use of intuitional sensing, risk-taking structures, guided imagery, and gestalt awareness methods.

$325 per participant

Creative Writing Brainstorming

Herbert Gold

From feeling to expression to communication, this workshop will carry participants into the possibilities of making literature. Exploring an experience different for everyone, yet shared by all, they will probe for the riches within.

Participants should bring typewriter, word processor, pen, soft pencil, or clay tablets and stylus to the meetings. A situation will be called forth—love, death, ambition, pride, fear, hatred, jealousy—and after preparation in the discussion, participants will write. Then they will read and rewrite each other's work. They may expect to go from truth to lying: from recollection to art.

What may develop is a sense of style and control as a part of the mastery of experience. Participants will practice the freedom of imagination by giving shape to it.

Please see Herbert Gold's essay, "How to Suffer from Writer's Block," on page 7.

New Competences for an Age of Uncertainty

Donald Michael

Because we live with unprecedented levels of complexity and uncertainty, an abiding crucial challenge for each of us is learning how to be better learners. The old answers and questions are increasingly ineffective. Yet, conventional definitions of competence encourage each of us, and organizations, too, to avoid learning by denying or disguising uncertainty so that we appear to know what we are doing. The result is ever more stress, anxiety, and inadequate personal and organizational performance.

This seminar will introduce a set of interlocking skills or "new competences" necessary for making humane and effective decisions when uncertainty can provide the occasion for learning—in work places and in interpersonal and family situations. These skills include: acknowledging and specifying high levels of uncertainty, error embracing, being future-responsive boundary spanning, interpersonal communication, and self-knowledge.

The approach will be both cognitive and experiential. Participants will have the opportunity to become more comfortable with the vulnerability that accompanies facing their uncertainties; to question the need to act over-cautiously out of fear of making a mistake; and to reexamine the incentives for those defensive posturings that make it so hard to act responsibly and compassionately. As a previous participant said, "This seminar is for those who are ready to move beyond the personal and want to effect change in public and private organizations." $325

Anna Halprin & Rana Vassau

Since illness reflects the breaking down of the immune system, it makes sense to go to our deepest source, the body itself, to rebuild, renew, and rebirth to our natural state. This workshop emphasizes what participants can learn from paying attention to how they move, feel, and image.

Dance has been used as a healing art since the beginning of time, and Anna Halprin has bridged healing rituals of the past with those of today. As a result of having had cancer herself, she has pioneered an approach to dance called psycho-kinetic-visualization, which utilizes the feedback process between instinctive movement and deeply-buried feelings. Participants visualize their natural killer cells as vigorous and alert allies in the immune system, destroying the diseased cell. They then embody these visualizations and dramatize them through movement in their own creative dance-rituals. Guided movement meditations for relaxation and to enliven the life force are also used.

This workshop is designed for people with cancer, support persons, and health care professionals and is suitable for people of varying levels of physical capacity. There will be a slide show and videotape of case studies to illustrate ways this approach has been applied. For more information contact Tamalpa Institute, P.O. Box 794, Kentfield, CA 94914; (415) 461-9479.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $325

Humanizing Health Care

Jane Parsons-Fein

This workshop is for health care professionals who want to refine their use of language and nonverbal cues to facilitate the healing process, be it in an emergency room or a chronic care facility. The work will be based on Milton Erickson's pioneering methods in medical hypnotherapy, which have been shown to have profound effects on human physiology, and which are only beginning to be tracked by the field of molecular biology.

The Modern Warrior: LET in Action

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

A man or woman with outward courage dares to die; A man or woman with inward courage dares to live.—Lao Tzu

The Modern Warrior is not one who goes to war but rather one who exhibits integrity in every aspect of living, one who seeks to attain control then act with abandon. For the Modern Warrior, life is vivid, immediate, and joyful. He or she lives each day to the full, and is fulfilled in serving others. This workshop is based on the premise that to achieve peace in the world and harmony in daily life, it might well be necessary for men and women to reown the warrior ideal.

Through the centering and movement exercises of LET (Leonard Energy Training) as well as through various new games, participants will be invited to get in touch with their own unacknowledged powers, and thus to discover the hidden warrior within. Guidance will be offered on how to apply the warrior ideal to daily life. This workshop will not be physically strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Recommended reading: George Leonard, The Silent Pulse (Dutton). $630

Self-Acceptance: The Freedom to Be

David Schiffman

Each of us has unique capacities to feel and express tenderness and strength, anger and affection, autonomy and needfulness, as well as compassion, humor, and wisdom. The degree to which we allow the fullness and vibrance of each of these qualities determines how alive and gratified we are.

In this workshop, participants will focus on how they diminish or affirm these essential qualities as they are expressed through their bodies, sexuality, creativity, relationship to power, friendships, and expectations. In an atmosphere of tenderness and support, participants will clarify the nature of who they are and how they can best take care of themselves, both at Esalen and on returning home. The workshop will be grounded in gestalt, group process, guided fantasy, massage, and bioenergetics. $630

Psychology of Spiritual Essence: Introduction to Ridhwan Work

Hameed Ali
& Ridhwan Work School Faculty

Ridhwan, translated from Arabic, means contentment. The Ridhwan Work School is dedicated to the development of the human essence. It uses primarily the Diamond Approach, a modern, psychological method used as a spiritual practice, to guide students to a precise understanding of their personal experience. By understanding one's discontent, longing, emptiness, and life situations, it becomes possible to realize the innate aspects of love, awareness, will, and joy. Such precision offers psychological clarity and ultimately leads to spiritual presence.

This workshop will use conceptual presentations, interpersonal exercises, meditation, and personal emotional work to activate the essential aspects of presence and resolve the psychological barriers against them. It is for individuals who have done a lot of emotional and growth work, and speaks to the longing of the heart for what will truly fulfill it. In such a short time, participants may only get a taste of this essence, but they can go a long way in terms of awakening their sleeping potential. Private sessions will be available for an additional fee.

Negotiating Career and Family: A Delicate Balance

Ayala Pines

Those people who are deeply involved in a highly demanding career face the danger of career burnout. Those who are deeply involved in a highly demanding relationship face the danger of relationship burnout. Negotiating between the two does not have to be more stressful than dealing with just one.

The goal of this workshop is to help individuals and couples better negotiate the demands of their lives so that, instead of being the cause of burnout, they contribute to personal and couple growth. Achieving balance between work and relationships not only leads to a richer and more satisfying life, it can also offer protection from over-involvement (and with it the danger of burnout) in either one of them.

This workshop is recommended for dual-career couples, for individuals juggling a career and a family, and for therapists working with such individuals and couples. $630

Weekend of May 11–13

The Archaic Revival: Inner Visions, Future Vectors

Terence McKenna

This age of archaic revival is a time of responsibility and opportunity, a rare confluence of traditional forms such as shamanism and vision-questing with a planetary and post-historical mega-future. Can archaic values give meaning to the now apparently inevitable dissolution of our ages-long link to this green and watery world? How can we facilitate our departure from the cave of forgetting and our immersion into the real politic of membership in the galactic collectivity of mind? We will discuss who we are, where we came from, and where we are headed as a species. This seminar will explore a universe that is stranger than we can suppose. $325

May 11–18

Rainbow Bridge: A Ritual Theater Lab

Gabrielle Roth & Brian Bates

This 7-day workshop synthesizes Gabrielle Roth's Ritual Theater with Brian Bates' Way of the Actor. Through the use of sound, movement, and theater, participants will explore shamanic visions of the future as inspired by timeless insights from the past.

Rainbow Bridge offers a path of self-exploration through self-expression. It is a supportive and challenging transformational tool designed to inspire individuality and artistic creativity.

Recommended reading: Gabrielle Roth, Maps to Ecstasy: Teachings of an Urban Shaman (New World Library); Brian Bates, The Way of the Actor (Shambhala). $955

Week of May 13–18

Five-Day Massage Intensive

Robert Helm & Esalen Massage Practitioners

Participants will be instructed in basic methods used in giving a pleasurable and beneficial full body massage. Fundamental elements of body work, such as breath awareness, grounding, movement, quality of touch, and stress reduction, will be introduced. This workshop is available to beginners as well as to those who wish to brush up on their massage skills.

The Hero's Journey

Paul Rebillot

Paul Rebillot writes: "Again and again in my work with people I have seen the suffering and confusion caused by our society's lack of significant rites of passage. Without shamans or ritual masters to guide them, modern women and men must find their own lonely and usually traumatic paths from one stage of life to another—whether it be a child's discovery that there is no Santa Claus, an adolescent's awkward approach to puberty, an adult's marriage or ending of one, or a change of career. Every such change requires a movement from one level of being to another.

"Seeing this need, I created a rite of passage universal enough to allow people to discover the pattern of change, whatever that change might be. That pattern is exemplified in the myth of the hero. The new stage of life that is to be reached calls forth a heroic action on the part of the person taking the journey. At the same time, as soon as a new goal begins to emerge, all of the resistance to that goal emerges as well. I call these two forces 'the hero' and 'the demon.' In order for the new state of being to be realized, these two forces must discover how to communicate with each other and how to work together. The old forms must fall away so that the new form can emerge.

"My purpose is to give people a chance to experience a rite of passage so that they can go into the changes in their lives with a sense of joy and greater context. My hope is that through this process people will awaken to their own creative genius and enter into the drama of their lives with imagination and delight."

Clinical Ground and Spiritual Depth

Stephen Schoen

The major symptoms of psychic pain—anxiety, depression, confusion, self-doubt—have a spiritual dimension. They speak of a smaller gestalt that we feel trapped in and must break out of, with a sense of danger akin to the fear of death, but still as the one way of life. This seminar will explore ideas of Lao Tzu, Buber, Bateson, and Krishnamurti and consider how they address the coming into a larger gestalt, a sacred world. For the theory and practice of psychotherapy, these writers make specific contributions to attitude and method. The seminar will be presented in lecture, experiential work, and discussion. $630

Weekend of May 18–20

A Weekend with Paul Rebillot

Paul Rebillot writes: "Within each of us there lives a demon—our own personal critic—whose greatest joy comes from criticizing, denigrating, and destroying every experience we have. We're either too early or too late, too old or too young, too fat or too thin, and when we fall in love, we're never good enough. This demon, who commands us to be who we aren't in order to satisfy someone we can never satisfy, is the demon that we will seek to exorcise during this workshop.

"Why not take the chance of looking inside ourselves and finding the completeness of who we are, instead of limiting ourselves with who we think we should be and who we hope we are not? When we find the truth about ourselves, our natural response is to want and to work for the best that we can be.

"People in the helping professions who have experienced this form have found it adaptable and useful in their own work."

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as base camp, the group will explore different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $325

Jeffrey Masson & Daidie Donnelley

Jeffrey Masson's book The Assault on Truth has been described as a Watergate of the psyche. Accused of telling too much about the Freud Archives, of which he was a director, and of blowing the whistle on psychotherapy in his new book, Against Therapy, his activities brought him into conflict with the psychiatric establishment. His autobiography, The Making and Unmaking of a Psychoanalyst, will be published this Fall. Daidie Donnelley, a psychologist, is a partner in Berkeley's Chez Panisse restaurant and co-founder of the Daily Bread Project. Her interest in integrating personal and social truth has been a thread that has united her work in psychology, photography, film, and community organizing. They write:

"We live in an age where it has become increasingly risky to tell the truth, whether in a business deal, in politics, in the media, or in personal relationships. But it is also clear that unless we make a determined effort to seek out true information and true facts and present them truly, our personal lives, our emotional selves, and our entire planet may be doomed.

"This workshop will look at this issue in a wide variety of situations (politics, the media, writing, psychiatry), but will focus on truth in one's own autobiography. Is it possible to de-mythologize one's own life? Have you ever been in a situation where you agonized over whether to tell the truth? We will discuss these issues and attempt to reach conclusions that can help each of us have a more authentic relationship with other people, with the environment, and with other creatures. The goal is to get away from gurus, psychiatrists, professors, and bad lovers and move toward friends, oceans, and good food."

The Rainbow Serpent: The Eco-Spiritual System of the African Diaspora

Luisah Teish & Wade Davis

This workshop will explain the relationship between ecology and spirituality in the traditions of the African diaspora. Areas covered will include West Africa, Brazil, Cuba, and Haiti. Participants will learn about folklore regarding the forces of nature, the spiritual-medicinal power of herbs, and ritual dances of African-derived traditions. They will design personal rituals to enhance their own relationship to nature and the world of spirit. $325

The Buddha, the Goddess, and N.L.P.

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

The Buddha is a model for compassionate emptiness. The Goddess is a model for passionate involvement in form. Neurolinguistic programming (N.L.P.) is a structure for understanding, modeling, and changing human behavior and consciousness. It can be used for leaving behind old baggage and focusing or polishing the filters of perception. Set in the context of Buddhist psychology and practice, N.L.P. offers the choice to utilize gracefully the core issues of life as ally and teacher.

This workshop combines the power of hypnosis and N.L.P. within the context of a spiritual journey. Participants will use Zen meditation, Taoist yoga, movement, and trance work to invoke the perfected states of the Buddha and the Goddess already within.

Presence: A Fluidity of Being

Elisa Lodge

Elisa Lodge writes: "Presence is a power that arises from a deep sense of self-worth and trust. It reflects a broadened vision and whole-hearted acceptance of the varied facets of being. It is a state of dynamic balance where there is no unnecessary strain of self-defeating awkwardness. One is at home in oneself and at ease with the world.

"During this week, participants can gain a deepened appreciation of the elements in themselves that contribute to this timeless state of fluidity and ease. They will have an opportunity to experiment and explore how their bodies' shapes and forms, emotional histories, and self-images are intimately intertwined. This growing awareness is the basic grounding from which the creative experience of presence can be known. Movement patterns, the ways we walk and breathe, also reveal how we inhibit or allow our personal power. As we become more comfortable with ourselves, we transform not only the way we might carry our head or make contact with another, but our whole way of being in the world.

"This work is based on an approach woven from gestalt, psychosynthesis, Rolf movement, and performance art. Video feedback will be used." $630

Sculpture: Inner and Outer Visions

Rachael Dutton

The seat of the soul is where the inner and outer worlds meet.—Novalis

Rachael Dutton writes: "My work is based on interactions of images from my dreams with the animism of materials such as branches, earth, and grasses. These materials function as collaborators, mediating between inner and outer worlds.

"Workshop participants will work individually with images gleaned from dreams, memory, or moments of presence, using low-tech methods of construction and the natural resources of the farm area at Esalen. Additive sculpture methods, such as bundling, tying, stacking, can be just as personal as imagery; ways of linking physical components mirror associative processes in the mind. Participants will explore a multi-dimensional awareness of self as process and self as internal landscape coming to meet external landscape, using natural materials and the raw beauty of the Big Sur coastline to embody their personal visions.

"The workshop is open to artists at all levels of experience. Bring sketchbook, scissors, string, rags, and a plastic bucket."

Letting Go–Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Beliefs, fears, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate—in the moment—to ourselves, to our work, and to those we love.

The workshop includes periods of intense body work for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dream work, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge. $325

Thomas Hanna

The founder of the journal Somatics will teach basic principles of somatic learning, central to which is controlling neuromuscular responses to emotional states. Uncontrolled emotional responses lead, eventually, to distortions of lower back, shoulders, and neck with, typically, chronic stiffness and soreness in these areas. Learning control of one's emotional response can lead to inner calmness as well as ease in muscular tone and body posture.

The Psychotherapist as Shaman: Methods for Madness

Joan Halifax

In many indigenous cultures across the world, the shaman has functioned as healer and therapist in the physical, psychological, intellectual, transpersonal, social, and environmental domains. During this weekend, anthropologist Joan Halifax will look into the traditions of shamanism for those practices and methods possibly relevant for use in contemporary psychotherapy. Included will be the function of art in personal, social, and environmental healing; the role of ritual in individual and community process; the use of entheogens in psychophysical transformation; and the relationship of the natural environment (as reality and metaphor) to the healing process. This program includes experiential practices, teachings, and discussion.

Finding Inspired Work in Mid-Life

Peller Marion

At 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people don't live to be 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them largely because their lives seem effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop, drawing from a conceptual base of adult development theory and models of aging, will explore these issues. Through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, What's my dissatisfaction? Who am I? What's my definition of success? the leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain a clarity, focus, and direction of one's life contributions. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision. $325

Dale Cummings & Gena Mayer Sorensen

Participants will employ Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants. Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexuality intensify and merge. $630

Completion

Will Schutz

Incomplete actions, be they personal or social, result in many of humankind's troubles: emotional—replaying early stuck relations; physical—chronic tension from unfinished actions; health—blood poisoning from uneliminated waste products; aging—caused by incomplete events; ecology—waste disposal problems, especially nuclear; spiritual—karma, unfinished business; education—Montessori's insistence on putting toys away; sports—the concept of the killer instinct.

What are the resistances to completion? What must happen to a self-concept to propel it toward completing cycles? These and other questions will be explored via the following concepts: theory of energy cycles, life history completion, health through imagery. $630

Patrick Douce

This workshop will approach the concept of a free, effortless body through Moshe Feldenkrais' work in movement and touch. Balinese and other Indonesian systems of working with the human body's energy field will broaden the Feldenkrais® work.

Participants will be introduced to the complexity and simplicity of the spinal column. They will use soft, conscious movement to increase their sensitivity for safe, hands-on explorations. Moving away from the notion of a straight, stiff, rod-like back, they will find that posture and overall flexibility of the spine improves.

This program is designed for both beginners and professionals interested in movement and touch. Individuals with chronic tension or stress, and those with lower back, neck, shoulder, or hip pain, may find alternatives through learning more about the human body's possibilities. $630

Gestalt Practice

Joyce Lyke

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear—
And when used—is inexhaustible.
—Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form—nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental—evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is *intra*personal rather than *inter*personal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (insight) meditation practice is a systematic examination of the mind/body process through calm and focused awareness. Learning to observe experience from a place of stillness enables one to relate to life without fear or clinging. One begins to accept pleasure and pain, fear and joy, with increasing equanimity and balance. Life is seen as a constantly changing process. Insight is the deepening experience of the process itself, free of interpretation, leading to wisdom and compassion.

This seminar is designed for those who have had no previous meditation experience as well as for those who wish to deepen their practice. Meditation instruction, the philosophy behind the practice, group discussions, and actual practice periods will be offered. Special emphasis will be placed on how to integrate Vipassana practice in daily life after the workshop is over.

The Further Reaches of Human Energy

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

This workshop begins with a basic grounding in Leonard Energy Training (LET), in which problems can become opportunities, stress and pain can be transformed into gifts of energy, personal and social options can be multiplied, and the flow of vital energy enhanced. In addition to its practical applications, the workshop offers participants the possibility of experiencing their own latent powers of intuition and extraordinary sensing.

After their introduction to LET, participants move into experiments that push the limits of what are termed "normal" human capacities. Through such processes as scanning, tuning in to others' energy, focused surrender, and remote viewing, the group is given a chance to experience a crystalline state of intense aliveness without expectation and prejudgment. As George Leonard wrote in The Ultimate Athlete, "Simply by considering possibilities commonly ignored by our culture, we find ourselves in a far more fascinating universe. We discover adventures that do not require the burning of fuel or the rape of the planet: sensing the energy field of a friend or a tree, making connections that defy conventional space and time. . . . We realize, with the sorcerer, don Juan, that our world is awesome, mysterious, and unfathomable, and that our life is filled to the brim and altogether too short."

The Body is Spirit

Robert Hall

There is no difference between the bio-energetic streaming of daily body life and the divine spirit current or life force. We experience both as an on-going felt body sense. The human ego operates under the false assumption that it is somehow separate from that sense. So we spend our lives in constant negotiation and seeking: the so-called human condition. From this position, alienation is inevitable.

This workshop is designed to explore the possibility that we are that felt body sense, that spirit current, and we are constantly, by nature, in relationship to everyone and everything that exists. Hopefully, we'll laugh a lot, too. There will be time for gestalt, individual body work, meditation, and getting to know each other well in a short time. $630

Ganga White & Tracey Rich

Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and which combines grace and flow with postures, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the art of enlightened living.

Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies. Through Jnana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.

Participants of all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at: White Lotus, 2500 San Marcos Pass, Santa Barbara, CA 93105; (805) 964-1944. $630

Rituals for Healing

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

Rituals give meaning, richness, and structure to life's passages. They are for communication and celebration, for solemnity and deep inner silence. They are a visible manifestation of common human experience. Most of all, rituals are ceremonies of healing.

During this workshop, participants will explore components of healing ritual and discuss why rituals work. Sounds and symbols of rituals from several cultures will be experienced. The group will create and participate in healing rites which incorporate ancient wisdom with the belief systems from modern medicine, science, and psychology. The focus of the ritual work will be the healing power of the imagination.

This program may be of interest to health professionals and others who are on a healing path—seeking harmony, balance, and wholeness.

Poetry as Food for a Full Life

Brother David Steindl-Rast

Poems are high-energy food for our inner and outer journeys through life. Some people have been nourished by this fare for a long time: for them, this workshop will be a time to delight in a festive meal. Others may have been estranged from poetry ever since their high school days: they are likely to be as surprised during this weekend as if they had discovered in their own house a room they had never entered.

Why does school spoil for many young people the taste for poetry? Why does Sunday School turn so many away from religion? These two phenomena are closely connected, but it is never too late to rediscover our heart's passion for meaning.

The Art of Receiving

Elliot Waker Aronson
& Gabriele Hilberg

This culture makes it difficult to receive gracefully. Many of us learn early in life to equate receiving with weakness, helplessness, and dependency. One source of difficulty originates from a deep-seated belief that we do not deserve the love, attention, praise, or affection that is offered. Another stems from a fear of being obligated by the other person's expectations. Our willingness to receive brings greater honesty to our desire to give to others. The openness to receiving allows us to fully experience our relationship with another person, opens our hearts to the love and compassion of others and, in times of crisis, enables us to reach out for help.

Participants in this workshop will examine the beliefs and expectations that created their internal blockages and will learn new ways of receiving wisely, gracefully, and with dignity. $630

Contemplation and Film

Francis Lu
& Brother David Steindl-Rast

Film provides many of us with moments of genuine aesthetic enjoyment. Do we realize how close we are at those moments to contemplation in the traditional sense? In this workshop, Francis Lu and Brother David will help build bridges between realms of meditation and movie-making.

Participants will view a series of remarkable films and discuss key issues of film appreciation and of spirituality. A film festival of this kind needs no further justification; beyond it, however, the leaders hope to open for participants access to a deeper sense of the transpersonal in everyday life.

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for: people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably.

Weekend of June 15–17

Healing, Meditation, and Dzogchen

Sogyal Rinpoche

In the stillness and presence of meditation we discover a pure awareness, beyond the ordinary thinking mind, and catch a glimpse of our true nature, something long lost to the busyness and turmoil of our lives. The core of meditation practice is the releasing of heart and mind in deep ease and relaxation, dissolving tensions, and connecting with that tremendous source of healing within. Health is a state where all aspects of body and mind are in balance. Through meditation practice, the mind's natural freedom begins to shine through whatever arises in everyday life, bringing us confidence and skillfulness in our action.

At the heart of the Buddha's teachings lie the ancient meditation practices of Dzogchen, taught by Sogyal Rinpoche, a master who is heir to the 2,500 years of wisdom of Buddha. This weekend he will talk about Dzogchen and the Buddhist perspective. Some meditation practice will be included. $325

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods to improve their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop will be of value to anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health-care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility—painlessly and immediately.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $325

Accessing Creative Process

Dianne Laurence

This workshop is for artists and non-artists who are having trouble starting or developing creative work. Mistaken notions about oneself, fears of imperfection, a need for control, and a tendency to emphasize results are some of the obstacles to imagination. Creative vitality and the ability to express oneself effectively arise from being attentive to one's fascinations, accessing impulses beyond the confines of the intellect, developing a healthy, critical eye and ear, and becoming a risk-taker.

Creativity is not something that just a few gifted people possess, but a natural part of everyone's make-up. Skill, intellect, emotions, and imagination are the cornerstones of creativity. In this class, participants will use exercises in writing, acting, and painting to expand emotional vocabulary, develop imagination, encourage spontaneity, and instill confidence in the expression of their inner life. Pushing against limitations is essential to articulating the areas to be developed, so this is a hands-on, risk-taking class. Participants will be suppported, encouraged, and given the opportunity to confront their walls and turn them into stepping stones. $325

Laura DeNuccio writes: "This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

"The emphasis of this workshop will be on learning how to embody this new awareness, bridging one's personal growth and inner experience with outer involvement in the world. Inquiry will be made into the beliefs and assumptions that shape somatic reality, with special attention given to personal issues. The group will draw from breath, movement, sound, gestalt practice, imagery, and meditation to enliven, balance, and transform energy blocks and patterns in the body. For some individuals, unconscious thoughts and feelings that reside in the body tissue may come to life, which can then be consciously integrated into a new level of wholeness and well-being—physically, mentally, sexually, and spiritually.

"Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of the body. This will be encouraged through music, dance, creative use of the Spoken Word, and ritual. Practices that cultivate sensitivity, compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others will be included. In this way, the group can co-create an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore the ever-unfolding adventure of spirit and discover a deepened sense of the interconnectedness that is inherent in all life-forms."

Couples' Workshop

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead, they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

Mountains and Waves: Movement in Wilderness

Susan Harper & Steven Harper

Mountains and Waves is an invitation to explore natural movements inspired within the human organism by participation in nature. We listen to impulses within and to impulses of wilderness until "inner" and "outer" disappear. As we surrender to the intelligence which creates life in all its varied forms, we find ourselves moving in unexpected ways. Our awareness expands. We feel a larger sense of Self and wilderness and the creative wholeness of a greater dance.

The summer solstice occurs during this week, and we will take special time to create a ceremony in honor and celebration of our longest day. Sessions will be both indoors and outdoors. Evenings, some day sessions, and most meals will be at Esalen. We will also take short day-hikes in Big Sur's backcountry. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance. $630

Jean Liedloff

Jean Liedloff has developed a set of principles that guides clients toward an understanding of the beliefs and expectations formed in baby- and childhood that chronically undermine their capacity to act from accurate, adult perception of Self and Other. In her years of living in the South American jungle with Stone Age Indians, Liedloff observed a norm of human well-being that offers a reliable paradigm of mental and emotional health that has been missing from our attempts to attain individual and social fulfillment. Her work with clients is based on principles extrapolated from these observations. Normalcy, as we know it, is viewed as a pathology and new (ancient) criteria suddenly make sense of many of our problems.

This workshop will present methods that can change a client's self-defeating beliefs, at his or her own optimum pace, which participants will experience from both the client's and guide's points of view. It is for professionals and non-professionals. Please see page 11 to arrange for child care at Gazebo School/Park.

Terence McKenna & Michael Murphy

Few streams of mystical philosophy run as broadly or as deeply through the growth of Western civilization as does that of the Roman philosopher Plotinus and his students Proclus and Porphyry. These mystical followers of the Pythagorean Plato illumined the tumultuous world that anticipated the fall of Rome, and twelve hundred years later, during the birth pangs of the Renaissance, this same Neo-Platonism offered a visionary alternative to the dominant theology of Christianity. In our own times what we have called the "New Age" or "Archaic Revival" is often the wine of Neo-Platonism poured into new bottles. We will discuss Neo-Platonism in the light of modern ideas concerning evolution and the physical world. Come join two Irish enthusiasts for the mystical way; we will drink from a river of ancient insight that continues to flow from the Neo-Platonic reservoir of Western mystical yearning.

Jessica Moore Britt & Scott Layton

To guard against the hurts, fears, and confusion that sexual invasion of a child's physical and psychic boundaries can create, the child often abandons the place of conflict—the body. This withdrawal, though protective in nature, slowly begins to separate the child from her/his essential nature. This may be reflected in tension patterns, numbness, and oversensitivity and may further the child's sense of alienation from the world and self.

During these seven days, participants will move gently toward reintegrating their bodies and feelings with self. They will use gestalt practice, Reichian breath work, movement, touch, and meditation to reenter their private world of memories and feelings. They may gain a deeper understanding that the learned idea of self as bad, based on the sexual abuse, is not the essential truth of who they are. The focus will be on allowing the hurt, negative feelings and doubts to be acknowledged, felt, and used as energetic seeds for reawakening a positive sense of self. Through the supportive group atmosphere, participants may discover that it is safe once again to embody beauty, life, and love.

Advanced Enneagram Intensive

Helen Palmer

The enneagram is an ancient psychological typology that describes nine personality types and their interrelationships. Each type is defined by a chief mental and emotional preoccupation to which attention habitually returns. The types correlate well with the current categories of psychological practice, but can open us to the fact that the repeating preoccupations of heart and mind that we in the West tend to dismiss as merely neurotic can also be used as access points into states of awareness like empathy, omniscience, and love.

Beginning with a review of the nine types, this workshop will focus on advanced material that can best be understood through oral teaching methods. These include learning to recognize type by listening to the differences in people's stories, by learning to ask key questions, and by paying attention to one's own internal impressions when in the presence of the different types.

This program is for those who are already familiar with the nine personality types and who wish to broaden their understanding of the system. It is intended for anyone who is interested in: recognizing ways in which the nine types relate to each other in intimate partnership and in work-related settings; determining strategies for working with the types; developing competency with the patterns of attention that support each type; gaining an understanding of the higher human abilities that can develop from working with the issues of type. This intensive can be applied as one of the requirements for the Enneagram Professional Training Program.

Fourth of July Week: Language of the Drums with Babatunde Olatunji and Ijalu Akanbe, Yao Tamakloe

& Gordy Ryan

Nigerian musician Babatunde Olatunji has been bridging the gap between American and African culture for thirty years. In this workshop he will show how drum sounds and rhythms communicate, stimulate, and pace the activities of traditional African life. He will teach the consonants of the Yoruba language, reproducing its sounds on drums and through chants, body percussion, and dance.

This workshop is for dancers, percussionists, musicians, and anyone who wants to speak the language of the drums. Drummers can experience the dance and dancers can experience the drums. Bring a drum if you have one.

Please note: This has always been a popular workshop, with lots of people drumming and dancing in a small area. The energy runs high; please be prepared for a crowded, exuberant atmosphere.

Olatunji and his ensemble will extend their stay through the weekend. Please see July 6-8. $630

Preparing for the 21st Century: The Teacher as Warrior

Betty Halpern, Patricia Monighan-Nourot, Lia Thompson-Clark & Janet Lederman

Essential issues to be considered in this seminar on teacher development include: how to create an environment that supports confidence, competence, and compassion; the role of play in the curriculum (play and aggression; play and gender roles; play and age); how teachers can advocate for children (working with families and the community); the teacher as warrior or the teacher as wimp: developing leadership in your own setting; professionalism and relationships between staff and administrators.

Lectures, discussion, role-playing, experiential exercises, and observation at Gazebo School/Park (Esalen's children's center) will be some of the strategies used. This workshop is designed for teachers and administrators in any school setting. $630

Personal Trance: Hypnotic Skills for the Everyday World

Norman Katz & Marc Lehrer

To become a master of personal trance requires a skillful interplay between the conscious and unconscious aspects of the self. Developing focused attention, relaxation skills, and the use of suggestion in everyday life is integral to this process. This seminar teaches how to use common shifts of consciousness to help with personal problems, habit patterns, sports and physical movement, creativity, and pain reduction, and to reinforce positive changes in these areas.

Participants will use structured inductions, humor, play, music, and storytelling to shift from one trance state to another, to recognize how others influence one's trance, and to reframe situations for optimum solutions and well-being. They will practice hypnotic skill-training, visualization, self-induction, regression, and communication methods in the Ericksonian tradition. $630

July 1–8

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting—to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants are given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary.

For further information about this workshop, contact: The Painting Experience Studio, 2101 20th Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94116; (415) 564-8515.

Coming to Our Senses: The Emergence of a Somatic Civilization

Morris Berman

This seminar is an attempt to understand individual identity, and the culture of which it is a part, by moving back and forth between personal experience and cultural analysis. There is a meeting point between private history and the larger drama of Western civilization, and it is this intersection that participants will seek to explore. Themes will include the nature and sources of creativity and the integration of individual psychological development with the evolution of Western consciousness. Historical material will be analyzed through lecture and discussion; personal experience will be explored via meditation, dream work, and writing exercises. Bring a notepad and pen.

Babatunde Olatunji & Ensemble

Through storytelling, chanting, and learning African rhythms in drumming and dancing, children will work toward a performance guided by Babatunde Olatunji and his ensemble of musicians and dancers who teach musical ritual worldwide.

Olatunji's message is more than musical; it carries a dedication for the future: "We hope that children's programs will become the concern of all who work diligently for a peaceful world, full of love, for those who take our places tomorrow. Omelere—children are the reward of life."

Coordinated by Lia Thompson-Clark and Ivy Mayer, this workshop is open to children whose parents are attending a concurrent seminar. $300

On Being Good Enough

Heather Maycock-Ogilvy

Being a good enough parent, a good enough therapist, a good enough teacher, or a good enough spouse is an art not a science, a creative endeavor that must be entered into with an open mind and an open heart. This workshop offers no detailed instructions or rules but rather encouragement to develop an empathy with those with whom we would be—not perfect—but good enough.

Problem situations in love or work, childhood memories, dreams, and guided imagery will serve as material for the work. Psychodrama will be part of the process as will discussion, massage, play, and meditation.

Trance, Dance, and Dreams

Paul Carter

Wisdom is the intelligence of the system as a whole.—Gregory Bateson

Connecting with one's personal source of creativity and support is essential in these increasingly complex times. This workshop will offer tools for retrieving those personal resources.

Meditation and self- and mutual hypnosis methods will be reviewed and practiced for those with little or no formal trance experience. Movement and sound will be used to deepen trance, to draw out knowledge that the body stores, and to embody creative healing processes. Dream work will help each person recover buried powers, shadow parts, and wholeness, and to generate solutions, actions, and ideas beyond the imagination. Personal as well as collective themes will be developed into healing rituals.

Each day will include movement, dancing, drawing, guided meditation, trance dreaming, communication/integration exercises, and focusing. Participants are asked to bring an 18" X 24" drawing pad and pastels. $630

Zero Balancing: Basic I and II

Fritz Smith

Zero balancing is a simple method for aligning the body structure and energy field. The structural/energetic interface of the body is beneath conscious awareness, and when imbalances occur at this level, the body tends to compensate around them rather than resolve them directly. This often leads to loss of vitality, chronic body pain, and lessened potential for vibrant health. Zero balancing assists in overcoming these patterns of imbalance.

In this workshop, traditional anatomy, physiology, and kinesiology will be reviewed, and Eastern concepts of chi energy, its movement in the body, and the chakra system will be discussed. The system of zero balancing will then be presented, including specific guidelines for evaluating and balancing the structural/energetic interface in the body. The workshop will be both didactic and experiential, with the main emphasis on new skills in body handling. This is an accredited program toward zero balancing certification.

A Confluent Somatic Approach

Steven Vazquez

This workshop is about the nuances involved when illness, injury, or pain become resolved beyond the conventional expectations of medical science. Information from people who beat the odds of recovery from "terminal" illness, "incurable" diseases, or difficult injuries will be reviewed. The role of belief, attitudes, and relationships in affecting the body will be experientially explored.

This confluent somatic approach synthesizes medical research, cross-cultural concepts, ancient spiritual practices, and modern psychology. It combines methods drawn from Ericksonian hypnosis, Focusing, and family systems theory with hands-on work to reduce physical symptoms. Abstract concepts like state-dependent memory, psychoneuroimmunology, and chakra systems are broken down into practical applications.

Workshop material will be experiential and didactic. Processes for tracking unconscious personal myths that underlie medical conditions will be demonstrated. Complex medical jargon, psychological processes, and esoteric energy methods will be simplified into functional uses that can affect health recovery in conventional psychological and medical settings.

Body Rejuvenation

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is to start to rejuvenate the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body. Transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain. You will then have changed the despondent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat one.

The recipe for how to begin to rejuvenate a body in one session will be demonstrated to the group, and then experienced and performed by each participant.

This seminar is recommended for everyone. The older you are, the more stuff you have to work with. Class size is limited (two students per table). Bring a swimsuit—two-piece for women.

Five Days with Claudio Naranjo

Widely known as a theorist of "the ways of growth," Chilean psychiatrist Claudio Naranjo is a teacher, therapist, and community builder with a background in psychoanalytic and psychedelic therapy. He came to California in the mid-60s, received gestalt training from Perls and Simkin, and later became a member of the first Esalen gestalt team. He has taught at UC and Nyingma Institute. Among his books are The One Quest and The Psychology of Meditation.

During these five days, he will offer spiritual and psychological exercises—such as doing nothing in silent immobility and being oneself among others—as well as time for talking about "what it is all about," for deepening self-insight, for contemplation, and for subtle sensing. $630

The Body and Zen

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is twofold: 1) to use body work methods and principles for releasing tension, trauma, and toxins from connective tissue; and 2) to circulate the vital energy in an aligned body. The group will draw from Rolfing® (structure), Feldenkrais® (function), and Zen (energy), to obtain these goals.

This is a hands-on workshop. Participants will give and receive body work and will learn methods to recognize, work with, and relieve some types of chronic muscle pain. The class will be limited in size (two people per table). Participants are asked to bring a swimsuit—two-piece for women.

Therapeutic Aims in Psychotherapy and Meditation

Jack Engler

In recent decades, many spiritual approaches to psychological suffering have come to our shores or have been revived within our Western tradition. They compete with our own psychotherapies and have become for many individuals treatments of choice. This is particularly true for systems of meditation, which count many conventionally-trained therapists and mental health professionals among their practitioners. Yet, there is confusion as to the aims, methods, and problems these practices address and whether they overlap with those of conventional psychotherapy or are about something quite different.

This workshop addresses this issue and is for those wrestling with it: practitioners of a spiritual tradition who are in psychotherapy or considering it; individuals in therapy who are wondering if meditation would also be helpful; and meditation teachers and psychotherapists who would like to know what the other discipline is about, when it is and isn't appropriate, or who are attempting to integrate them both in their work.

Participants will undertake this exploration on theoretical and practical levels, sharing case histories and examples from their own clinical and meditative practices. Study will be along four developmental lines: body image, affect, self-structure, and the representational world. Each day will begin and end with a period of guided meditation; for those who do not have a practice, this will be an opportunity to learn basic practice in one classical tradition.

The leader's perspective will be psychodynamic and based on object relations theory. He will take Buddhist Vipassana (insight) meditation as representative of mindfulness practice and Theravada Buddhist Abhidhamma as representative of meditative psychology. $630

To make effective, creative choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set—the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressures of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

In this week, participants will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and bouyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $630

Seeing with New Eyes: Developing Psychic Sight Through Compassion™

Elizabeth Stratton

As newborns we see the world "as it is." As we grow, we are taught by parents, education, and the media to see the world through pre-accepted belief systems. Our natural psychic clarity dims, and we can no longer see the truth of who or what is right in front of us. Reclaiming and developing our natural psychic sight necessitates stripping away these veils of illusion and seeing the world and people in it through the eyes of compassion.

This training in psychic development teaches how to see with clarity and compassion. Participants will be shown how to reopen and trust their natural gifts of clairvoyance, clairsentience, clairaudience, and telepathy. Specially designed exercises will enable them to: communicate with someone mind-to-mind at a distance; see into a person's childhood, including the accompanying trauma, loss, or pain that creates who they are today; see and interpret symbols, images, colors and auras; use inner sight to scan the physical body for signs of stress and disease; tap into the unconscious for healing purposes.

Designed for everyone who would like to see life and others with more clarity and compassion, these two days are of special value to health professionals who would like to see beyond the labels and directly into the hearts of the people in their care.

Hypnosis, Suggestion, and Visualization for Children

Marc Lehrer

This seminar, suitable for health professionals, teachers, and parents, will introduce ways of using hypnosis, suggestion, and visualization with children at home and in professional settings. Topics will include how hypnosis with children differs from hypnosis with adults, learning development and disability, pain control, asthma, enuresis, and self-esteem. There will be exercises and discussion about how to integrate these methods into therapies, school, and family interactions, with examples for family bonding in pregnancy, creating security in early infant development, and providing a positive learning environment at home. Hypnotic puppetry, storytelling, and challenge inductions for work with non-compliant or uninvolved children will also be presented.

Marc Lehrer specializes in hypnosis and biofeedback with children and adults. He was on the faculty of the Child Study Unit at UCSF Medical School, is a member of the International Teaching Faculty of the Milton Erickson Foundation, and is Dean of Academic Instruction for the California Institute of Clinical Hypnosis and Health Sciences. A clear understanding of human anatomy, especially the relationship between bones, muscles, and connective tissue, is essential to the massage practitioner. This course provides an appreciation of this difficult and often-neglected dimension of body work. The leaders will translate confusing terminology into straightforward and understandable language through the use of anatomy charts, skeletons, clay modeling, living models, brief lectures, demonstrations, and individual instruction. Through hands-on practice of sports massage, deep tissue, and Esalen massage, participants will hopefully come to understand the living body in a new and creative way.

Caretakers of Wonder: The Accuracy of Aesthetic Insight

Mel Bucholtz

An awareness of beauty, wonder, and enchantment restores purpose and direction for the creation of a meaningful life. It also addresses and helps resolve problematic and distressing issues in one's life.

This workshop will: 1) introduce participants to an experience of wonder as the animating element in life; and 2) practice ways in which one shepherds wonder into the world. Accepting the notion that it has been placed in their trust, each trustee, or caretaker, then ushers wonder into the world.

With such learnings, we re-inherit our sensibilities and are vitalized by the new meaning they bring to awareness. The quality of attention which unfolds is that of enriched being, animating all the communities that sustain and create life. $630

Touching Spirit: Dimensions of Psychic Healing™

Elizabeth Stratton

Psychic healing bridges the physical and the spiritual. Touching as a healing act has been practiced through recorded history by practitioners of the sacred as well as the secular: healers, shamans, priests, doctors, and mothers. In the past ten years, physics and modern medicine have come to an acknowledgment of the radically relational nature of our universe. Nothing and no one functions in a void.

Human emotions affect the functioning of the body, and illness is often an outgrowth of this mind-body link. Semi-dissociative states that are induced by prayer, meditation, and trance have been found to provide a fertile ground for healing to take place. It has been discovered that "multiple personalities" exhibit different states of health in each personality. The placebo effect has become one of the most respected and well-studied issues in healing today.

A psychic healer is one who can help connect the physical, emotional, mental, and spiritual levels of another person's being with healing intention through the use of touch. This workshop will explore, both didactically and experientially, the sacred and secular uses of touch, modern theories of disease formation and healing mechanisms, the use of psychic sight in healing, forgiveness as transformational cleansing, and the channeling of healing energy through the laying on of hands.

Participants in this workshop will be instructed in basic concepts of the polarity system as applied to the human energy field through the medium of massage. Emphasis will be on theory, polarity points and counterpoints, energy balancing methods, nutrition, and polarity yoga. Developing a sense of humor while learning will be an important part of the weekend.

We will discuss the math, sing the music, and search for the interconnections. A mythic experience to clear your mind and find your voice. $325

How Do I Love Thee, Let Me Count the Ways

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared—by their family backgrounds or society—to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $325

Healing the Healer:
A Workshop for Physicians and Nurses

Peter Finkelstein

Working in the field of medicine brings the practitioner into contact with sorrow and death. Although health care providers accumulate great emotional burdens, many do not pay enough attention to staying whole, integrated, non-depressed while doing this work. Often, in fact, institutional arrangements foster the opposite: isolation, dehumanization, withdrawal. It remains for the practitioner to find a personal approach in which to process sorrow, frustration, and fear wisely and well.

The central exercises in this workshop will be the telling of critical narratives from the world of medicine. Each participant will tell the story of an unusually powerful clinical event, with the focus on the telling, that is, telling the story well, fully inhabiting it in all its dimensions. Group members will then discuss the story—what it reveals about medical work and what it reveals about the teller. Guided imagery, dream interpretation, hypnosis, didactic material, and group process may all be used to deepen the experience.

Because the professional environment can make trust among colleagues difficult, special attention will be given to creating a setting of trust and to understanding the properties of such settings. Written exercises may be used. Enrollment will be limited to 12 people.

How Hungry Am I
and For What:
A Workshop for ACAs

Mariah Fenton Gladis

The road to recovery for adult children of alcoholics and others whose parents have been dysfunctional or abusive is challenging and can be deeply rewarding. It requires determination, lifelong commitment, and positive experiences. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health. Group members will work toward transforming their personal histories from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom, focusing on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of chronic trauma.
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries.
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation toward stability and abundance.
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

The workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals working with ACAs.

The Subtle Self in Motion

Judy Blackstone

This workshop offers subtle, concentrated work to help participants truly inhabit their bodies. Mind-breath-body exercises will be used to awaken consciousness of the inner depths of the body, to attune to the emotional underpinnings of bodily tensions, and to release the bound energy of old pain.

The personal themes which emerge from this work will be explored verbally in a supportive group setting and in a free movement class for the expression of nonverbal experience. There will be daily meditation practice as well as sound and visualization exercises for penetrating to the core of the body-mind, to a level of unified awareness. Through this unbroken contact with the self, participants may discover the joy, health, and spontaneity of their essential nature. This workshop will not be physically taxing; the emphasis will be on introspective work. $630

The memories and emotions stored in the body can result in energy blocks and imbalances. Through exercises designed to contact, release, transform, and balance these cellular patterns, participants can freely explore their innate healing potential. The atmosphere is one of acceptance, caring, and laughter, encouraging participants to move toward integration, empowerment, freedom, and new possibilities.

Participation in this workshop will fulfill one of the requirements for acceptance into the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Training Program.

- Loving and fighting: dancing with one's shadow
- Styles of fighting: overt and covert
- Intimate enemies, past and present
- Gender, sexuality, and aggression

- Personal and communal spaces: boundaries and lack of them
- The importance of fair fighting in creative relationships $325

Writing and the Act of Creation

George Leonard

Participants will be encouraged to break through ego-barriers and cultural conditioning that inhibit expression. In so doing, they will have a chance to experience the creativity that is inherent in all of life. There will be little in the way of theoretical discussion and no critiques of past works. Simple movement exercises will serve to reduce stress, free the mind, and focus the will. Participants will have the opportunity to write furiously in the here and now and to get immediate feedback. Before the weekend has passed, they in all probability will have completed a short article or fictional work and will have experienced some of the joys and heartaches that accompany publication. Bring pencils, pens, or portable typewriters—and plenty of paper.

Images of Fire: Poetry, Creativity, and Personal Passion

David Whyte

This five-day workshop will look at the more intimate and fiery aspects of personal artistry, in particular the relationship between the written word and the rhythms of speech and breath. Participants will work with radical inner and outer journeys, moving to the place of their own passions and creativity. Through the great poets and their poetry, through myth, story, music, silence, and the willingness to look at their lives afresh, they will perhaps discover that center and the wisdom that springs from it. It will be a time to trust bodily experiences as possible doors to a fuller and more creative life.

Hypnotic Innovations: Investigations in Living, Using Ericksonian Hypnosis

Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

In the moment before a new idea unfolds, our attention becomes so fully focused that time seems to disappear. Perhaps, without quite realizing it, we forget where we are and what's around us. These spontaneous states are the stuff out of which hypnotic experience unfolds and through which unconscious possibilities take form. In this workshop, participants will investigate the hypnotic approaches developed by Milton Erickson and the systemic principles generated from Gregory Bateson's research in communication. They will explore how unconscious processes can be mobilized to creatively disrupt limiting life patterns, to organize innovative behaviors outside the range of normal conscious controls, and to more fully optimize their current living and work situations. Structured trance experiments and discussion will support the week's work.

This workshop may be of special interest to those in the helping professions as well as managers who want to expand their frames of reference and extend their understanding of Ericksonian hypnosis and communication skills. $630

Living Dance

Anna Halprin & Allan Stinson

Dance, in early times, was the mother of all art forms and a way for people to connect with the natural world, integrate as a community, and affirm personal and tribal values. Ancient peoples expressed the most important experiences of life not with external materials, but with their own bodies. They danced to make sense of the mysteries of their existence—to celebrate victory, mourn loss, bring rain, initiate the young. Today, in an everyday world set apart from nature, people still need to tap into the deep sources of their bodies, moving and dancing to renew, inspire, teach, create, heal.

CHRISTIAN JOACHIM BARCHETTA

Through an approach Anna Halprin calls the Life/Art Process, participants will create dances from their own lives, deepening their life experience through expanded art expression. This workshop will range from structured practice to spontaneous, dramatic, and zany group interactions. Visualizations, music, and outdoor environments will be incorporated.

Men and women with diverse backgrounds and a sense of humor are welcome. Potential students for the Tamalpa Trainings may find this a valuable orientation. For information on recommended reading and videotapes, contact Tamalpa Institute, P.O. Box 794, Kentfield, CA 94914. $630

Weekend of August 10–12

A Weekend with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $325

The Kabbalah: Doorway to the Inner World

Edward Hoffman

For more than 2,000 years, adepts of the Kabbalah, the Jewish mystical tradition, have explored the nature of the human mind and its vast potential. They have addressed in considerable detail such intriguing topics as dreams, meditation, altered states of consciousness, the mind-body unity, and how to awaken one's higher capabilities. In recent years, a true renaissance of interest in the Kabbalah has occurred. Throughout the world, men and women are discovering the wisdom and power of this ancient system of knowledge.

This workshop will combine information and experiential methods to make personally relevant the Jewish mystical approach to the inner world. It will examine specific concepts and methods from the Kabbalah as they relate to the transformational paradigm emerging in Western psychology. The traditional Kabbalistic emphasis on developing "kavvanah" (intentionality) and imagination will be highlighted. $325

Therapeutic Touch

Janet Quinn

Therapeutic Touch (TT) is an approach to healing which can be learned by anyone with the intent to help. It is a derivative of the laying-on of hands, but need not be practiced within a religious framework. It is a tool for actualizing the innate healing capacities of both recipient and provider. TT has been taught to over 20,000 nurses nationally and abroad, as well as to lay people with an interest in healing.

The practitioner of TT embarks on a journey to empower the healer she/he already is and, in the process, to be healed. The work of remembering how to care, how to connect in unconditional love, and how to heal is seen as the only hope for personal, community, and planetary survival.

This workshop will explore the scientific, theoretical, and clinical foundations of TT. It will blend didactic and experiential learning into a balanced, grounded approach to this new version of an ancient healing art.

Imagery: Exploring the Body/Mind Bridge

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

The imagination is a perennial, yet newly celebrated, healing resource. It is a bridge between body and mind, a manifestation of the human spirit. The image forms the creative juices and allows transcendence.

This workshop will explore, beyond the confines of modern medicine and psychology, the potent realm of imagination as healer. The potential for self- and transpersonal healing will be experienced through sound, image, meditation, and other tools to shift consciousness. A rationale for the use of mind in the crisis of illness will be given, using information on the forefront of science.

The presenters, pioneers in the study and practice of imagery, will introduce their ideas, practices, and visions for the future. The workshop may be of interest to persons who are working or studying in the health professions and to those who are confronted with chronic or catastrophic illness.

Body Mind Centering: An Introduction

Janice Geller

This developmental movement work, created by Bonnie Bainbridge Cohen, is an experiential approach to the body based on physiological, psychological, and developmental principles.

Developmental movement can be broken into a series of patterns along a continuum. Human infant developmental patterns (ontogeny) closely parallel the evolutionary patterns of the animal kingdom (phylogeny). In this workshop participants will explore their individual developmental histories and trace their evolutionary origins.

Much of a person's alignment, coordination, and perception is determined by the sequence of movement patterns from conception through birth and on to crawling, creeping, and walking. Everyone passes through this foundation of human movement, yet each in a different way, according to genetics and social, physical, and emotional factors. This evolutionary sequence, however, is often interrupted by trauma, resulting in inefficient and stressful development of the neuromuscular system. This is reflected in alignment and movement difficulties, and blocks in perceptions, emotions, learning, and memory. By re-experiencing these early patterns, it is possible to fill in the gaps in our development and repattern body and awareness to facilitate the unwinding of current problems at their root level. $325

Following the Thread, Revealing the Fabric

David Silverstein & Joyce Lyke

Many people go through life either ignoring, judging, or rejecting their inner experiences rather than allowing them to exist and unfold. Such conditioning can lead to a numbing of awareness or detachment from others. However, by attending to whatever is emerging in the moment, one can follow the thread of inner experience, unraveling life's conditioning to reveal that which is most essential, the fabric of one's Being.

This workshop will combine meditation, breath exercises, sound, massage, movement, and ritual for a week of inquiry. Through awareness practice, participants can work or play with whatever emerges. They will be invited to explore a range of possibilities, from emotional experiences to more subtle states of awareness.

Transitions

Elliot Waker Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg

Disorganization is a natural part of transition and facilitates reorganization. People are almost constantly in a state of transition—whether it be getting married, beginning a new career, becoming a parent, letting go of a relationship, or moving on to the next stage in the life cycle. These changes can be exciting and, at the same time, can evoke a loss of internal balance. The result can be loss of self-esteem, confusion about one's identity, and doubts about one's perceptions. New feelings and ideas are fragile during these periods of transition and require special nurturance.

The goal of this workshop is to gain perspective on the process of making transitions. Through guided fantasies, self-exploration, and didactic presentations, participants may develop ways of enhancing their understanding of themselves and increasing their overall effectiveness.

A Weekend with David Schiffman

The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning. $325

The Language of Psychotherapy

Peter Finkelstein

Although much psychotherapy relies on the spoken word for both the patient's account and the therapist's commentary, little attention has been paid to the impact of language on the therapeutic process. This workshop will use written and spoken accounts of transformational experiences to refine our sense of how language helps or obstructs the healing process. The starting point will be Bruno Bettelheim's pointed discussion of the mistranslation of Freud, which has so colored psychoanalytic discourse in this century.

Love in Russia

Victor Yerofeev

What's happening to love during this time of perestroika? Discussing the problems of love is no longer taboo. Soviet newspapers and magazines are writing about sexual problems. This is a real revolution. It is an explosion which will unquestionably change the Soviet mentality almost as much as criticism of Lenin or the publication of the Gulag Archipelago. One might even say that it will change that mentality to the point where it will cease to be Soviet.

This workshop will deal with the philosophic, literary, religious, and artistic roots of Russian love. Discussion of prehistory of pagan love in Russian popular culture will be included, as will music, film, and dance. $325

Zero Balancing: Advanced Workshop

Fritz Smith

This workshop is open only to people who have completed at least one introductory zero balancing program. After reviewing basic concepts, the leader will answer specific questions and give individual instruction as needed. New work will include: direct perception and assessment of energy currents in the body; refinement of evaluating and balancing the foundation joints; and discussion of nonfoundation joints, including the small joints of the body. Theory will be clarified by demonstration and through individual practice, with participants using each other as models.

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will be to enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder of meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and movement are one." $630

Chakra Psychology

Nancy Rosanoff

This course is designed for health professionals who want to incorporate a practical understanding of the chakra energy system in their work. This subtle system will be introduced, with the focus on useful ways the chakras can be applied to self-understanding and self-development.

Chakras are points where energy is assimilated into the whole system of body, mind, and spirit. Through the chakras it is possible to integrate and heal various aspects of the self and experience the spectrum of energy from spirit to physical reality. Working with the chakras is a step toward a spiritual psychology in which the unfolding of the self and one's life is understood as part of a greater whole.

Participants will explore how the chakras can be used to deepen their understanding of self-esteem, self-healing, past lives, behavior patterns, personal energy management, relationship patterns, goal-setting, their purpose in life, and more. $630

Healing the Wounded Heart: The Art of Re-bonding

George Kohlrieser

From cradle to grave, life involves a changing script of "affectional bonds." These bonds are different from dependency and are essential for growth, health, and happiness. Attachment theory is a way to conceptualize the tendency of humans (and other mammals) to make strong affectional bonds with particular others, a way to explain many forms of physical, emotional, and spiritual distress, including emotional detachment, depression, and burnout. Life energy is connected to the quality and depth of emotional bonding.

This experiential workshop will focus on the patterns of forming, maintaining, breaking, and renewing affectional bonds. Methods include guided affective imagery, emotional release, group process, and bonding work to understand, create, and celebrate positive emotional attachments.

The Moving Center

Gabrielle Roth

This is an introduction to Gabrielle Roth's method of self-exploration through self-expression. Rooted in a contemporary, vigorous, cathartic form of dance, this approach provides a context for an intense, personal dialogue between spirit and flesh. This dance-form is organized into a practice that can be taken home and integrated into daily life as a meditation. It is also a workout, one that connects a person to their power and spontaneity, recharges vitality, releases emotions, and liberates a natural style of moving and dancing. Be prepared to move and be moved. $325

Creative Bonding: Changing Destructive Detachment

George Kohlrieser

Recent medical and psychological research validates the idea that "no man is an island" and that bonding behavior to people, pets, places, things, and goals is central to physical, psychological, and spiritual well-being. Disruption in the bonding-grieving cycle can lead to destructive detachment, victimization, and chronic loneliness which can shorten one's life and limit the quality of genuine aliveness.

Through presentations, guided imagery, emotional release, and group process, participants may explore, reinforce, or establish new and more effective ways to keep bonding alive.

Burnout: Causes and Cures

Elliot Waker Aronson & Ayala Pines

This workshop is designed for people who give service to others and who are experiencing burnout. It deals with the impact of burnout on both the service provider and the client, ways of finding and recognizing support resources on the job, and positive methods of dealing with burnout and life tedium. Through lectures and group discussions, participants will have the opportunity to increase their understanding of those aspects of their own work and life which could cause burnout. In addition, they will be provided with the tools and opportunity to learn how to handle these problems in order to increase the productivity and creativity of their relationships with clients and colleagues.

Heartbeat is a shamanic journey into shadow country, into the land of forgotten feelings. It is a journey to reclaim the power of loving—yourself, others, and the planet we inhabit. The work is about the heart—your heart. Come and dance to its beat. $630

Mid-Life Transition as Spiritual Emergence

Karen Turner

Participants in this workshop will view mid-life transition in the framework of spiritual emergence and renewal: a time when old systems the individual has used as foundations seem stripped away, leaving chaos and challenging long-held beliefs. It is a time of deep soul-searching; of confronting both inflated and deflated self-concepts; of surrendering to deeper, more expanded states of awareness and inner guidance. This involves issues of "specialness" and feelings of separation both from the Godhead within and from fellow humans. Tools for self-exploration and awareness will be presented, with time for discussion and sharing. $630

An Intimate Community: Caring and Conflict

Joel Dweck Isaacs, Anne Clark Isaacs (Ruderman) & Mark Ludwig

Feelings give self-knowledge, depth, and pleasure, especially when they flow freely; relating to others is most gratifying when these feelings are expressed openly and directly. This workshop is an opportunity to explore this arena, for participants to touch deep, meaningful parts of themselves and strive for group interaction of the same quality. The risks taken in knowing and revealing oneself, participants and leaders alike, create an intimate community.

The leaders have worked together on-and-off for over a decade, sharing a commitment to relationship and community. Their training in numerous disciplines allows them to tailor each workshop to the needs and desires of the participants. They use Reichian emotional release, group process, play, nurturing, confrontation, and healing energy, and have an appreciation for the spiritual nature of self and relationship.

When asked to characterize intimate relationship, one of the leaders exclaimed, "It's heaven and hell!" This workshop aims toward easier access to heaven and shorter times in hell. $630

Survival, Service, and Healing

Jessica Moore Britt

This workshop is an invitation for professionals in the healing arts who have childhood sexual abuse in their own histories to come together in a supportive peer group.

Jessica Moore Britt has been in the healing profession for 20 years. Her background includes the work of Freud, Jung, Reich, Fritz Perls, and A.H. Almaas. As a survivor herself, she is particularly interested in the pessimistic tone many professionals have toward survivors, and in the significant effect psychologically-oriented body work has had on her own healing. She writes:

"I am interested in helping other professionals reframe their own abuse into an asset in their work. We will use object relations theory, Reichian work, gestalt, and spiritual practice to explore the places where we are stuck in our own healing as a model for being with others. My orientation is the reintegration of the body with the mind, heart, and soul/essence. I see my own sexual abuse and healing process as an integral part of my desire to help alleviate suffering in the world. Like many others, I have had no other choice. Survival, service, and healing walk hand-in-hand."

The Rebirth of Nature: New Science and the Revival of Animism

Rupert Sheldrake

Our civilization is currently based on a split attitude toward Nature. On weekdays, for most people, Nature is mechanistic and inanimate, the Earth just a repository of natural resources to be exploited for human ends. But on weekends and holidays, a different attitude prevails as millions "get back to Nature." In this romantic side of our being, Nature is alive and known through direct experience.

In this workshop, participants will examine the historical roots of this split and how recent developments in science are transcending the mechanistic theory of Nature. The universe is no longer a machine running down; the cosmos is more like a developing organism with an inherent memory, as is our planet, Gaia. This will be a weekend to explore consequences and implications of the revival of animism, for the greening of politics and economics, and for the resacralizing of Nature. $325

Discovering Your Myth: A Jungian Experience

John Nicholas

Meaninglessness inhibits the fullness of life and can, therefore, be equated with illness; meaningfulness makes a great many things endurable, perhaps everything.—C.G. Jung

To discover ourselves and the meaningfulness of our lives, we each must ask what Jung considered the most important question, What myth am I living? This will be a workshop in which to ask that question. Participants will recollect and reflect on the dreams of childhood, memories of ancestors, tales of heroes and heroines, personal victories and defeats, false turnings and fateful detours. Through a variety of creative processes, painting and drawing, guided imagery and active imagination, and especially storytelling, they will examine and express the archetypal patterns that have shaped and directed their lives. $630

Self-Acceptance Training: Basic

Richard Olney & Mari Krieger

This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. It is defined as "the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgment, self-criticism, or self-evaluation." The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual's relationship with the universe.

Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cognitive examination of the individual's "pretends" and illusions that obstruct self-acceptance. Limited to 25 people. $630

Action Theater: The Body as Teacher

Ruth Zaporah

We are born in our bodies; we are born actors. As children we know how to act, to express, to ritualize our feelings, thoughts, and fantasies. As we culturalize, we suppress our expressions until we are left with only a memory of knowing.

This workshop takes participants through a process of expressive expansion via improvisational theater and movement forms. It offers access to images behind feelings, revealing one's inner reality and the world between the cracks of human expression.

Action Theater exercises facilitate spontaneous movement while maintaining form.

This work generates clearly articulated images of the self as the body becomes teacher and the individual moves beyond personality toward spokesperson and archetype. Habit changes to choice, making it possible to experience states deep within the psyche. Thus, personal resources, material normally below the threshold of awareness, become the text for physical, verbal, and vocal imagery.

This workshop accommodates the novice, the explorer, and the practiced. $630

A Look Within

Jessica Moore Britt & Scott Layton

This will be a week for participants to attend to and explore themselves away from their usual busy lives. As they settle into the grandeur of Big Sur and the quiet within, they can begin to penetrate through their conditioned views of themselves and the world.

The point of inquiry will be the relationship of the mind, body, and emotions and the essential nature of the self. Participants will focus on understanding who and what they are, especially as beings of compassion, strength, will, power, joy, and presence. They will explore how their past conditioning and present beliefs block their awareness of these qualities in themselves. The tools for self-discovery will be an interplay of Eastern and Western practices, including Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, touch, movement, and Reichian/gestalt work. This time, dedicated to being present and looking within, holds the possibility for participants to open their perceptions so they might obtain a deeper appreciation for who they are.

Inner Sound and Voice

Jill Purce

This is a workshop of practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the Self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psychophysical effects of breathing, chanting, mantric and sonic meditations, learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance, to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other methods. $325

Touch and Texture: Clay and Massage

Peggy Morrison Horan & Alison Limoges

Clay is a marvelous, earthy substance; so is the human body. This workshop gives participants the opportunity to work with both. They will explore touch and texture through each medium, practicing basic methods of hand-building with clay and those needed to give a beneficial and pleasurable massage.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $630

Self-Acceptance Training: Advanced

Richard Olney & Leonard Bearne

This workshop is basically experiential, but time will also be given to theoretical and didactic considerations of interest to professional therapists. Please refer to September 2-7 for complete workshop description.

Please note: due to the time given to the didactic material in this advanced workshop, not everyone will have a chance to work personally with the leaders. $630

Recovery for Adult Children and Co-Dependents

Julie Bowden

This week-long journey will be a healing of the "child within" in an atmosphere of safety and respect. Experiencing and integrating the past allows us to live in the present, no longer tyrannized by previous pain and outmoded behaviors. We are freed to be more fully in relationship with ourselves and others. People in all stages of recovery are welcome, as are treatment providers. $630

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive

Ayala Pines

When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. Unfortunately, more often than not, with the dampening effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, and it is not caused by major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfactions, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find their own romantic schemata and to rekindle the romantic images they shared at the beginning of their relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive in their relationships and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

The Life Energy Process℠

Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process workshop is a spiritually-oriented approach to body work and lifestyle which allows individuals direct contact with the spiritual self through energy vibrations. This method is facilitated by specific intensive and subtle movements which participants may find open them to their own healing abilities, allowing them to release unfinished emotions, radiational and chemical toxins, and psychological disturbances. From that point of greater clarity, they may move to the next step in their personal development. Participants continue this energy work physically and verbally through process inquiry and dialogue with the leader as they examine the superficial trace problems of their everyday lives and explore their deeper energy disturbances through energy patterning.

Energetic forms of massage, dance, and theater may be included in this process. Some of the work will be individual, some will be hands-on with partners. The workshop may be of particular interest to professionals and laypersons alike who are excited by the integration of Eastern and Western methods with the new physics for personal, social, and organizational evolution.

The Feeling Process

Janet Zuckerman

For many people, feelings are something mysterious, something to keep to oneself, or something to think about. This workshop is about all the steps involved in learning to experience, respect, and honor one's feeling process in a way that can increase vitality and personal effectiveness. Participants may learn to separate feelings from thoughts, learn from their own body rhythms, learn to contact their own wisdom, and participate in the choice of expression or depression.

Fun with the Violin: For Adults Who Always Wanted to Play a Musical Instrument and Never Have

Diane Egli

For the adult who would like to play a musical instrument, but never had lessons as a child, or who used to play, but hasn't since childhood, this workshop could be just the opportunity to learn to play the violin—and have fun doing it. This will be a time for participants to increase their awareness of how it feels to learn a new skill—the challenge, the excitement, the frustration, and the success of accomplishment. Included in the workshop will be various activities to enhance violin playing, such as movement, music, and rhythm exercises.

Participants are asked to bring a tape recorder and tapes.

New Pathways in Human Evolution

Colin Wilson

Colin Wilson writes: "Soon after publication of The Outsider in 1956, I came to recognize that the underlying message of that book is that man is now on the point of an evolutionary breakthrough to a higher level of consciousness. In the years since then, this conviction has only increased. The question that has now come to preoccupy me is: are there disciplines or methods by which this process could be accelerated in the individual? Important clues are offered in the work of many 19th century romantics. In our own time, these have been developed by psychologists like Maslow and Jung, and philosophers like Husserl and Heidegger. My own work is an attempt to synthesize these many 'glimpses' into a unified body of knowledge, and to develop methods of using this knowledge to raise the level of consciousness in the individual. I believe that within a fairly short space of time—perhaps a mere generation—we shall see the emergence of a new type of human being, and that many people now alive may be the first to accomplish this breakthrough. $325

Mastery in Daily Life

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

We tend to assume that mastery is available only to those born with exceptional abilities. But mastery is not a goal or destination. It is a journey that every one of us can take, provided we have the right map. This workshop offers clear directions for the journey of mastery in whatever field you may choose. It will include discussion, demonstration, and movement exercises from Leonard Energy Training (LET) which emphasize mastery in daily life. For those familiar with LET, this workshop will present new material. Some of the topics to be addressed:

- Five keys to mastery
- How to avoid being a Dabbler, Obsessive, or Hacker
- Creating a vision
- The secrets of practice
- Staying balanced and centered on the path of mastery
- Avoiding pitfalls
- Playing the edge
- Loving the plateau
- Dealing with conflict
- Negotiating with change
- Staying on the path
- Getting energy from mastery

This workshop involves physical movement, but is not strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Shaman Sculpture: Making Objects of Empowerment

Nancy Azara

This workshop, which is inspired by shamanism, is for people who wish to explore their inner power and make artworks charged with that power.

Shamans believe that the universe has three levels—the sky, the earth, and the underworld—all connected by a central axis, the body. They use vision quests to gain access to these worlds, which are the source of healing and personal power. In this workshop, participants will use guided meditation to take this same journey, exploring the world of unseen reality and various aspects of their minds and spirits. The instructor will help each person identify and clarify the forms and images of his or her deeper self throughout their journeys. They will then make objects which embody these images, including charts, diagrams, and body casts, to be incorporated later in individual sculptures which will become their own power objects.

Participants are asked to bring the following materials: a box of Paris Craft plaster bandages, brushes and paints, scissors, mixing bowl, sketch pad, drop cloth, old clothing to wear and to use in their sculptures, and any other objects they would like to incorporate.

Journey to the Heart

Joseph Chilton Pearce

For the last three decades, Joseph Chilton Pearce has been synthesizing scientific brain research in physics, biology, and psychology in an effort to understand and map nature's plan for the development of human intelligence. He writes:

"The intelligence of the heart is the only force that can pull our fragments of self together; it is the nurturing power so many of us missed right from the beginning of life, that unconditional love which alone would have assured us of the evolutionary progress nature intended. That progress is nothing but the progression of love toward it's own source, and that source is the heart."

In this seminar, Pearce will share his findings on the three-part human brain and how each part has its own language, its own development cycle, its own purpose. He will talk about the difference between intellect and intelligence, the ego's inability to self-analyze, and the physiological connection between the heart and the brain that prevents our triurnal brain from being continually at war with itself.

Discourse, discussion, contemplation, and meditation will offer seminarians a glimpse of their own developmental cycle—where it was rich, where lacking—and acceptance of their own perfection, and tools for enriching the inner journey to their hearts. $325

Co

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

This is a workshop for people helpers. Everyone has seen duets in ballet in which the male dancer follows the prima ballerina, supporting her leaps and turns. Many human dyads are similar. One person is in the foreground while the other, the "co," accepts a background position. The concerns of the focal person come first. They define the relationship either by explicit agreement, as in psychotherapy and medicine, or implicitly, as in many marriages.

The focus acts; the co tracks. The focus makes a movement and the co, like a dance partner, adjusts. What the focus needs, the co provides. The co is receptive, responsive, attentive, enabling, facilitating.

Cos can be found nurturing the young and the frail elderly, ministering to the disturbed, nursing the sick, designing houses for the wealthy, and in many other situations throughout society. Sometimes these co relationships are a vocational choice and a charitable way of life. Sometimes, as with co-dependencies and co-alcoholics, they are dysfunctional and harmful.

We will spend the weekend studying, through group experiential exercises and discussions, when, where, why, and how to co, and the politics of both entering into and refraining from such relationships.

Behind the Mask: Turning Wounding into Creative Action

Elisa Lodge

Masks have long been known for their healing and transformative properties. They invite the wearer into dimensions of expressive behavior not ordinarily permitted in daily life. Behind the mask, people have a safe practice ground in which to experiment with body image, breath, voice, energy, and movement. As an expressive art form, this approach can benefit those in treatment programs or those looking for ways of growth and change. It provides a means for contrasting habitual, difficult ways of being with more heartfelt ones, and can help turn wounds and fears into resources for empathy and creative action.

This workshop will combine mask work with other expressive forms such as performance art and dance, and will include gestalt, psychosynthesis, and Rolf movement. It may be particularly valuable for those in the helping professions who wish to integrate these forms into their work with clients. $630

Freeing the Runner Within

Joan Ullyot

All of us, as human beings, are natural running animals. But civilization and technology combine to alienate us from this instinctive side of ourselves. Non-runners lament that they don't know how to run, while competitors puzzle over choosing the right training. This course is designed to take runners of all levels inward, to find and express the runner within, to free themselves to run easily and joyously, longer and faster.

In addition to group runs, discussions of training principles, and practice of methods such as hill-bounding, this workshop will include mental training exercises developed recently by sports psychologists. These include relaxation and guided imagery, affirmations, breathing and body awareness, race visualizations, and associative focusing. The inner confidence and athletic energies released by these methods can be harnessed to run a personal best in a fall marathon or simply to experience the beauty of a daily jog. Limited to 20 participants, to allow for work on individual goals. $630

Living Meditations

Judyth Weaver

In our busy lives we do so much—but how do we do it? Are we fully aware of our actions and the consequences of what we do? Are our actions as beneficial to ourselves as they could be? Are we as kindly to ourselves as we could be? Could our lives be easier or more energetically economical? What are we doing to/with ourselves, and how does that affect us and others, our health, our longevity, our relationships, work, well-being?

This workshop will give participants opportunities to "tune in" and become more aware of how they live on many levels. The workshop is experiential: through awareness of breath, self, interactions with others, and by focusing on everyday activities such as walking, standing, sitting, touching, giving, receiving, and the processing of what occurs when necessary, participants will be able to focus and develop a fuller sense of mindfulness.

This is direct study of one's experience and can provide a practice ground for change and knowledge of how to go about it. Such awareness of personal needs and desires can increase one's chances for becoming a fuller, more realized, and healthier human being.

History Ends in Green: Gaia, Psychedelics, and the Archaic Revival

Terence McKenna

From the Voynich manuscript to the villages of Ceram's forested interior, there are gentle, uncharted backwaters in the physical and intellectual world that can be a source of renewed vigor for thoughtful people caught in the meltdown of historical society. Author Terence McKenna brings his perspective to the idea of a spiritual path for each of us and an impending transformation of the human world that will involve everyone.

Participants will examine human attitudes toward the Other, discuss Time and its mysteries, the nature of language, and methods of ecstasy that have developed in non-Western societies to navigate to and from invisible worlds. The role of hallucinogenic plants will be discussed in depth—their role in shamanism and their impact on the evolution of human cultures and social forms. Other topics will include choices about spiritual development and the roles that each person may play in the unfolding of the post-historical future.

Global perspectives and psychedelic poetics begin with stories and talk of far places and the experiences that can take flower there. Share musings upon people, plants, cultural migrations, religious conversions, visions, conspiracies, and hierophanies. The aim will be another conjuration of philosophy as you like it. $325

Basic Esalen Massage

Char Pias Brenner & Arthur Munyer

Touch is a vital element in any human being's development. Yet, many people receive little physical contact or nurturing, and are often cut off from their body's abilities to sense. This may be due to social and religious mores, or perhaps just from living alone.

Massage can facilitate a process of unfolding. The method for this workshop will be basic Esalen massage, with emphasis on inner states of consciousness, presence, compassion, humor, nurturing, and receptivity. The leaders will incorporate breath awareness, movement, meditation, grounding, and centering to help participants revive body, mind, and spirit.

The Nature of Movement: Aikido and Wilderness

Steven Harper & Wendy Palmer

In this week-long workshop, participants will work indoors with energy awareness and principles derived from aikido, and outdoors on short day-hikes into Big Sur's backcountry to explore the movement that nature inspires. Both aikido and hiking are moving meditations which, when done well, require the individual to be in harmony with the natural world. There will be an opportunity to take what is learned on the aikido mat out into the natural world and bring what is learned from nature onto the aikido mat. Participants can then begin to integrate what they learn from aikido and from nature into their lives.

All evenings and most meals will be at Esalen. Participants need not have previous experience in aikido or hiking. $630

The Body as History

Lisbeth Marcher & Erik Jarlnaes

The workshop leaders are from Denmark, practitioners of a system of working with the body, of which Lisbeth Marcher is a founder. In this system, by gauging the tonicity of a muscle and knowing when and how it came into play in infant and childhood development, it is possible to "read" a precise psycho-history. Specific issues that are contained in these muscles can be reevoked as well. This system also works with the person's undeveloped resources, those abilities given up on and which often correspond to feelings of resignation. Bringing these resources into play encourages the individual to drop old, unfulfilling modes of protection.

This is an experiential workshop; participants will focus on body movement and energy, using them to bring about expression and integration of developmental stages. $630

The Call to Presence

Chlöe Goodchild

"The call" is the wisdom cry of the heart. Voice of an inner authority, it reveals the true nature of one's creative impulse and life direction. What is life calling you to?

Within a working context that integrates Indian-based voice and sound work, movement and self-observation, mystical texts and contemplative practices, participants will discover how to respond to their inner calling with attention and insight. This course may be of particular value to those already committed to a specific practice or art form and who wish to connect creative action with that silent presence, their inspirational source.

Participants are asked to bring a 2-10 minute presentation of their own design (a poem, song, theater piece, painting, etc.) which communicates their understanding of "the call" as it manifests in their life. Each person will have several opportunities to work with the leader in the presence of the group. $630

The Aesthetic Self

Luc Brebion

To take part in the experience of beauty, we must learn to contemplate. We must immerse ourselves in a work of art so that it opens and releases the substance it contains, so that we can be in the presence of the artist and bring him or her alive in us.

The Aesthetic Self workshop will use a multi-media approach to help people penetrate and be absorbed by a work of art. Participants will find themselves in the company of Johannes Vermeer, Marcel Proust, Jan van Eyck, Cesar Vallejo, Johann Sebastian Bach, and Raoul Dufy. $325

A Weekend with Muriel James

Religious text tells us, Life is suffering. Muriel James paraphrases this to, Suffering can be optional. Even in the midst of career, family, and a world that desperately needs our attention, suffering is not our moral imperative. In fact, joy, laughter, and determination might serve us better in responding to personal and global needs. Participants and the leader will explore this idea and others, including the notions of suffering and happiness in the context of therapy.

Muriel James, age 73, is a psychologist and author with a lifetime of careers that include work as a safety engineer in a World War II shipyard and as director of a residential treatment center for adolescents. She has recently returned to the university for further post-doctoral studies. $325

The Quantum Mechanics of Everyday Life

Nick Herbert

Quantum theory, our most up-to-date description of the physical world and the conceptual basis for computer chips, lasers, and superconductors, leads us to believe that atoms and other quantum entities dwell in a bizarre state of existence quite different from the stable world of the macrocosm. On the level of everyday life, quantum effects are imperceptibly small, but what of the world of the mind?

Reviewing basic quantum reality in a non-mathematical fashion, the leader and participants will explore the hypothesis that human consciousness is a quantum effect, reinterpreting familiar experiences and seeking new ones compatible with a quantum-based model of mind. Three key concepts to be examined in this context are freedom, ambiguity, and connectedness. $325

The Discipline of Harmony: Warrior Virtues Without War

Richard Strozzi Heckler

This seminar will examine the notions of aggression, initiation rites, courage, and risk-taking in the context of the warrior ideal. Does the discipline of harmony mean the taming of aggression? To live in peace do we also need to accept and understand violence? Is it possible to distinguish the warrior from war? Can the warrior virtues of courage, commitment, clarity, generosity, service, and skillful action be invoked without the catalyst of hostile fire?

These questions will be the starting point for a workshop conducted in the warrior spirit of "life at stake." Exercises taken from aikido, along with introspection, sharing, and guided meditations, will allow participants to experience the possibilities of embodying warrior virtues without war.

Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming

Stephen LaBerge

Lucid dreaming means dreaming while knowing that one is dreaming. The wakeful consciousness of this extraordinary state allows for creative responses to dreams and affords the opportunity to control them. This control gives the freedom to explore a remarkable range of possibilities, from indulging in one's wildest fantasies to following one's highest spiritual aspirations.

For most individuals, lucid dreams are as rare as the waking peak experiences to which they are analogous. This need not be so, and workshop participants will be shown how to develop the skill of lucid dreaming. They will have the opportunity to use a feedback device for the induction of lucid dreams. The device, called The Dreamlight™, consists of a sleep mask fitted with sensors and lights connected to a small box that causes the lights to flash during REM (dreaming) sleep. When the lights flash, the dreamer can remember that he/she is dreaming.

This workshop is intended for avid dreamers. It will include discussions and experiential demonstrations of the nature of consciousness and how individuals construct their perceptual worlds. Participants will be exposed to a variety of uses of lucid dreaming, including self-exploration, creative problem-solving, healing, adventure, and perhaps most important, a way of self-integration leading to the transpersonal realms.

Kenn Chase

This seminar will present a demonstration form of t'ai chi ch'uan, a shortened version derived from the classical Yang style, which contains 54 balanced, fluid, and graceful postures. Also included will be mind/body alignment methods, Chi Kung Taoist breathing methods, and hours of practice and refinement of the traditional t'ai chi movements. Practiced 5 to 10 minutes daily, this gentle martial art can calm the mind and aid the student in achieving a centered perspective for daily living in a busy world.

The Heart of the Matter: The Core Self

Ronald Alexander & Bruce Gregory

Resources for healing, such as spontaneity, curiosity, trust, creativity, and joy, are found in the core self. Time also heals and helps activate these resources. This workshop will assist participants in their process of healing and offer ways to repattern dysfunctional behaviors connected to living, working, loving, and relating.

The goals of this work are: to become free of constraints and self-images of the past; to become conscious in the present moment; to communicate well; to become quiet; to develop a cohesive personal vision. The tools will include gestalt practice, microanalysis of mind, body process, metaphor, and Vipassana (insight) meditation.

The Human Element in Organizations

Will & Ailish Schutz

Advances in understanding human behavior and relationships forged in the 1960s and '70s have provided needed insight and methods for corporate America. Studies on the body and energy converged with discoveries from psychological and spiritual disciplines to form the basis for a more profound approach to running our nation's organizations. The timing is fortunate, since the decline in this country's organizational effectiveness (compared to that of many Asian and European countries) is becoming precipitous.

This seminar combines insights from the human potential movement with scientific approaches to management. Over the past decade it has been used to improve productivity in such American organizations as Procter & Gamble, AT&T, NASA, and Amdahl, and in Japan, Sweden, Italy, and Mexico. For the first time it is being offered at Esalen to members of top management who wish to try out this fresh, innovative approach.

Non-Adversarial Child Care: The Continuum Concept in Practice

Jean Liedloff

For parents, parents-to-be, and baby and child care professionals, this seminar will examine the true meaning of sociality as an innate characteristic of homo sapiens. Drawing upon her years of living with Stone Age Indians in South America's jungles, the leader propounds an approach neither punitive nor permissive that takes into account the generally unrecognized expectations and abilities inherent in our young.

Why do babies and children so often seek attention they don't need? Why do we see tots in underdeveloped countries and cultures following their parents and helping them with chores so early, while ours are frequently chased and tended, opposed, tolerated, and socialized for nerve-wracking, guilt-laden, unappreciated decades of drudgery and sacrifice ending in one degree or another of alienation?

As professor Robert Aldrich of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development said, "Basic things about human nature we forget or ignore at our peril."

The Yoga of Business

Tama Starr

Many people confront the same worldly dilemma: how to optimize success without betraying their ideals. This workshop suggests that, in a holistic universe, the same principles apply to walking the canyons of Wall Street as climbing the peaks of the Himalayas. Participants—whether artists, business professionals, blue or white collar workers—will see how to apply the tenets of yoga, t'ai chi, and gestalt to the workplace.

Themes to be explored include: the nature of Maya (business, wealth, and the American Dream); game theory (the win-win situation); success (how to deal with failure); the art of war (Krishna, Sun Tsu, Musashi, Machiavelli, Muhammad Ali); strategies and tactics (the art of survival). Practical studies and exercises will include: elementary mind-reading; "invisible yoga"; the use of myth and magic; methods of leadership (managing others through managing yourself); the uses of stress and conflict; developing "the path with heart."

Participants will emerge with usable tools for building a more fulfilling future.

Metaphors We Live By

George Lakoff

Metaphor is the means by which we understand what we experience. As we grow up, we acquire hundreds of standardized but largely unconscious metaphors that are built into our language. We think, act, and even dream using these metaphors. We have metaphors for comprehending everything from time and causation to emotions, morality, love, and even the nature of life and death.

Our unconscious capacity for metaphor is awesome in power. It is liberating in that it permits both abstract thought and the workings of our imagination; it can be stultifying when it limits our possibilities. As long as it remains inaccessible to consciousness, we can neither appreciate its magnificence nor see where it confines us.

This workshop has several goals: first, to enable participants to become conscious of the metaphors that govern their thoughts and actions; second, to reveal how these everyday metaphors are manifest in poetry and myth, and how they vary in other cultures; third, to develop skills in using metaphor to make new sense of their lives.

Trigger Point and Esalen Massage: Advanced Workshop

Arthur Munyer
& Esalen Massage Practitioners

The human body is a rich source of information and intelligence. Trigger point, the movement of myofascial tissue through soft, deep contact with pressure points, and Esalen massage are methods of working with the body that can help the practitioner communicate with stressed, blocked, and chronically troubled areas. This workshop will combine these modalities, along with joint release, movement, and studies in anatomy. It will also address concerns of burnout, depression, creativity, and peer support for those who have chosen a demanding profession. It is especially suggested for body workers, physicians, physical therapists, chiropractors, and other health care practitioners who want to expand their hands-on skills.

Romance and Love

Gabriele Hilberg

Everybody is searching for love. People commonly think of love as the emotion they feel when attracted to another person, or they interpret parental instinct as love. There is a great amount of confusion and misperception about love which invariably leads to disappointment and rejection.

Participants will identify those distorted concepts and expectations that get in their way of having sane, loving relationships. They will explore the patterns of "being loving" that they were exposed to in their families of origin. Learning to be sensitive and receptive to how others experience being loved makes it possible to break the cycle of imposing one's own ideas of love onto them. This workshop will assist participants in getting off the roller coaster of ego-based emotional love by helping them explore their capacity to love and form lasting relationships. $630

Learning to Live, Laugh, and Love: For ACAs and Others

Karen Paine-Gernée & Rick Paine

Finding self-confidence, joy, love, and trust is not about blaming one's parents. The injury, however, created by growing up in families who covered their pain with abusive, dysfunctional, addicted, or self-absorbed behavior is profound. As children shut down their feelings and deny their inner selves, they bury their capacity for joy along with their pain. Then, as adults, they burden their relationships with manipulative, co-dependent behavior that inhibits trust and growth.

The leaders grew up in dysfunctional families. Their experienced and gentle guidance provides participants with safety and challenge for searching out the thread which will unravel the knots that keep them tied to a wounded past.

Biodrama:
Know Your Self, Live Your Self

Lorenzo Ostuni & Katriona Munthe

Biodrama is a method for developing human potential and for personal renewal. It employs dream, body language, poetry, imagery, symbols, and music; it is both contemplative and active work. Its roots go back three thousand years to the spiritual culture of ancient Greece, uniting the Orphic and Eleusinian Mysteries with present-day psychological research.

Participants will be invited to undertake a mystic journey in which to experience fundamental moments of their lives: birth, love, and death. They will work on visions and emotions of preceding states of consciousness and may find that this representative process helps integrate their individual mystery with the collective experience of humankind. This live performance, the first part of Biodrama, often elicits a regenerating experience for the protagonist. Ostuni's commentary on this performance/experience is the second part of Biodrama and will be tape-recorded for each participant.

This ritual performance workshop will be conducted in Italian and English. $630

- Men's and women's spiritual paths
- The rites of womanhood and manhood
- The shadows we cast
- Overcoming fears of one another
- The limits of intimacy between the sexes
- The gifts we bring to each other
- The battle between the sexes
- Ending the blame game
- Breaking free from old roles
- Ideas of love that stop us from loving
- New understandings of love

Sports Massage

David Streeter

Since its introduction to this country, sports massage has undergone many changes. Standard cross-friction and compression strokes have been enhanced by trigger point and neuromuscular methods. This five-day intensive will demonstrate how to incorporate these modalities into a Swedish or Esalen massage session.

In order to be effective, the practitioner must have an understanding of anatomy and his/her own body usage, so an important part of this workshop will be daily "body-dynamics," a movement class developed at Esalen for massage students, and brief anatomy lectures. Lots of hands-on practice and individual instruction will round out the week.

This course is appropriate for a wide range of health care practitioners, both beginning and advanced.

The Journey Home

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

The leaders write: "The Journey Home is not for beginners on the path. There are too many unsettling paradoxes along the way. For instance, it is a journey of no leaving, and you can't get there from here.

"The Journey Home is not sentimental. It is not about hope. Hope is a way of avoiding what already is in the moment. The Journey Home is a way of recognizing the truth of each moment. The Journey Home is an awakening from a long dream.

"The ego wants desperately to fix life and make it more comfortable, make it better, make it more spiritual. In these five days, we will utilize and then abandon ego-strengthening methods. The inner child will be rescued and abandoned along the way. The habits of character fixation as a way of avoiding one's true nature will be examined and worked with in detail."

Weekend of October 26–28

The Mythic Image: A Performance Piece

Phil Cousineau, David Darling & Eric Lawton

Sacred stories reflect only one aspect of the mythic traditions of the world. Of equal importance and fascination is the non-verbal image, the mandalas or holy images used for deep contemplation. Their origins can be found in nature and the human imagination, and through them we can approach the convergence of myth, dream, and art.

This live performance workshop will blend the oral tradition of storytelling with the silent stories of pictures and the narrative movement of improvisational music. Each session will be highlighted by the telling of tales by Phil Cousineau, co-writer of The Hero's Journey: The World of Joseph Campbell; a slide show by award-winning photographer Eric Lawton, using images from Ireland to India; and the music of David Darling, master cellist. The themes will include myths of origins, myth and the body, myth and art, myth and ritual, and sacred lands.

Recommended reading: Joseph Campbell, The Mythic Image (Princeton). $325

Practical Intuition: We Are All Psychics

Laura Day

Every time we draw a conclusion, we work with intuition as well as linear and emotional processes. Identifying how intuitive facility works enables us to use it selectively for effective decision-making. A predominantly linear process may be preferable when clear, empirical information is available. When little data is at hand or if the question relates to how current choices might affect future results, an intuitive process may be more efficient.

Practical Intuition, an experiential workshop, introduces intuitive methods for gaining empirical information. Participants will give and receive several present- and future intuitive readings a day, focusing on predicting and retrieving verifiable data. Different intuitive styles, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, and telepathy, will be taught, along with exercises for continued training at home.

Participants are requested to bring a few photographs of themselves and people they know well, their personal and business questions, and a willingness to work as if they already knew how to do something that they in fact already know how to do. $325

Children and Anger: A Gestalt View

Violet Oaklander

The theme of this workshop is the anger of children. Participants will discuss the various ways that young people express anger, the relationship of anger to negative introjects and self-esteem, and how parents, teachers, and therapists can help children express this least tolerated and most misunderstood emotion in healthy, safe, and satisfying ways.

This approach is based on the use of creative, expressive, and projective methods, with gestalt theory and practice as the underlying framework. The thrust of this work is to provide the child with a means for expressing his or her innermost feelings, to foster self-awareness and self-discovery, to enhance self-esteem and, in general, to promote emotional growth. Children thereby learn not only about themselves, but about their relationship to others and the world around them.

The workshop will include discussion, demonstration, examples of children's work and, particularly, direct experience of expressive methods used with children.

Recommended reading: Violet Oaklander, Windows to Our Children (The Gestalt Journal, P.O. Box 990, Highland, NY 12528). $325

Week of October 28–November 2

Five Days with Janet Zuckerman

This workshop continues Esalen's tradition of interpersonal and intrapersonal work on emotional process. It is based on these premises: that unfinished business is projected into current relationships, interfering with one's ability to be in the present, and that by emotional release one may cleanse the doors of perception. Tools for exploration will include the open seat, a tennis racket, pillows, and a sense of humor.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $630

Dreams

Joyce Frazee

Outward circumstances are no substitute for inner experience.—C.G. Jung

Called "gateways to the soul" by Carl Jung, dreams are perhaps the most neglected of inner experiences. This workshop is for those who are interested in more than the "outward circumstances," for those who have wondered what their dreams meant, and for those who swear they never dream.

This week will include the telling of dreams, drawing them into mandalas, and circle-dancing, ancient dances of connection. Group work provides a safe place for individual work on dreams with support from other participants and the instructor. Dream recall and lucid dreaming will be discussed; gestalt, bioenergetics, massage, and meditation will be used.

Recommended reading: Robert Bosnak, A Little Course in Dreams (Shambhala). $630

Taoism and the Shen

Master Share Lew

Traditional Taoist concepts of health, longevity, and harmony with nature will be introduced by Master Lew, a temple-trained Taoist priest from southern China. The core of the workshop will be instruction in "the Shen," a set of twelve non-strenuous exercises (six standing, six sitting), whose primary purpose is self-healing. These exercises also develop concentration, increase visual and auditory acuity, and enhance sensitivity to oneself and others. Master Lew will discuss the use of everyday foods and Chinese herbs in healing and tell stories from his life in the monastery.

Master Lew, now 72, first began to teach Taoist internal cultivation to non-Chinese in 1970. His monastery style, Tao Ahn Pai, dates back 1300 years to Lui Tung Pin, an historical personage of the Tang Dynasty and one of the Eight Immortals of Taoism. $630

■ SPECIAL PROGRAMS

May 27–June 22
Certification in Clinical Hypnosis

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

This course will synthesize neurolinguistics and Ericksonian hypnosis, drawing heavily from the enneagram of character fixation. It satisfies the hypnosis coursework requirements for the M.F.C.C. and complies with the California state requirement for hypnosis certification.

While the use of hypnosis in habit control and symptom removal will be covered, a primary focus will be on hypnosis as a tool of spiritual emergence. Starting with the presupposition that we already live in trance and that the goal is waking up, the roots of personality structure and the filters of perception in the creation and transformation of reality will be carefully explored. Participants will have the opportunity to experience the power of trance to transform their lives, which will create a model for working with clients.

The structure of rapport, pacing and leading, and various hypnotic patterns of induction will be demonstrated and practiced along with a variety of clinical interventions, including reframing, change history, metaphors, and storytelling. There will be videotapes of Erickson and other well-known leaders in the field of hypnosis. Participants will have daily practice with each other and the opportunity to be videotaped doing a hypnotic induction. Daily zazen, Taoist yoga, and movement led by Antoinette Varner will also be a part of this program.

Upon completion of this course, participants who want to be certified must demonstrate a high level of professionalism as well as proficiency in technical skills to the satisfaction of the instructors before certification will be granted. After certification by the Institute for Advanced Hypnosis (testing and certification fee, $300) additional certifications are available from the American Council of Hypnotist Examiners ($125) and the Society of NeuroLinguistic Programming ($200).

Required reading: J. Haley, Uncommon Therapy (Norton); Grinder and Bandler, Trance-Formations (Real People Press), Frogs into Princes (Real People Press), and Reframing (Real People Press); Chogyam Trungpa, Shambhala (Shambhala); P.D. Integrative Body Practice (IBP)
Professional Training Program

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

This will be a twelve-day residential training program in Integrative Body Practice. IBP emphasizes breathing as a vehicle for the integration of body, mind, emotions, and spirit, and views the body as the foundation for psychological and transpersonal growth. Object relations developmental theory will be integrated with body work. This workshop is for licensed professionals and graduate students in related fields. The leaders will be assisted by Andrea Juhan and the staff of the Rosenberg-Rand Institute of Venice, California.

Massage Practitioner
Certification Program

Esalen offers a California state-approved massage program. Upon completion of a two-month massage work study track or a 130-hour massage practitioner workshop (see Future Programs), and after giving 30 additional massages elsewhere, graduates will receive their certificates. This program provides at least 130 hours of instruction, including anatomy, supplemented by study in body-mind disciplines such as yoga, gestalt awareness work, and movement, fulfilling the state requirement.

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring Project offers outreach, education, and referrals that extend Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent, service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring operates a global referral system, linking visitors to Esalen with body workers, counselors, and teachers from their home areas. There are ongoing programs at Esalen and a traveling workshop service in the U.S. and abroad. Instructors teach self-healing, Esalen body work, yoga, breath and body awareness, dance and centering movement, and meditation. Many instructors have experience in gestalt practice and movement continuum.

The Healthspring Library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, philosophy, yoga, nutrition, and organic gardening which may be borrowed by seminarians for a two-week period while at Esalen. Donations of books or periodicals are greatly appreciated.

For access to the referral system and traveling workshop program write to Laurie Lioness Parizek at Esalen, c/o Healthspring.

■ WILDERNESS PROGRAMS

Esalen Wilderness Programs Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered. To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, we require a deposit of $200. The balance of the fee is due 14 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited. (Please note: The Grand Canyon trip has a different cancellation and refund policy. See workshop description for details.)

August 4–11
A Gentle Trip in the High Sierra

Maurica Anderson & Lee Ehman

During this 7-day workshop in wildflower season, participants will hike 8 miles to a clear mountain lake (alt. 10,000') in the John Muir Wilderness area on the western side of the High Sierra. The lake is off the main trails and is surrounded by other lakes, grassy meadows, wildflowers, and cold streams fed by the surrounding snow fields.

MULES WILL CARRY IN ALL OF THE PERSONAL GEAR AND FOOD, so participants need carry only lunch, rain gear, and water on the hike in. There will be exceptionally good food, fresh or frozen meats, fruits, and vegetables. The group will camp by the lake for 6 nights, taking short day-hikes and working with meditation, massage, psychodrama, gestalt, and gentle encounter. There will be some strenuous but optional side hikes, a sauna, and some time for doing nothing. Participants will be encouraged to concentrate on the sights and sounds and smells of the high country, on getting to know the mountains, one another, and themselves, and on relaxing and laughing a lot.

Mountaineering experience is not necessary (although a good sense of humor is), and most people are in good enough shape to make it in, but participants should be capable of hiking uphill at altitudes up to 11,000'.

For a detailed information sheet, contact Maurica Anderson, 1112 Curtis Street, Albany, CA 94706; (415) 526-5814. Participants will meet in the Sierra on August 4. The fee includes food, wine, permits, and pack mules in and out. $615

August 27–September 9
Path of the River:
A Grand Canyon Journey

Steven Harper, Wendy Palmer, Bob Melville & Arizona Raft Adventures Staff (AZRA)

The Grand Canyon and Colorado River provide an environment of dramatic variety which is intimate and awesome, soft and demanding, yet always rewarding for those who are open to all it has to offer. On this 14-day whitewater raft trip through the entire length of the Grand Canyon, participants can explore offerings of river, canyon, and natural world. The river is a teacher and primary metaphor. The group will draw from aikido, dance, energy awareness, meditation, and gestalt to enhance their experience of this majestic wilderness area.

Travel will be in paddle and oar rafts. Instruction will be offered in basic aspects of river life such as paddling and minimum-impact river camping. Group members will have time to discuss the Canyon's ecology, geology, natural and cultural history; to hike and explore side canyons; to sit quietly and reflect; to integrate learnings from this trip into their lives.

River experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity and to participate fully. The workshop begins at 7 AM August 27 in Flagstaff, Arizona; there will be a pre-trip meeting at 6 PM the evening before. AZRA will supply all the necessary river rafting gear, food, and transportation between Flagstaff and the Canyon. Details and a personal equipment list will be sent upon registration. Enrollment is limited.

Due to Esalen's special arrangement with AZRA, the following cancellation policy is in effect for this workshop: A $200 nonrefundable deposit per person will confirm your reservation. Balance is due May 27, 1990. If you cancel prior to May 27, your nonrefundable deposit, less a $60 registration fee, may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. No refunds are available after May 27. This program will be canceled if not full by May 27. Register early to reserve your spot and to ensure that the trip will go. $1800

■ WORK STUDY PROGRAM

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the commur.. v. Participants will work 32 hours per · k in one of Esalen's departments (kite. n, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's process group. It is advantageous for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study Coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants in the focused programs must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program.

Focused programs planned thus far for 1990 include:

May 6–June 3
Julie Bowden's program for adult children of alcoholics and trauma will provide time to look back, grieve, and go on, drawing from guided imagery, age regression, and other approaches.

May 6–June 3
In this non-certification massage program, work students will learn to give and receive a massage. Taught by Kathleen O'Shaughnessy, it will include hands-on practice and movement.

June 3–July 1
New concepts in gestalt practice will be incorporated in Anne Nechama Simkin's program. Massage will also be offered.

July 1–29
Paula Sholachman Shaw offers an arena for risky, outrageous self-expression and creativity using acting, improvisation, and other tools and tricks of the theatrical trade. The month will end with a show for the community.

July 29–August 26
Mary (Devarani) Goldenson's program of letting go and moving on will employ Reichian methods, Radix*, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

July 29–August 26
Focus on learning: the what, how, when, and where. Janet Lederman will lead this program for professionals involved in public education today.

August 26–September 23
Karuna Licht offers women a month of healing and recovery. Emotional work, meditation, art, dance, and ritual will be the modalities.

September 23–October 21
Janet Zuckerman will teach emotional release work using basic gestalt practices. This is a practicum, with emphasis on the participant as facilitator.

September 23–October 21
The Esalen massage staff offers another non-certification massage program. Please see May 6-June 3.

October 21–November 18
Terry Hunt will lead a program in emotional sobriety for adult children of alcoholic and abusive parents.

November 18–December 16
Please see Mary Goldenson's program, July 29-August 26.

In as much as the Work Study Program is a complete program in itself, please do not plan to take regularly scheduled catalog workshops during your stay. Professional services, such as massage, are available at staff rates.

Accommodations are shared, with up to four people to a room, usually at South Coast Center, a staff complex located 1 1/2 miles north of Esalen.

A deposit of $350 in U.S. currency is required with your application. The cost of all 28-day Work Study Programs, except the two-month body work program, is $700 the first month, $650 the second month, $600 the third month. Work students may be invited to remain for a second or third month depending on space available and community needs. There are no scholarships available for the Work Study Program.

For more information contact Bette Dingman: (408) 667-3010.

Note: Application is not registration in the program. Registration is made only after approval of application and upon receipt of deposit. The balance of the fee is due on arrival. Of the original deposit, $100 is nonrefundable and may be transferred to other programs within one year of receipt. Please return the application form (see page 50) with your deposit to:

COURTESY ESALEN SOVIET-AMERICAN EXCHANGE PROGRAM

Outside of "headquarters" on a bright summer day in Moscow in 1981, a gathering of Soviets and Americans who felt that perestroika and glasnost were just around the corner. This rollicking group gathered in front of the apartment of Joseph Goldin, who was a first inspirator of the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program. His Soviet colleagues included an interior decorator, a male Central Asian dancer, a philosopher, one of the Soviet Union's best-known actresses, an educator, an artist, Dulce and Michael Murphy, and Jim Hickman. This photograph was taken by Mary Payne, one of the founders of the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program.

A Decade Of Innovations In Soviet-American Relations

Since January 1980, the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program has conducted several hundred exchanges between Soviet and American individuals or groups. We have introduced new forms of Soviet-American cooperation, which are described in the pages that follow, and formed many lasting friendships with Soviet scientists, artists, writers, philosophers, psychologists, economists, diplomats, journalists, and Central Committee staff. Our network of Soviet and American colleagues comprises a unique resource for future Soviet-American cultural and scientific exchanges.

As our program has developed, Soviet-American relations have undergone momentous changes. Reform has swept the Communist world. The Berlin Wall is open. Coalition governments rule Poland and Czechoslovakia, and multi-party systems are being established as well in East Germany, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Romania. Arguably, the cold war is over.

But with these changes, new problems have appeared. Soviets need American interaction more than ever before, while we need their reforms to succeed. There is no guarantee that disarmament will continue. It is not certain yet that Gorbachev's perestroika will lead to a more stable world. In this time of uncertainty, many Soviets are calling upon us to help their country.

Our ten years of experience, our large network of Soviet and American relationships, and our ability to innovate, we believe, enable us now more than ever before to create new and helpful Soviet-American ventures.

Esalen co-founder Michael Murphy first traveled to Moscow in 1971 after several Europeans at Esalen brought news of innovative Soviet work in psychology and education. His visit led to others by members of the Esalen staff and, in 1980, to the establishment of Esalen's Soviet-American Exchange Program.

As Esalen was starting its Soviet exchanges, the euphoria of the Nixon-Brezhnev détente was giving way to the deepening distrust of the arms race. The Committee on the Present Danger warned of an unprecedented Soviet arms build-up; the Soviets invaded Afghanistan; President Carter mandated a US boycott of the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

In its original statement of purpose, the Exchange Program said it would "develop innovative approaches to Soviet-American cooperation, emphasizing citizen exchange as a complement to government diplomacy." At the time there were only a few non-governmental organizations in the field, among them the Dartmouth and Pugwash conferences, which sponsored non-governmental dialogues about the complexities of the arms race and arms control. The Exchange Program founders believed, however, that it was important to broaden contacts between non-governmental organizations in the two superpowers.

As President Reagan was calling the Soviet Union the "evil empire," the Exchange Program staged its first innovation, the spacebridge. In an event without precedent, our first executive director, Jim Hickman, and consultant Rick Lukens worked with Joseph Goldin and the USSR State Committee of Television and Radio (Gosteleradio) to co-produce on September 4, 1982, a live satellite program that connected Apple Computer founder Steve Wozniak's US Festival in San Bernardino, California, to a jazz concert in Moscow. The Exchange Program also co-produced a spacebridge for the 1983 US Festival that included discussions between senior Soviet and American legislators, space program officials, and educators. These spacebridges inspired subsequent satellite teleconferences between Soviets and Americans, including a Congress-to-Supreme Soviet teleconference which continues today.

In addition to these citizen exchanges and spacebridges, the Exchange Program has organized other innovative interactions between Soviets and Americans. For example, the Exchange Program:

• Initiated in 1983 the "Erik Erikson Symposia on the Political Psychology of Soviet-American Relations" with career diplomat Joseph Montville and psychologists Erik and Joan Erikson. It was at one of these conferences that Montville coined the term "track-two diplomacy" to designate the burgeoning private sector initiatives with the Soviets.

• Provided in 1983 a forum for Robert Bathurst to develop the first seminars bringing Americans together with Soviet exiles and émigrés to compare Soviet and American cultures. Bathurst was Naval Attaché at the US Embassy in Moscow in 1962 and is currently Adjunct Professor of National Security Affairs at the Monterey Institute of International Studies, California.

• Helped create in 1985 the Association of Space Explorers, the first forum in which astronauts and cosmonauts could share their experiences in space and their hopes for the future of humanity.

• Signed in 1985 one of the first agreements between a private-sector group and the USSR Ministry of Health, which has facilitated work in the areas of health promotion and non-pharmacological methods of treating disease and stress.

• Co-produced in 1986 a spacebridge on Chernobyl and Three Mile Island with the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the USSR Academy of Sciences, and Internews.

• Signed in 1986 the first agreement between a non-governmental agency and the USSR Union of Writers, beginning long-term collaboration between Soviet and American novelists, playwrights, and poets. Under this agreement, Vladimir Karpov, first secretary of the USSR Union of Writers, was hosted in January 1988 in his first US visit. Also hosted were satirist Mikhail Zhvanetsky, playwright Viktor Rozov, and short-story writer Tatiana Tolstaya, a descendant of Leo Tolstoy.

• Organized and sponsored in 1987 the first visit to the Soviet Union of energy specialist and physicist Amory Lovins of the Rocky Mountain Institute in Colorado. Lovins was warmly received by Academician Yevgeny Velikhov, vice-president of the USSR Academy of Sciences, and is now acting as consultant to a number of Soviet institutes on matters of energy efficiency.

• Hosted in 1988 Academician Abel Aganbegyan, Rector, Academy of the National Economy, for his first tour of the United States in his capacity as one of Gorbachev's chief economic advisors. This has led to the development of a management training program with senior executives from across the Soviet Union.

• Facilitated the Bilson-Willens Initiative. In the fall of 1988, two businessmen, Harold Willens and Wes Bilson, wrote a letter offering pro bono consultation to some Soviet enterprises interested in putting quality consumer goods in Soviet stores. Their letter was printed in the weekly periodical Argumenty i Fakty, circulation 20 million, and drew over 4,000 replies from across the Soviet Union.

• Celebrated, with Soviet counterparts, the 50th anniversary of the publication of John Steinbeck's novel The Grapes of Wrath. Events were held in Steinbeck's home town Salinas and in Moscow, with leading Steinbeck scholars at Moscow State University, a festival of Steinbeck films, and an exhibition of letters, photographs, and first-edition books at the Moscow Library of Foreign Literature.

• Coordinated, in conjunction with the US-based International Center for Economic Growth and the USSR Institute for Management Studies at Moscow State University, a conference on "Entrepreneurship in the World Economy." The conference drew participants from around the world, including Hernando de Soto, Peruvian economist and author of The Other Path; Leopoldo Solis, senior advisor to the president of Mexico; Mussamel Huq, founder of the Grameen Bank in Bangladesh; Gifford Pinchot, author of Intrapreneuring; and Pavel Bunich, a principal economic advisor to Gorbachev.

• Organized a ten-person delegation of Americans to participate in the inaugural conference of the USSR Association of Peace Through Culture, formed in honor of Nicholas Roerich, one of the most highly revered Russian artists in the Soviet Union today.

• Hosted Boris Yeltsin for his first trip to the United States. The nine-day trip covered eleven cities and gave Mr. Yeltsin his first realistic look at our country and our government. Esalen arranged visits for Mr. Yeltsin with President Bush, Vice President Quayle, National Security Advisor Brent Scowcroft, former President Ronald Reagan, and many business and government leaders. Mr. Yeltsin's delegation returned to the Soviet Union with 100,000 disposable syringes to fight the spread of AIDS among children in that country.

•Hosted Ivan T. Frolov, editor-in-chief of Pravda and a secretary of the Communist Party Central Committee, in April 1990 for his first visit to San Francisco. Dr. Frolov is the leading Soviet philosopher of medical ethics and a close personal advisor to Gorbachev. He serves on the Central Committee Ideological Commission, and as a USSR People's Deputy. He is a member of the USSR Academy of Sciences and the chairman of its All-Union Center for Human Studies, and holds a number of other posts as well. His delegation met with leading American philosophers, sociologists, journalists, educators, and political figures for discussions on perestroika, philosophy, and social transformation. Frolov is the author of more than 20 books and monographs and over 300 articles on problems of the comprehensive study of man, ecology, and the social and ethical problems of scientific and technical progress. He has detailed the history of Soviet genetics and its devastation during Stalin's regime, and denounced the biologist Trofim Lysenko for waging an ideological witch-hunt against colleagues that led to the exile, torture, and death of many talented scientists. Frolov also hosts a television program in which priests often participate in philosophical debate.

These innovative programs reflect Esalen's tradition and style of working as well as the enormous possibilities inherent in programs involving Soviets and Americans. With Gorbachev's reforms taking hold in the Soviet Union, we at the Exchange Program believe that our two nations are on the threshold of a new era, in which American and Soviet groups, both commercial and not-for-profit, can work together more creatively than ever before to promote economic and cultural development.

Current Programs

In the years ahead, the Esalen Exchange Program will respond to a need as pressing today as the demand for citizen exchange was in 1980. That need, as we see it, is for new thinking about individual and social development. Gorbachev's call for perestroika reflects a widespread demand among Soviet people for new bases of institutional legitimacy, for new definitions of the public good, for new understandings of personal and cultural transformation. Americans and Soviets can work together, we believe, to address these problems. To promote such work, Esalen is sponsoring the following programs.

Soviet-American Seminars on Economic, Political, Moral, and Religious Philosophy

These seminars will address fundamental issues that face the people of both the United States and the Soviet Union. In a time of great social change, our two nations need to promote commonly shared visions of a just society and the virtues it requires. Without honesty and integrity, for example, economic markets collapse into anarchy. Without widely accepted responsibility for the public good, cynicism grows, institutions fall into disrepair, and the citizenry becomes ungovernable. Every sphere of human life requires some sort of spiritual vision.

In the decades preceding the Bolshevik revolution, Russia had begun to produce philosophers to match its great novelists. Berdyaev, Soloviev, Fyodorov, and others had begun to outline a worldview that joined mystical illumination, moral concern, appreciation for human creativity, and profound psychological insight. It was grand in scale, like the novels of Tolstoy and Dostoyevsky. Today, it is rising again in the Soviet Union, among novelists, poets, psychologists, and a few professional philosophers. Such vision could generate a similar bigness of scale, a similar impetus to social and religious imagination in the West, and help stimulate philosophic renewal in America.

In 1990, members of the Esalen Exchange Program staff will meet with representatives of the Soviet Writers' Union, the Soviet Institute of Philosophy, and with Soviet poets, novelists, economists, political theorists, religious thinkers, and professional philosophers to organize Soviet participation in these seminars. The American participants will also be chosen this year. In 1991, the program's first meetings will be held in Big Sur, San Francisco, and Moscow.

Health Project

Our long-term project in the field of health promotion continues to broaden and develop. In October 1990, the Program will sponsor the first Soviet-American conference on psychoneuroimmunology, a pioneering field that studies the role of the brain and behavior in treating the nervous and immune systems. Our partner for this conference is the Leningrad-based Institute for Experimental Medicine, where the famous psychologist Ivan Pavlov worked.

We are developing a number of other programs as well through our relationships with the USSR Ministry of Health and the USSR National Research Center for Preventive Medicine. Our concerns include disease prevention and health promotion in the workplace. An agreement was signed with the World Health Organization-Europe that calls for Esalen to facilitate greater Soviet participation in WHO conferences and initiatives.

Surviving Trauma

The accident at Chernobyl, the Armenian earthquake, and the Afghanistan war are only the most recent Soviet examples of events that have left physically and psychologically traumatized victims in their wake. Despite this history, the Soviet Union has had no specific field of study devoted to the research and treatment of the psycho-social effects of trauma. Recognizing this as a vital area of common concern between our countries, the Exchange Program has developed the Surviving Trauma Project. The Project is committed to bringing together Soviet and American specialists in Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) to share experiences and develop healing processes.

In May 1989, Project Director Claire Ryle collaborated with the Earthstewards Network and numerous Vietnam veterans' organizations and treatment centers to host the first group of Soviet veterans of Afghanistan to visit the United States.

In October 1989, the Exchange Program sponsored the first Soviet participation in the annual conference of the Society for Traumatic Stress Studies. The Soviet delegation arrived in San Francisco within days of the earthquake here. Meetings were arranged with the San Francisco Director of Public Health, specialists at the San Francisco Veterans Administration Medical Center, and therapists at the National Center for PTSD in Menlo Park. The first joint Soviet-American conference on PTSD will be held in Moscow in September 1990.

Entrepreneurship in the World Economy

The Exchange Program signed an agreement with the USSR Academy of Sciences Economics Department, headed by Academician Abel Aganbegyan to promote entrepreneurialism in the USSR. A first training for the Academy was conducted by Marshall Fitzgerald, founder of Stanford Telecommunications, and Bob Medearis, founder of Silicon Valley Bank, and was held in Suzdal, outside Moscow, in May 1989. The next phase of the project involves internships for selected Soviet participants in the United States.

The Exchange Program also signed an agreement with the Estonian Institute of Management Studies and the Estonian Business School to train managers from the Baltic republics. Esalen has been conducting seminars in Estonia since 1987.

A tentative agreement has been made with the Moscow State University Economics Department for a 17-week course in Western business practices, to begin in 1990.

The Furth Ruble Prize

Perhaps the greatest problem confronting joint venture arrangements in the Soviet Union is the fact that the ruble is not a convertible currency. Presently there is no clear Soviet government policy or timeline as to how or when the ruble will be made convertible.

In November 1988, Esalen hosted a delegation of Soviet economists from Academician Leonid Abalkin's Economics Institute, USSR Academy of Sciences. Part of their itinerary took them to the Chalk Hill Winery in Santa Rosa, owned by Fred and Peggy Furth.

Out of numerous discussions held on the Furth estate came an initiative from the Furths to donate $100,000 to create an international competition for the best proposal offering a practical solution to the question of ruble convertibility as a problem of international trade. Esalen committed itself to work with the Furth Foundation and the USSR Academy of Sciences to conduct the competition. Prize money totalling $42,000 was awarded to the authors of six of the over 600 papers submitted to the competition.

Award recipients were chosen in May 1990 by this panel of Soviet and American experts:

Abel Aganbegyan, Rector, Academy of the National Economy
Ivan Ivanov, Deputy Director, State Committee on Foreign Economic Relations
Boris Milner, Deputy Director, Institute of Economics, USSR Academy of Sciences
Nikolai Petrakov, Deputy Director, Central Mathematics-Economics Institute
Joseph Brada, Professor of Economics, Arizona State University
Ed Hewett, Senior Fellow, Brookings Institution
Anne Krueger, Professor of Economics, Duke University
Wassily Leontief, Nobel Laureate in Economics, 1973

The prize winners will present their papers at a conference to be held in Moscow, fall 1990.

Esalen Dialogues

For several years, the Exchange Program has been identifying influential American and Soviet individuals to participate in a high-level forum—the Esalen Dialogues.

The first conference was held in June 1989 at Esalen. The project is planned to continue over a three-to-five-year period. The Dialogues participants meet at regular intervals to discuss the major changes occurring in both nations, not only in terms of glasnost and perestroika in the Soviet Union, but also in terms of how both nations are interacting in the emerging information age and global economy. The intention is to bring together "action intellectuals" who can interact in a multidisciplinary and binational setting, and who have sufficient influence in their particular fields to have impact in the social and political milieu which is currently shaping popular perceptions and public policy.

The 1990 Dialogues, held June 24-29, examined the theme "Democracy in the Future."

Ethnic Conflict Resolution Project

The Ethnic Conflict Resolution Project evolved from the conference "Stalin and Glasnost," held June 9-11, 1989, at Esalen Institute in Big Sur. A number of Soviet specialists and American Sovietologists, historians, and political psychologists participated in this historic meeting.

The next stage of this project will be an invitational conference, "Ethnic Conflict Resolution in the Soviet Union: The Heritage of Stalinism," to be held November 4-9, 1990, at Esalen Institute. A book is planned for publication as a result of the conference.

The project aims to promote the political/psychological preconditions for fostering a non-violent, pluralistic democracy in the light of recent historical crimes. Originally conceived as a comparative look at the tyranny of Stalin and Hitler and its impact on the politics and destiny of each society, the symposium has been revised to become a collaboration among American and Soviet scholars, officials, and writers on the psychological roots of ethnic conflict and new discoveries on ways to heal the wounds of such conflict.

Among the subjects to be discussed will be the role of historic grievances in the shaping of current attitudes of victimhood, the importance of public acknowledgment of historic injustice, the critical need for mourning past losses, and the asking and granting of forgiveness for injustices among the ethnic groups which have been aggressors and victims. The healing example of Soviet-Polish consultation on the Katyn Forest massacre will be reviewed.

In terms of practical political steps necessary for building multiethnic democracy, the participants will discuss the idea of civil society, the importance of human rights, and the function of a "Bill of Rights." We will also review work on comparative political institutions for multiethnic democracies, including the concepts of power-sharing, federalism, varieties of electoral systems, and constitutions which establish political systems that work.

Joe Montville is working with the Exchange Program to identify the appropriate American experts. Among the Americans who have been invited: Hoover Institution Fellow Robert Conquest, political scientist Arend Lijphart, psychiatrist John Mack, writer Orville Schell, psychologist Ervin Staub, and Strobe Talbott of Time magazine. The Soviet invitees include: Igor Belyaev, Valentin Berezhkov, Fyodor Burlatsky, Alexander Tsipko, and writers Andrei Melville, Tatiana Tolstaya, Viktor Yerofeev, and Yevgeny Yevtushenko.

Psychology Project

For the first time, a Soviet citizen has become a member of the Exchange Program staff. Viatcheslav (Slava) Loutchkov is a psychologist working this year in the United States. He is studying the interplay of psychological, social, economic, and ideological factors in perestroika. He will also analyze means of applying perestroika to the science of psychology.

The thesis of this study is that the economic and social goals implicit in perestroika cannot be attained unless Soviet psychology is allowed to develop into a mature profession and unless extensive use is made of its findings and applications. The study will explore practical ways of achieving political and economic modernization in societies of the Soviet type. It will also try to reveal obstacles to cooperation among governmental, social, and scientific institutions.

The results of the study may help American and Soviet policy-makers to define more accurately the goals and nature of interrelations between the US and USSR, particularly in those areas which have not yet been addressed and studied. We hope that this research will contribute to the improvement of Soviet-American relations.

One of the practical applications of this project is a Russian-English/English-Russian encyclopedic dictionary of psychology. The dictionary will contain approximately 18,000-20,000 words and will be prepared for speakers of both English and Russian. The Russian version of this dictionary, compiled by Soviet psychologists Viatcheslav Loutchkov and Vladimir Rokityansky, is nearly complete.

Coaching Education Project

The competitive excellence of Soviet athletes is a source of great national pride, especially given the high place reserved for sport in the Soviet social system. This level of excellence is maintained in part by means of exceptionally well-educated coaches who pass through a world-standard training system. There are 28 coaching education institutions in the USSR, under the sponsorship of the Soviet Sport Committee (Goskomsport). Foremost among them is the Moscow Institute for Sport and Physical Culture, where all current Soviet national team coaches have been educated. It is from this elite coaching education institute that the Soviet participants for this project have been selected.

The University of the Pacific and the Exchange Program, in conjunction with the Moscow Institute of Physical Culture and Goskomsport, are developing the Soviet-American Coaching Education Institute. This will be an in-depth investigation into the preparation of coaches by the Soviet Union, and a comparison of Soviet coaching instruction with the educational methods of selected American sports organizations.

The Coaching Education Project evolved from an Esalen Exchange Program trip to the USSR in May 1989 and from subsequent discussions among the Soviet Sport Committee, Esalen guests, former 49er Head Coach Bill Walsh, sports psychologist Glen Albaugh, and Dulce and Michael Murphy. Recommendations were made at that time for future Soviet-American collaboration. As a result, Glen Albaugh and fellow University of the Pacific sports psychologist Ted Leland led an Applied Sport Psychology Workshop in Moscow in October 1989. During this workshop, plans were made for a Coaching Education Symposium at the University of the Pacific in November 1990.

Writers Exchange

Esalen signed an agreement with the USSR Union of Writers in 1986, when a delegation of Soviet writers traveled to Big Sur for a conference on Soviet and American literature. This agreement has enabled Esalen to move forward with several innovative projects.

• In late 1990 four prominent poets, two Soviets and two Americans, will be in residence at Esalen to collaborate and to study the similarities and differences in their art and how it affects the present political and cultural climates of our two countries.

• In collaboration with the Leningrad Union of Writers, a book of prose and poetry is being prepared to celebrate their contemporary writers living in the Soviet Union and abroad.

• A book of short stories, Life in the 80s, written by Soviet and American writers born since the Second World War, is near completion. The purpose of this joint book is to create relationships between the new generations of writers of the two nations.

• The Exchange Program worked with well-known Russian writer Viktor Yerofeev and the Union of Writers on the first Soviet conference on the life and works of Vladimir Nabokov, held in Moscow this past May. Leading scholars from both countries participated.

Excerpts from "The Glasnost Papers: Voices on Reform from Moscow"

Edited by Andrei Melville and Gail W. Lapidus
Westview Press, 1990

The Glasnost Papers was the brainchild of Andrei Melville, then a head of section at the Institute for USA and Canadian Studies in Moscow. During the early days of perestroika, newspapers, journals, speeches, and popular magazines revealed a new world of thinking and freedom of speech unknown before Gorbachev came to power. The early days of glasnost were electrifying for many Soviets and Westerners alike who could not even dream of such expressions of openness.

Melville, while on a trip to California, began to express interest in a book that reflected the excitement of that period. This book is edited by him and Gail Lapidus, a well-known Sovietologist from the University of California at Berkeley and published by Westview Press in Boulder, Colorado. These excerpts will give you an idea of why this book will become a classic of the early days of perestroika, one of the most important and exciting periods of history. It has been a privilege for the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program to be a part of this project.

From Andrei Melville's introduction:

History knows various types of revolution, including ones not necessarily accompanied by bloodshed. For example, the New Deal of Franklin Delano Roosevelt was, in its own way, revolutionary in scale. I would like to believe that what is going on in my own country will become revolutionary in much the same way. Of course there are no barricades in the streets, but an intense struggle—both political and ideological—is taking place. And those in the Soviet Union who want radical, revolutionary changes in our society are no longer satisfied with attempts simply to "improve" the model of socialism that we inherited from the past. They want to dismantle it and create a new, different society.

Thus we are not talking about re-papering the walls of an old house and refurnishing it, but about erecting a completely different structure, a different model of society.

It strikes me that this is precisely what distinguishes events today from those of other periods in our post-war history when the country was likewise moving forward. For in actual fact, in the 1950s and early 1960s, society's attention was focused on the figure of Stalin, and the problem we faced was diagnosed as the "cult of personality" and its consequences: that is, not a social pathology, but rather a malignant growth on a healthy body.

Today everything is different. Today we perceive the fundamental problem neither in particular personalities, nor in the wrongdoings and even crimes of one or another leader. And although our press today is actively involved in exposing highly-placed officials of the not-too-distant past, it is not primarily this that has riveted people's attention. These are all symptoms of a disease, not the disease itself, which goes far deeper. Because this is a disease of the system, a disease of the society, and not simply of the individual, the medicine used to cure it will have to be potent. The question today is not about the window dressing of the system's functioning, but about the very nature of its internal characteristics.

In the past, when we in the Soviet Union talked about socialism, all too often we substituted the ideal for the real, as we tried to draw, down to the tiniest detail, the image of the ideal socialist society and to project this image onto ourselves, for the most part ignoring the crying incompatibility between that ideal and reality. Today, together with a much more sober and critical view of the reality with which we are dealing in our country, we are trying also to liberate our notions of the socialist ideal from the traditional utopianism, from the millenarian-chiliastic myths about an approaching "thousand-year kingdom" of Good and Justice.

COURTESY BSALIN SOVIET-AMERICAN EXCHANGE PROGRAM

The Exchange Program in 1989 sponsored a conference on the life and works of John Steinbeck, held in two parts: first in the United States and then in the Soviet Union. Pictured here are the American presenters at the Hall of Writers in the Writers' Club in Moscow.

From Gail Lapidus's introduction:

"Glasnost" has become a household word in Western discussions of the Soviet Union, indeed an all-embracing symbol of the entire Gorbachev era. It has been indiscriminately applied to virtually every aspect of Gorbachev's policies and sometimes used as a synonym for perestroika (restructuring) itself. The expanding scope of glasnost in the past few years has been the single most dramatic manifestation of the far-reaching process of change in state-society relations now under way in the Soviet Union.

Perhaps best translated as "public disclosure," with its simultaneous connotation of candor and publicity, glasnost is not only an end in itself but also a central instrument in Gorbachev's larger campaign for reform. It reflects a recognition that building support at home and abroad for major changes in Soviet domestic and foreign policy requires a less secretive approach to Soviet reality: a more candid acknowledgment of Soviet shortcomings and errors and an expansion of the boundaries of public discussion, although by no means an abrogation of its limits. At bottom, it reflects a serious rethinking of how the Soviet leadership should relate to its own population as well as to the wider international community.

The years since Gorbachev became general secretary have been marked by a gradual widening of the role and scope of glasnost, a trend that is closely connected to the progressive radicalization of Gorbachev's conception of reform. Since the summer of 1986 Gorbachev has expressed a growing realization that the problems he inherited were more complex, and the obstacles to reform more daunting, than he initially appreciated. His original focus on economic reform, with its emphasis on "uskorenie" (acceleration), was progressively supplanted by a recognition that more far-reaching structural changes were essential to achieve a revitalization of the Soviet system. His campaign for perestroika is a call for far-reaching departures from prevailing practices and norms in virtually every area of Soviet life. Indeed, in July 1986 Gorbachev described "restructuring" as nothing short of revolution, encompassing "not only the economy but all other sides of society's life: social relations, the political system, the spiritual and ideological sphere, the style and work methods of the party and of all our cadres. . . . I would equate restructuring with revolution . . . genuine revolution in the minds and hearts of people. . . ."

Glasnost is a central instrument of this effort. "We need glasnost," Gorbachev put it, "as we need the air." But the novelty and strategic significance of this instrument derive from his recognition that Soviet society has reached a level of maturity that requires a new approach to its governance. The Soviet people, and particularly the educated middle classes, can no longer be treated as the passive objects of official policy, but have to be brought into some form of partnership.

From the first chapter, "The Anatomy of Glasnost"

The word "glasnost" comes from the adjective "glasnyi." The authoritative dictionary of the Russian language of Vladimir Dal (the Russian equivalent of Webster's dictionary) provides the following definition of glasnyi: "that which is known or evident to all, not concealed, everywhere made public." Glasnost is openness; it is the adoption of democratic forms for the expression of one's opinion, position, interests. Glasnost also means the disclosure of all that was formerly secret, hidden, with the disclosure being public, nation-wide.

In the Russian language the word "glasnost" conjures up a whole succession of sound—and meaning—associations: it is "voice," but it is also "eye." Glasnost is sight, enlightenment, publication. Glasnost is the voice pronouncing the revealed truth. The proper field of the vital activity of glasnost is the public forum. In Russia the public forum has long since been the printed page. Today it also includes radio and television, but the newspaper and the journal still remain the principal estate of contemporary glasnost. Newspapers have become our necessary spiritual sustenance and the most important part of our daily life. Since the end of 1986, the number of subscribers to the major Soviet newspapers has sharply risen. People began to read, say, Pravda, and other Soviet publications with even more interest than they listened to the Voice of America or the BBC. The reason for this is the appearance of more open and honest information about what is happening in the country, the polemical spirit, the discussions, and the confrontation of various opposing points of view and opinions.

From Chapter 8, "We and the Outside World"

The problem we are discussing has another side: do we treat foreigners who come to the USSR the same way we treat our own people? A stimulus to the discussion of this question was provided by an article from film producer Stanislav Govorukhin, published in Sovetskaia Kultura (13 July 1987). The article had a striking title: "Welcome, or Entry Prohibited," and it was devoted to the moral costs of the existing system of special services for foreigners in the USSR:

At one time, I loved staying here [in Yalta]. But with the years such trips stopped providing happiness, and later even began to produce only irritation and offense. Much has changed for the worse since that time, both in big things and small details . . .

Yes, it is uncomfortable to be a citizen with a Soviet passport in your pocket in this town. It is true there are sanitoria, tourist centers, and spas open to them here. In the final analysis, local residents accommodate even social outcasts for a price. But still, how many places do you think there are for Soviet citizens in hotels with elementary conveniences? Go ahead! Stretch your imagination! We are talking here about greater Yalta—a huge city, which has doubled or tripled in size in recent years, and is the center of attraction for vacationers from all countries. So, how many?

As the First Secretary of the Yalta Party City Council, A. Kriachun, informed us, ninety-four places. Upon inquiry: rooms with only one washbasin are considered rooms with conveniences. That is how it is!

Meanwhile, in the last fifteen years in Yalta, hotel construction has been in full swing. But here is the paradox: the more hotels that are built, the fewer places remain for Soviet citizens. Quite recently, two famous hotels were at the service of visitors—the Oreanda and the Tavrida. The Oreanda has been re-equipped and made into a luxury hotel. Now only wealthy foreigners can stay there. The same fate awaits the Tavrida. In the meantime, it houses an Intourist hostel.

Eleven years ago, when the 16-story mass of the Hotel Yalta had just been erected, and around it work furiously progressed on building a pool, sauna, and tennis courts, Soviet citizens were allowed in the hotel. Somehow this was understandable to us ourselves, since our people "are used to everything." To them, the crashing of pick hammers and grinding of steam shovels is not a hindrance; let them be grateful that they were just allowed to stay. But as soon as work around the hotel was completed, access to the hotel was closed to citizens with Soviet passports. No, no, we will be "just" until the end, and admit them sometimes. In the off-season, or if the big foreign reception area were torn down—then they would be allowed. Grudgingly, as if doing people a favor, with sour expressions and haughty little smiles—they register them. But then it is necessary to be prepared for all kinds of humiliations.

In the first place, they give you a visitor's card in a different color than for Intourist. This is to signify that you will be served last, and not all of the conveniences of the hotel are meant for you. For example, on this visit they would not allow you on the comfortable beach of the Hotel Yalta; it is for foreign tourists . . .

. . . It is striking, what perceptible differences there are between foreign citizens and our own natives, and not in clothing, of course—in attire and such we are equally respectable—but in manner of behavior. Foreigners are carefree, relaxed, talk loudly, and feel themselves masters of the area. Our countrymen, though, hug the walls, look timid in the cafes and restaurants, and enter the pool apprehensively . . .

. . . How many times in conversations with Intourist workers have we run across the remarks:

We do not want rubles. We need foreign currency!

Yes, the state needs foreign currency—marks, pounds, francs, dinars, dollars. With them you can buy computers, machine-tools, medical equipment, clothing, perfume. But isn't this foreign currency too costly to us?

When a waiter, porter, or manager wags his tail in front of a foreigner, but talks rudely, disrespectfully, boorishly with Soviet citizens, in my eyes he looks like a slave. He is a slave; he has the psychology of a slave. Just think: we do not prevent such a stratum of human slaves from arising, under our own eyes, in our own society . . .

The state needs foreign currency, of course, but even more necessary to it in this complex moment of reconstructing our whole way of life are people who will carry out perestroika in practice. It is essential that they know that their labor will be rewarded, that their efforts will be compensated, that society cares about them, and that no one will dare to humiliate them or treat them with insufficient respect.

Is it not time, finally, to restore respect to the Soviet passport?

Let us think about our children. Let them not envy foreigners in any way!

Also from Chapter 8, "We and the Outside World"

[The editors continue:]

The residue of "cold war" psychology and bureaucratic logic, especially where foreigners are concerned, has not yet been eliminated from Soviet life. Its consequences are described by V. Ustich in a letter to Ogonyok (no. 48, 1987):

For around four years I have worked as a translator in the Krasnodar chamber of commerce in the section concerned with the assembly of various types of equipment. A variety of people visit us, but I formed good, friendly relations with a few, with those who are interested in our country and sympathize with us. When our son was born, we received congratulations from friends and acquaintances, including some from abroad.

One of the West German specialists, with whom our family had long been in correspondence, was to travel through Krasnodar to Novorossiisk. He informed us of this by telegram and asked to visit us. He wanted to come here to deliver a present on the birth of our child—a romper suit and matching booties, but he had to travel to the center of town to the chamber of commerce, which is located not far from our house. The specialist from West Germany asked an acquaintance, A.C. Zapunian, for permission to drop in on us for 10-15 minutes to congratulate my wife personally, deliver the present from his family, and take photographs with us. From the first to the last minutes of his visit with us—about 25 minutes—Zapunian was present, and he wrote down the data from my passport, although he had known me for three years already.

A week later, we said farewell to the specialist from West Germany, and at the airport, in the presence of Zapunian, gave him a set of knives and forks as a keepsake.

On May 8th of this year, I was summoned to the police station, where an official of the OVIR [Department of Visas and Registration], Nina Nikolaevna Kirichenko, in the presence of the deputy chief of the OVIR in Krasnodar (whose name I did not catch) "talked" with me about violation of the law, and about the depravity of friendly relations with citizens from abroad, especially from capitalist countries. The "conversation" went by the book: "They killed 20 million of our people . . . ," "To sell the Motherland for finery," "What kind of a suit is that you are wearing?" (I bought it, incidentally, at a shop here), "With him everything is clear."

Nina Nikolaevna read me the law which I allegedly had violated, but out of everything enumerated: assignment of a dwelling, services, deals—I had not violated a single condition. In the end, the deputy chief of the OVIR dwelled on the fact that I had created the preconditions for a violation—a deviation from the program.

"We have warned you the first time," they said to me in conclusion. "In your free time, you do not have the right to meet with foreigners. All the same, we will know who visits you. The second time, the fine will be 50 rubles." They poured out further threats in connection with my future.

This is how I turned into a criminal and internal enemy of our country. The head of the chamber of commerce, I.V. Milovanov, prohibited everyone from giving me even written work. Some acquaintances began to avoid my area. How can one correlate what happened to me with our official directions on trust in international collaboration, or with broadcasts stating that people from different countries must get to know one another better, or, finally, with the simplification of the procedure of official registration for travel to socialist countries?

In a postscript, Andrei Melville comments: Although much has changed in Soviet society since the book was completed, these arguments continue to be voiced in the current discussions on perestroika and glasnost. These issues, along with the new ones, mark the dividing lines among various political and ideological camps in the USSR. This is an attempt to provide the American reader with an understanding of the arguments and counter-arguments of the major ongoing debates.

■ WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from a tour of the garden on a Sunday afternoon to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 49-50. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops.

In addition, there are other events which enrich life at Esalen. There are frequent forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, choirs, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. Finally, there is a community event schedule that is offered; please check the bulletin board for details.

The Rebirth of Nature:
New Science and the Revival of Animism

Rupert Sheldrake

Our civilization is currently based on a split attitude toward Nature. On weekdays, for most people, Nature is mechanistic and inanimate, the Earth just a repository of natural resources to be exploited for human ends. But on weekends and holidays, a different attitude prevails as millions "get back to Nature." In this romantic side of our being, Nature is alive and known through direct experience.

In this workshop, participants will examine the historical roots of this split and how recent developments in science are transcending the mechanistic theory of Nature. The universe is no longer a machine running down; the cosmos is more like a developing organism with an inherent memory, as is our planet, Gaia. This will be a weekend to explore consequences and implications of the revival of animism, for the greening of politics and economics, and for the resacralizing of Nature. $325

Week of September 2–7

Discovering Your Myth:
A Jungian Experience

John Nicholas

Meaninglessness inhibits the fullness of life and can, therefore, be equated with illness; meaningfulness makes a great many things endurable, perhaps everything.—C.G. Jung

To discover ourselves and the meaningfulness of our lives, we each must ask what Jung considered the most important question, What myth am I living? This will be a workshop in which to ask that question. Participants will recollect and reflect on the dreams of childhood, memories of ancestors, tales of heroes and heroines, personal victories and defeats, false turnings and fateful detours. Through a variety of creative processes, painting and drawing, guided imagery and active imagination, and especially storytelling, they will examine and express the archetypal patterns that have shaped and directed their lives. $630

Self-Acceptance Training:
Basic

Richard Olney & Mari Krieger

Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. It is defined as "the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgment, self-criticism, or self-evaluation." The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual's relationship with the universe.

Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cognitive examination of the individual's "pretends" and illusions that obstruct self-acceptance.

This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Limited to 25 people. $630

Action Theater:
The Body as Teacher

Ruth Zaporah

We are born in our bodies; we are born actors. As children we know how to act, to express, to ritualize our feelings, thoughts, and fantasies. As we culturalize, we suppress our expressions until we are left with only a memory of knowing.

This workshop takes participants through a process of expressive expansion via improvisational theater and movement forms. It offers access to images behind feelings, revealing one's inner reality and the world between the cracks of human expression.

Action Theater exercises facilitate spontaneous movement while maintaining form. This work generates clearly articulated images of the self as the body becomes teacher and the individual moves beyond personality toward spokesperson and archetype. Habit changes to choice, making it possible to experience states deep within the psyche. Thus, personal resources, material normally below the threshold of awareness, become the text for physical, verbal, and vocal imagery.

This workshop accommodates the novice, the explorer, and the practiced. $630

A Look Within

Jessica Moore Britt & Scott Layton

This will be a week for participants to attend to and explore themselves away from their usual busy lives. As they settle into the grandeur of Big Sur and the quiet within, they can begin to penetrate through their conditioned views of themselves and the world.

The point of inquiry will be the relationship of the mind, body, and emotions and the essential nature of the self. Participants will focus on understanding who and what they are, especially as beings of compassion, strength, will, power, joy, and presence. They will explore how their past conditioning and present beliefs block their awareness of these qualities in themselves. The tools for self-discovery will be an interplay of Eastern and Western practices, including Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, touch, movement, and Reichian/gestalt work. This time, dedicated to being present and looking within, holds the possibility for participants to open their perceptions so they might obtain a deeper appreciation for who they are.

September 2–9

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting—to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants are given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

For further information about this workshop, contact: The Painting Experience Studio, 2101 20th Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94116; (415) 564-8515.

Inner Sound and Voice

Jill Purce

This is a workshop of practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the Self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psychophysical effects of breathing, chanting, mantric and sonic meditations, learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance, to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other methods.

Recovery for Adult Children and Co-Dependents

Julie Bowden

This week-long journey will be a healing of the "child within" in an atmosphere of safety and respect. Experiencing and integrating the past allows us to live in the present, no longer tyrannized by previous pain and outmoded behaviors. We are freed to be more fully in relationship with ourselves and others. People in all stages of recovery are welcome, as are treatment providers. $630

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive

Ayala Pines

When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. Unfortunately, more often than not, with the dampening effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, and it is not caused by major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfactions, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find their own romantic schemata and to rekindle the romantic images they shared at the beginning of their relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive in their relationships and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

The Life Energy Process™

Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process workshop is a spiritually-oriented approach to body work and life-style which allows individuals direct contact with the spiritual self through energy vibrations. This method is facilitated by specific intensive and subtle movements which participants may find open them to their own healing abilities, allowing them to release unfinished emotions, radiational and chemical toxins, and psychological disturbances. From that point of greater clarity, they may move to the next step in their personal development. Participants continue this energy work physically and verbally through process inquiry and dialogue with the leader as they examine the superficial trace problems of their everyday lives and explore their deeper energy disturbances through energy patterning.

Energetic forms of massage, dance, and theater may be included in this process. Some of the work will be individual, some will be hands-on with partners. The workshop may be of particular interest to professionals and laypersons alike who are excited by the integration of Eastern and Western methods with the new physics for personal, social, and organizational evolution.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (insight) meditation practice is a systematic examination of the mind/body process through calm and focused awareness. Learning to observe experience from a place of stillness enables one to relate to life without fear or clinging. One begins to accept pleasure and pain, fear and joy, with increasing equanimity and balance. Life is seen as a constantly changing process. Insight is the deepening experience of the process itself, free of interpretation, leading to wisdom and compassion.

This seminar is designed for those who have had no previous meditation experience as well as for those who wish to deepen their practice. Meditation instruction, the philosophy behind the practice, group discussions, and actual practice periods will be offered. Special emphasis will be placed on how to integrate Vipassana practice in daily life after the workshop is over.

The Feeling Process

Janet Zuckerman

For many people, feelings are something mysterious, something to keep to oneself, or something to think about. This workshop is about all the steps involved in learning to experience, respect, and honor one's feeling process in a way that can increase vitality and personal effectiveness. Participants may learn to separate feelings from thoughts, learn from their own body rhythms, learn to contact their own wisdom, and participate in the choice of expression or depression.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $325

Fun with the Violin: For Adults Who Always Wanted to Play a Musical Instrument and Never Have

Diane Egli

For the adult who would like to play a musical instrument, but never had lessons as a child, or who used to play, but hasn't since childhood, this workshop could be just the opportunity to learn to play the violin—and have fun doing it. This will be a time for participants to increase their awareness of how it feels to learn a new skill—the challenge, the excitement, the frustration, and the success of accomplishment. Included in the workshop will be various activities to enhance violin playing, such as movement, music, and rhythm exercises. Participants are asked to bring a tape recorder and tapes.

New Pathways in Human Evolution

Colin Wilson

Colin Wilson writes: "Soon after publication of The Outsider in 1956, I came to recognize that the underlying message of that book is that man is now on the point of an evolutionary breakthrough to a higher level of consciousness. In the years since then, this conviction has only increased. The question that has now come to preoccupy me is: are there disciplines or methods by which this process could be accelerated in the individual? Important clues are offered in the work of many 19th century romantics. In our own time, these have been developed by psychologists like Maslow and Jung, and philosophers like Husserl and Heidegger. My own work is an attempt to synthesize these many 'glimpses' into a unified body of knowledge, and to develop methods of using this knowledge to raise the level of consciousness in the individual. I believe that within a fairly short space of time—perhaps a mere generation—we shall see the emergence of a new type of human being, and that many people now alive may be the first to accomplish this breakthrough. $325

To make effective, creative choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set—the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressures of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

In this week, participants will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and bouyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $630

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

It is a journey that every one of us can take, provided we have the right map. This workshop offers clear directions for the journey of mastery in whatever field you may choose. It will include discussion, demonstration, and movement exercises from Leonard Energy Training (LET) which emphasize mastery in daily life. For those familiar with LET, this workshop will present new material. Some of the topics to be addressed:

- Five keys to mastery
- How to avoid being a Dabbler, Obsessive, or Hacker
- Creating a vision
- The secrets of practice
- Staying balanced and centered on the path of mastery
- Avoiding pitfalls
- Playing the edge
- Loving the plateau
- Dealing with conflict
- Negotiating with change
- Staying on the path
- Getting energy from mastery

This workshop involves physical movement, but is not strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Shaman Sculpture: Making Objects of Empowerment

Nancy Azara

This workshop, which is inspired by shamanism, is for people who wish to explore their inner power and make artworks charged with that power.

Shamans believe that the universe has three levels—the sky, the earth, and the underworld—all connected by a central axis, the body. They use vision quests to gain access to these worlds, which are the source of healing and personal power. In this workshop, participants will use guided meditation to take this same journey, exploring the world of unseen reality and various aspects of their minds and spirits. The instructor will help each person identify and clarify the forms and images of his or her deeper self throughout their journeys. They will then make objects which embody these images, including charts, diagrams, and body casts, to be incorporated later in individual sculptures which will become their own power objects.

Participants are asked to bring the following materials: a box of Paris Craft plaster bandages, brushes and paints, scissors, mixing bowl, sketch pad, drop cloth, old clothing to wear and to use in their sculptures, and any other objects they would like to incorporate.

$630 (plus $15 materials fee for additional supplies, paid directly to the leader)

Journey to the Heart

Joseph Chilton Pearce

For the last three decades, Joseph Chilton Pearce has been synthesizing scientific brain research in physics, biology, and psychology in an effort to understand and map nature's plan for the development of human intelligence. He writes:

"The intelligence of the heart is the only force that can pull our fragments of self together; it is the nurturing power so many of us missed right from the beginning of life, that unconditional love which alone would have assured us of the evolutionary progress nature intended. That progress is nothing but the progression of love toward its own source, and that source is the heart."

In this seminar, Pearce will share his findings on the three-part human brain and how each part has its own language, its own development cycle, its own purpose. He will talk about the difference between intellect and intelligence, the ego's inability to self-analyze, and the physiological connection between the heart and the brain that prevents our triunal brain from being continually at war with itself.

Discourse, discussion, contemplation, and meditation will offer seminarians a glimpse of their own developmental cycle—where it was rich, where lacking—and acceptance of their own perfection, and tools for enriching the inner journey to their hearts.

Co

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

This is a workshop for people helpers. Everyone has seen duets in ballet in which the male dancer follows the prima ballerina, supporting her leaps and turns. Many human dyads are similar. One person is in the foreground while the other, the "co," accepts a background position. The concerns of the focal person come first. They define the relationship either by explicit agreement, as in psychotherapy and medicine, or implicitly, as in many marriages.

The focus acts; the co tracks. The focus makes a movement and the co, like a dance partner, adjusts. What the focus needs, the co provides. The co is receptive, responsive, attentive, enabling, facilitating.

Cos can be found nurturing the young and the frail elderly, ministering to the disturbed, nursing the sick, designing houses for the wealthy, and in many other situations throughout society. Sometimes these co relationships are a vocational choice and a charitable way of life. Sometimes, as with co-dependencies and co-alcoholics, they are dysfunctional and harmful.

We will spend the weekend studying, through group experiential exercises and discussions, when, where, why, and how to co, and the politics of both entering into and refraining from such relationships.

Psychology of Spiritual Essence: Introduction to Ridhwan Work

Ridhwan Work School Faculty

Ridhwan, translated from Arabic, means contentment. The Ridhwan Work School is dedicated to the development of the human essence. It uses primarily the Diamond Approach, a modern, psychological method used as a spiritual practice, to guide students to a precise understanding of their personal experience. By understanding one's discontent, longing, emptiness, and life situations, it becomes possible to realize the innate aspects of love, awareness, will, and joy. Such precision offers psychological clarity and ultimately leads to spiritual presence.

This workshop will use conceptual presentations, interpersonal exercises, meditation, and personal emotional work to activate the essential aspects of presence and resolve the psychological barriers against them. It is for individuals who have done a lot of emotional and growth work, and speaks to the longing of the heart for what will truly fulfill it. In such a short time, participants may only get a taste of this essence, but they can go a long way in terms of awakening their sleeping potential. Private sessions will be available for an additional fee.

Behind the Mask: Turning Wounding into Creative Action

Elisa Lodge

Masks have long been known for their healing and transformative properties. They invite the wearer into dimensions of expressive behavior not ordinarily permitted in daily life. Behind the mask, people have a safe practice ground in which to experiment with body image, breath, voice, energy, and movement. As an expressive art form, this approach can benefit those in treatment programs or those looking for ways of growth and change. It provides a means for contrasting habitual, difficult ways of being with more heartfelt ones, and can help turn wounds and fears into resources for empathy and creative action.

This workshop will combine mask work with other expressive forms such as performance art and dance, and will include gestalt, psychosynthesis, and Rolf movement. It may be particularly valuable for those in the helping professions who wish to integrate these forms into their work with clients. $630

Joan Ullyot

All of us, as human beings, are natural running animals. But civilization and technology combine to alienate us from this instinctive side of ourselves. Non-runners lament that they don't know how to run, while competitors puzzle over choosing the right training. This course is designed to take runners of all levels inward, to find and express the runner within, to free themselves to run easily and joyously, longer and faster.

In addition to group runs, discussions of training principles, and practice of methods such as hill-bounding, this workshop will include mental training exercises developed recently by sports psychologists. These include relaxation and guided imagery, affirmations, breathing and body awareness, race visualizations, and associative focusing. The inner confidence and athletic energies released by these methods can be harnessed to run a personal best in a fall marathon or simply to experience the beauty of a daily jog. Limited to 20 participants, to allow for work on individual goals. $630

Judyth Weaver

In our busy lives we do so much—but how do we do it? Are we fully aware of our actions and the consequences of what we do? Are our actions as beneficial to ourselves as they could be? Are we as kindly to ourselves as we could be? Could our lives be easier or more energetically economical? What are we doing to/with ourselves, and how does that affect us and others, our health, our longevity, our relationships, work, well-being?

This workshop will give participants opportunities to "tune in" and become more aware of how they live on many levels. The workshop is experiential: through awareness of breath, self, interactions with others, and by focusing on everyday activities such as walking, standing, sitting, touching, giving, receiving, and the processing of what occurs when necessary, participants will be able to focus and develop a fuller sense of mindfulness.

This is direct study of one's experience and can provide a practice ground for change and knowledge of how to go about it. Such awareness of personal needs and desires can increase one's chances for becoming a fuller, more realized, and healthier human being.

Weekend Massage Intensive

Laurie Lioness Parizek & Attila Vaas

Massage is a practical approach to stress relief and greater sensory awareness. This weekend workshop will provide instruction in basic methods used in giving a massage, with additional work on quality of touch, breath awareness, centering, and sensitive rapport between partners.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $325

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

This workshop is open to anyone interested in learning to recognize, trust, and use their psi abilities. The leaders will use exercises designed to aid participants in recognizing their perceptive styles and trusting the intuitive input they normally receive. Anne Armstrong will use her tracking abilities, acquired from over twenty-five years in this field, to assist participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

One of the basic objectives of the workshop is to demystify the intuitive/psychic process and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives—personal, professional, and spiritual. The workshop will include personal psychic scans and practice on selected cases. $325

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Beliefs, fears, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate—in the moment—to ourselves, to our work, and to those we love.

The workshop includes periods of intense body work for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dream work, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge. $325

Terence McKenna

From the Voynich manuscript to the villages of Ceram's forested interior, there are gentle, uncharted backwaters in the physical and intellectual world that can be a source of renewed vigor for thoughtful people caught in the meltdown of historical society. Author Terence McKenna brings his perspective to the idea of a spiritual path for each of us and an impending transformation of the human world that will involve everyone.

Participants will examine human attitudes toward the Other, discuss Time and its mysteries, the nature of language, and methods of ecstasy that have developed in non-Western societies to navigate to and from invisible worlds. The role of hallucinogenic plants will be discussed in depth—their role in shamanism and their impact on the evolution of human cultures and social forms. Other topics will include choices about spiritual development and the roles that each person may play in the unfolding of the post-historical future.

Global perspectives and psychedelic poetics begin with stories and talk of far places and the experiences that can take flower there. Share musings upon people, plants, cultural migrations, religious conversions, visions, conspiracies, and hierophanies. The aim will be another conjuration of philosophy as you like it. $325

Week of September 30–October 5

Basic Esalen Massage

Char Pias Brenner & Arthur Munyer

Touch is a vital element in any human being's development. Yet, many people receive little physical contact or nurturing, and are often cut off from their body's abilities to sense. This may be due to social and religious mores, or perhaps just from living alone.

Massage can facilitate a process of unfolding. The method for this workshop will be basic Esalen massage, with emphasis on inner states of consciousness, presence, compassion, humor, nurturing, and receptivity. The leaders will incorporate breath awareness, movement, meditation, grounding, and centering to help participants revive body, mind, and spirit.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $630

A Workshop for Couples with David Schiffman

This workshop will focus on reawakening and developing positive, mutual supports that are at the root of satisfying couple relationships. The emphasis will be on creating clear and truthful expressions of loving and personal integrity. Participants will re-examine their beliefs and habits through the use of intuitional sensing, risk-taking structures, guided imagery, and gestalt awareness methods. $630

The Nature of Movement: Aikido and Wilderness

Steven Harper & Wendy Palmer

In this week-long workshop, participants will work indoors with energy awareness and principles derived from aikido, and outdoors on short day-hikes into Big Sur's backcountry to explore the movement that nature inspires. Both aikido and hiking are moving meditations which, when done well, require the individual to be in harmony with the natural world. There will be an opportunity to take what is learned on the aikido mat out into the natural world and bring what is learned from nature onto the aikido mat. Participants can then begin to integrate what they learn from aikido and from nature into their lives.

All evenings and most meals will be at Esalen. Participants need not have previous experience in aikido or hiking. $630

The Body as History

Lisbeth Marcher & Erik Jarlnaes

The workshop leaders are from Denmark, practitioners of a system of working with the body, of which Lisbeth Marcher is a founder. In this system, by gauging the tonicity of a muscle and knowing when and how it came into play in infant and childhood development, it is possible to "read" a precise psycho-history. Specific issues that are contained in these muscles can be reevoked as well. This system also works with the person's undeveloped resources, those abilities given up on and which often correspond to feelings of resignation. Bringing these resources into play encourages the individual to drop old, unfulfilling modes of protection.

This is an experiential workshop; participants will focus on body movement and energy, using them to bring about expression and integration of developmental stages. $630

The Call to Presence

Chlöe Goodchild

"The call" is the wisdom cry of the heart. Voice of an inner authority, it reveals the true nature of one's creative impulse and life direction. What is life calling you to?

Within a working context that integrates Indian-based voice and sound work, movement and self-observation, mystical texts and contemplative practices, participants will discover how to respond to their inner calling with attention and insight. This course may be of particular value to those already committed to a specific practice or art form and who wish to connect creative action with that silent presence, their inspirational source.

Participants are asked to bring a 2-10 minute presentation of their own design (a poem, song, theater piece, painting, etc.) which communicates their understanding of "the call" as it manifests in their life. Each person will have several opportunities to work with the leader in the presence of the group. $630

The Aesthetic Self

Luc Brebion

To take part in the experience of beauty, we must learn to contemplate. We must immerse ourselves in a work of art so that it opens and releases the substance it contains, so that we can be in the presence of the artist and bring him or her alive in us.

The Aesthetic Self workshop will use a multi-media approach to help people penetrate and be absorbed by a work of art. Participants will find themselves in the company of Johannes Vermeer, Marcel Proust, Jan van Eyck, Cesar Vallejo, Johann Sebastian Bach, and Raoul Dufy. $325

Religious text tells us, Life is suffering. Muriel James paraphrases this to, Suffering can be optional. Even in the midst of career, family, and a world that desperately needs our attention, suffering is not our moral imperative. In fact, joy, laughter, and determination might serve us better in responding to personal and global needs. Participants and the leader will explore this idea and others, including the notions of suffering and happiness in the context of therapy.

Muriel James, age 73, is a psychologist and author with a lifetime of careers that include work as a safety engineer in a World War II shipyard and as director of a residential treatment center for adolescents. She has recently returned to the university for further post-doctoral studies. $325

Nick Herbert

Quantum theory, our most up-to-date description of the physical world and the conceptual basis for computer chips, lasers, and superconductors, leads us to believe that atoms and other quantum entities dwell in a bizarre state of existence quite different from the stable world of the macrocosm. On the level of everyday life, quantum effects are imperceptibly small, but what of the world of the mind?

Reviewing basic quantum reality in a non-mathematical fashion, the leader and participants will explore the hypothesis that human consciousness is a quantum effect, reinterpreting familiar experiences and seeking new ones compatible with a quantum-based model of mind. Three key concepts to be examined in this context are freedom, ambiguity, and connectedness. $325

Richard Strozzi Heckler

This seminar will examine the notions of aggression, initiation rites, courage, and risk-taking in the context of the warrior ideal. Does the discipline of harmony mean the taming of aggression? To live in peace do we also need to accept and understand violence? Is it possible to distinguish the warrior from war? Can the warrior virtues of courage, commitment, clarity, generosity, service, and skillful action be invoked without the catalyst of hostile fire?

These questions will be the starting point for a workshop conducted in the warrior spirit of "life at stake." Exercises taken from aikido, along with introspection, sharing, and guided meditations, will allow participants to experience the possibilities of embodying warrior virtues without war.

Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming

Stephen LaBerge

Lucid dreaming means dreaming while knowing that one is dreaming. The wakeful consciousness of this extraordinary state allows for creative responses to dreams and affords the opportunity to control them. This control gives the freedom to explore a remarkable range of possibilities, from indulging in one's wildest fantasies to following one's highest spiritual aspirations.

For most individuals, lucid dreams are as rare as the waking peak experiences to which they are analogous. This need not be so, and workshop participants will be shown how to develop the skill of lucid dreaming. They will have the opportunity to use a feedback device for the induction of lucid dreams. The device, called The Dreamlight™, consists of a sleep mask fitted with sensors and lights connected to a small box that causes the lights to flash during REM (dreaming) sleep. When the lights flash, the dreamer can remember that he/she is dreaming.

This workshop is intended for avid dreamers. It will include discussions and experiential demonstrations of the nature of consciousness and how individuals construct their perceptual worlds. Participants will be exposed to a variety of uses of lucid dreaming, including self-exploration, creative problem-solving, healing, adventure, and perhaps most important, a way of self-integration leading to the transpersonal realms.

Golf in the Kingdom... an exploration of the inner game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart.—Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It may be experienced not simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

In these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two of the days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

T'ai Chi Ch'uan:
An East/West Approach

Kenn Chase

This seminar will present a demonstration form of t'ai chi ch'uan, a shortened version derived from the classical Yang style, which contains 54 balanced, fluid, and graceful postures. Also included will be mind/body alignment methods, Chi Kung Taoist breathing methods, and hours of practice and refinement of the traditional t'ai chi movements. Practiced 5 to 10 minutes daily, this gentle martial art can calm the mind and aid the student in achieving a centered perspective for daily living in a busy world.

The Heart of the Matter:
The Core Self

Ronald Alexander & Bruce Gregory

Resources for healing, such as spontaneity, curiosity, trust, creativity, and joy, are found in the core self. Time also heals and helps activate these resources. This workshop will assist participants in their process of healing and offer ways to repattern dysfunctional behaviors connected to living, working, loving, and relating.

The goals of this work are: to become free of constraints and self-images of the past; to become conscious in the present moment; to communicate well; to become quiet; to develop a cohesive personal vision. The tools will include gestalt practice, microanalysis of mind, body process, metaphor, and Vipassana (insight) meditation. $630

The Human Element in Organizations

Will & Ailish Schutz

Advances in understanding human behavior and relationships forged in the 1960s and 1970s have provided needed insight and methods for corporate America. Studies on the body and energy converged with discoveries from psychological and spiritual disciplines to form the basis for a more profound approach to running our nation's organizations. The timing is fortunate, since the decline in this country's organizational effectiveness (compared to that of many Asian and European countries) is becoming precipitous.

This seminar combines insights from the human potential movement with scientific approaches to management. Over the past decade it has been used to improve productivity in such American organizations as Procter & Gamble, AT&T, NASA, and Amdahl, and in Japan, Sweden, Italy, and Mexico. For the first time it is being offered at Esalen to members of top management who wish to try out this fresh, innovative approach.

Help for Adult Children of "Normal" Parents:
The Continuum Concept

Jean Liedloff

Jean Liedloff has developed a set of principles that guides clients toward an understanding of the beliefs and expectations formed in baby- and childhood that chronically undermine their capacity to act from accurate, adult perception of Self and Other. In her years of living in the South American jungle with Stone Age Indians, Liedloff observed a norm of human well-being that offers a reliable paradigm of mental and emotional health that has been missing from our attempts to attain individual and social fulfillment. Her work with clients is based on principles extrapolated from these observations. Normalcy, as we know it, is viewed as a pathology and new (ancient) criteria suddenly make sense of many of our problems.

This workshop will present methods that can change a client's self-defeating beliefs, at his or her own optimum pace, which participants will experience from both the client's and guide's points of view. It is for professionals and non-professionals. Please see page 16 to arrange for child care at Gazebo School/Park.

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as base camp, the group will explore different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $325

Interpreter Yuri Tovbin and Paul Pozner, an associate of the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program since 1980, in Moscow in 1987.

A Weekend with David Schiffman

The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning. $325

Somatics: Internal Mastery of Muscles and Emotions

Thomas Hanna

The founder of the journal Somatics will teach basic principles of somatic learning, central to which is controlling neuromuscular responses to emotional states. Uncontrolled emotional responses lead, eventually, to distortions of lower back, shoulders, and neck with, typically, chronic stiffness and soreness in these areas. Learning control of one's emotional response can lead to inner calmness as well as ease in muscular tone and body posture.

The Yoga of Business

Tama Starr

Many people confront the same worldly dilemma: how to optimize success without betraying their ideals. This workshop suggests that, in a holistic universe, the same principles apply to walking the canyons of Wall Street as climbing the peaks of the Himalayas. Participants—whether artists, business professionals, blue or white collar workers—will see how to apply the tenets of yoga, t'ai chi, and gestalt to the workplace.

Themes to be explored include: the nature of Maya (business, wealth, and the American Dream); game theory (the win-win situation); success (how to deal with failure); the art of war (Krishna, Sun Tsu, Musashi, Machiavelli, Muhammad Ali); strategies and tactics (the art of survival). Practical studies and exercises will include: elementary mind-reading; "invisible yoga"; the use of myth and magic; methods of leadership (managing others through managing yourself); the uses of stress and conflict; developing "the path with heart."

Participants will emerge with usable tools for building a more fulfilling future. $325

Metaphors We Live By

George Lakoff

Metaphor is the means by which we understand what we experience. As we grow up, we acquire hundreds of standardized but largely unconscious metaphors that are built into our language. We think, act, and even dream using these metaphors. We have metaphors for comprehending everything from time and causation to emotions, morality, love, and even the nature of life and death.

Our unconscious capacity for metaphor is awesome in power. It is liberating in that it permits both abstract thought and the workings of our imagination; it can be stultifying when it limits our possibilities. As long as it remains inaccessible to consciousness, we can neither appreciate its magnificence nor see where it confines us.

This workshop has several goals: first, to enable participants to become conscious of the metaphors that govern their thoughts and actions; second, to reveal how these everyday metaphors are manifest in poetry and myth, and how they vary in other cultures; third, to develop skills in using metaphor to make new sense of their lives.

Trigger Point and Esalen Massage: Advanced Workshop

Arthur Munyer
& Esalen Massage Practitioners

The human body is a rich source of information and intelligence. Trigger point, the movement of myofascial tissue through soft, deep contact with pressure points, and Esalen massage are methods of working with the body that can help the practitioner communicate with stressed, blocked, and chronically troubled areas. This workshop will combine these modalities, along with joint release, movement, and studies in anatomy. It will also address concerns of burnout, depression, creativity, and peer support for those who have chosen a demanding profession. It is especially suggested for body workers, physicians, physical therapists, chiropractors, and other health care practitioners who want to expand their hands-on skills.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $630

Romance and Love

Gabriele Hilberg

Everybody is searching for love. People commonly think of love as the emotion they feel when attracted to another person, or they interpret parental instinct as love. There is a great amount of confusion and misperception about love which invariably leads to disappointment and rejection.

Participants will identify those distorted concepts and expectations that get in their way of having sane, loving relationships. They will explore the patterns of "being loving" that they were exposed to in their families of origin. Learning to be sensitive and receptive to how others experience being loved makes it possible to break the cycle of imposing one's own ideas of love onto them. This workshop will assist participants in getting off the roller coaster of ego-based emotional love by helping them explore their capacity to love and form lasting relationships. $630

Karen Paine-Gernée & Rick Paine

Finding self-confidence, joy, love, and trust is not about blaming one's parents. The injury, however, created by growing up in families who covered their pain with abusive, dysfunctional, addicted, or self-absorbed behavior is profound. As children shut down their feelings and deny their inner selves, they bury their capacity for joy along with their pain. Then, as adults, they burden their relationships with manipulative, co-dependent behavior that inhibits trust and growth.

The leaders grew up in dysfunctional families. Their experienced and gentle guidance provides participants with safety and challenge for searching out the thread which will unravel the knots that keep them tied to a wounded past.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $630

Biodrama:
Know Your Self, Live Your Self

Lorenzo Ostuni, Katriona Munthe & the Biodramatists: Fiorella Fiore, Marily Borgazzi, Rosaria Riccio, and Franco Bonsante

Biodrama is a method for developing human potential and for personal renewal. It employs dream, body language, poetry, imagery, symbols, and music; it is both contemplative and active work. Its roots go back three thousand years to the spiritual culture of ancient Greece, uniting the Orphic and Eleusinian Mysteries with present-day psychological research.

Participants will be invited to undertake a mystic journey in which to experience fundamental moments of their lives: birth, love, and death. They will work on visions and emotions of preceding states of consciousness and may find that this representative process helps integrate their individual mystery with the collective experience of humankind. This live performance, the first part of Biodrama, often elicits a regenerating experience for the protagonist. Ostuni's commentary on this performance/experience is the second part of Biodrama and will be tape-recorded for each participant.

This ritual performance workshop will be conducted in Italian and English. $630

Creative Writing Brainstorming

Herbert Gold

From feeling to expression to communication, this workshop will carry participants into the possibilities of making literature. Exploring an experience different for everyone, yet shared by all, they will probe for the riches within.

Participants should bring typewriter, word processor, pen, soft pencil, or clay tablets and stylus to the meetings. A situation will be called forth—love, death, ambition, pride, fear, hatred, jealousy—and after preparation in the discussion, participants will write. Then they will read and rewrite each other's work. They may expect to go from truth to lying: from recollection to art.

What may develop is a sense of style and control as a part of the mastery of experience. Participants will practice the freedom of imagination by giving shape to it. $325

The Subtle Self in Motion

Judy Blackstone

This workshop offers subtle, concentrated work to help participants truly inhabit their bodies. Mind-breath-body exercises will be used to awaken consciousness of the inner depths of the body, to attune to the emotional underpinnings of bodily tensions, and to release the bound energy of old pain.

The personal themes which emerge from this work will be explored verbally in a supportive group setting and in a free movement class for the expression of nonverbal experience. There will be daily meditation practice as well as sound and visualization exercises for penetrating to the core of the body-mind, to a level of unified awareness. Through this unbroken contact with the self, participants may discover the joy, health, and spontaneity of their essential nature. This workshop will not be physically taxing; the emphasis will be on introspective work. $325

Men's Mysteries, Women's Wisdom

Sam Keen & Jananne Lovett-Keen

The leaders write: "Join us in delving into the mysteries of womanhood and manhood and in deepening the ability to love. On this journey we will use music, myth, philosophy, and storytelling to explore:

- Men's and women's spiritual paths
- The rites of womanhood and manhood
- The shadows we cast
- Overcoming fears of one another
- The limits of intimacy between the sexes
- The gifts we bring to each other
- The battle between the sexes
- Ending the blame game
- Breaking free from old roles
- Ideas of love that stop us from loving
- New understandings of love

"Come by yourself or with someone you want to love better. Bring your questions, your unfulfilled longings, your hopes for reconciliation between the sexes, your desire to be a better partner in the dance of love."

Sports Massage

David Streeter

Since its introduction to this country, sports massage has undergone many changes. Standard cross-friction and compression strokes have been enhanced by trigger point and neuromuscular methods. This five-day intensive will demonstrate how to incorporate these modalities into a Swedish or Esalen massage session.

In order to be effective, the practitioner must have an understanding of anatomy and his/her own body usage, so an important part of this workshop will be daily "body-dynamics," a movement class developed at Esalen for massage students, and brief anatomy lectures. Lots of hands-on practice and individual instruction will round out the week.

This course is appropriate for a wide range of health care practitioners, both beginning and advanced.

The Journey Home

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

The leaders write: "The Journey Home is not for beginners on the path. There are too many unsettling paradoxes along the way. For instance, it is a journey of no leaving, and you can't get there from here.

"The Journey Home is not sentimental. It is not about hope. Hope is a way of avoiding what already is in the moment. The Journey Home is a way of recognizing the truth of each moment. The Journey Home is an awakening from a long dream.

"The ego wants desperately to fix life and make it more comfortable, make it better, make it more spiritual. In these five days, we will utilize and then abandon ego-strengthening methods. The inner child will be rescued and abandoned along the way. The habits of character fixation as a way of avoiding one's true nature will be examined and worked with in detail."

The Mythic Image: A Performance Piece

Phil Cousineau, David Darling & Eric Lawton

Sacred stories reflect only one aspect of the mythic traditions of the world. Of equal importance and fascination is the non-verbal image, the mandalas or holy images used for deep contemplation. Their origins can be found in nature and the human imagination, and through them we can approach the convergence of myth, dream, and art.

This live performance workshop will blend the oral tradition of storytelling with the silent stories of pictures and the narrative movement of improvisational music. Each session will be highlighted by the telling of tales by Phil Cousineau, co-writer of The Hero's Journey: The World of Joseph Campbell; a slide show by award-winning photographer Eric Lawton, using images from Ireland to India; and the music of David Darling, master cellist. The themes will include myths of origins, myth and the body, myth and art, myth and ritual, and sacred lands.

Practical Intuition: Introduction

Laura Day

We are all psychics. Every time we draw a conclusion, we work with intuition as well as linear and emotional processes. Identifying how our intuitive faculty works enables us to use it selectively for effective decision-making. A predominantly linear process may be preferable when clear, empirical information is available. When little data is at hand or if the question relates to how current choices might affect future results, an intuitive process may be more efficient.

Practical Intuition, an experiential workshop, introduces intuitive methods for gaining empirical information. Participants will give and receive several present- and future intuitive readings a day, focusing on predicting and retrieving verifiable data. Different intuitive styles, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, and telepathy, will be taught, along with exercises for continued training at home.

Participants are requested to bring a few photographs of themselves and people they know well, their personal and business questions, and a willingness to work as if they already knew how to do something that they in fact already know how to do. $325

Violet Oaklander

The theme of this workshop is the anger of children. Participants will discuss the various ways that young people express anger, the relationship of anger to negative introjects and self-esteem, and how parents, teachers, and therapists can help children express this least tolerated and most misunderstood emotion in healthy, safe, and satisfying ways.

This approach is based on the use of creative, expressive, and projective methods, with gestalt theory and practice as the underlying framework. The thrust of this work is to provide the child with a means for expressing his or her innermost feelings, to foster self-awareness and self-discovery, to enhance self-esteem and, in general, to promote emotional growth. Children thereby learn not only about themselves, but about their relationship to others and the world around them.

The workshop will include discussion, demonstration, examples of children's work and, particularly, direct experience of expressive methods used with children.

Week of October 28–November 2

Five Days with Janet Zuckerman

This workshop continues Esalen's tradition of interpersonal and intrapersonal work on emotional process. It is based on these premises: that unfinished business is projected into current relationships, interfering with one's ability to be in the present, and that by emotional release one may cleanse the doors of perception. Tools for exploration will include the open seat, a tennis racket, pillows, and a sense of humor.

Dreams

Joyce Frazee

Outward circumstances are no substitute for inner experience.—C.G. Jung

Called "gateways to the soul" by Carl Jung, dreams are perhaps the most neglected of inner experiences. This workshop is for those who are interested in more than the "outward circumstances," for those who have wondered what their dreams meant, and for those who swear they never dream.

This week will include the telling of dreams, drawing them into mandalas, and circle-dancing, ancient dances of connection. Group work provides a safe place for individual work on dreams with support from other participants and the instructor. Dream recall and lucid dreaming will be discussed; gestalt, bioenergetics, massage, and meditation will be used.

Taoism and the Shen

Master Share Lew

Traditional Taoist concepts of health, longevity, and harmony with nature will be introduced by Master Lew, a temple-trained Taoist priest from southern China. The core of the workshop will be instruction in "the Shen," a set of twelve non-strenuous exercises (six standing, six sitting), whose primary purpose is self-healing. These exercises also develop concentration, increase visual and auditory acuity, and enhance sensitivity to oneself and others. Master Lew will discuss the use of everyday foods and Chinese herbs in healing and tell stories from his life in the monastery.

Master Lew, now 72, first began to teach Taoist internal cultivation to non-Chinese in 1970. His monastery style, Tao Ahn Pai, dates back 1300 years to Lui Tung Pin, an historical personage of the Tang Dynasty and one of the Eight Immortals of Taoism.

Soviet Psychology Today: Its Effects on Global Thinking and the Helping Professions

Slava Loutchkov

For the first time, a Soviet citizen (and resident of Moscow) has become a member of the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program staff. Viatcheslav (Slava) Loutchkov is a psychologist working on a study of psychology and perestroika while in the United States. He is a Harriman Fellow and has a MacArthur grant to pursue these studies. With him, the Exchange Program is committed to a long-term study of the interplay between psychological, social, economic, and ideological factors in perestroika.

In this seminar, Soviet films will be shown and discussed in relation to Soviet psychology. There will be discussions of Soviet helping professions and a comparison of Soviet psychological practices with their counterparts in the United States. The seminar will also explore the Stalinist legacy in Soviet psychology and examine those historical patterns that might threaten to persist, and consider psychology's creative contributions to the emerging USSR. $325

Learning the Craft of Dream Work

Stephen Aizenstat

Dreams can be imagined as looking-glass parables, each a complex story that reflects the personality and soul of the dreamer. This weekend's program will emphasize the healing potential of dream work. In so doing, the leader will review methods of dream work which consider the personal and collective unconscious.

In addition, new methods of dream work which take into account the world unconscious will be described. The world unconscious is seen as a deeper and broader dimension of the psyche and is imagined to contain the subjective inner natures (the subtle body) of all phenomena. It is believed that these inner subjective properties are reflected in the images of dreams and are, at an essential level, interrelated. It is at this level of the psyche that dream images provide access to an interconnected source of healing energy. This view, grounded in modern research and ancient wisdom, has practical implications for the use of dreams in physical and psychological healing.

Participants will be shown how to employ specific methods of dream work which honor and actualize the healing potential of the psyche. In this regard, common dream themes, nightmares, lucid dreaming, archetypal imagery, and the recurring dream will be discussed. $325

The Delight of Immediacy

Charlotte Selver & Charles Brooks

Much as we may wish to live in the present, we are often preoccupied with images and ideas of how it ought to be. Instead of responding to the situation at hand with the innumerable nerves, muscles, and interweavings of consciousness which are we, much of us is immobilized by early conditioning, acute emotional problems, or by habit, and much is held back until the inner board of review gives the OK.

But children and sages have a different way of functioning. For them the world flows into their consciousness as the air into their lungs, and their responses are organismic and direct, bypassing the evaluation center which is the educated mind of the adult. It is our lack of immediacy which is usually felt as tedium and which necessitates ever stronger stimuli in the search for joy, or self-disciplines in the search for peace. By giving up these preconceptions and gradually coming to follow our sense of reality, we begin to respond not to what should be but to what is, and the world catches fire for us.

This workshop will explore direct experience which, as it becomes clearer and stronger, tends to burn away the mist of concepts and restrictions which our conditioning has interposed between ourselves and living.

Practical Intuition: Five-Day Workshop

Laura Day

We are all born with the capacity to be intuitive. Learning to access, use, and understand the information we receive requires structure and practice. This five-day workshop focuses on expanding the student's intuitive skills as well as presenting a concise format for assembling intuitive impressions to form a useful reading.

Participants will be giving and receiving intuitive readings from one another throughout the week, so they are asked to come prepared with personal and business questions, photographs of people they know well, and a willingness to work as if they already knew how to do something that they in fact already know how to do. Beginners are welcome. $630

Healing Through Movement

Meir Schneider

The human body is an integrated network of systems designed to work in synchrony and in constant motion. This harmonious functioning is only possible, however, through balanced use of the body. Lack of movement, over-strenuous activity, rigid posture, chronic tension, or moving habitually in ways that inhibit the body's natural rhythms are all factors that contribute to neuromuscular problems and diseases.

Meir Schneider has been exploring and documenting the powers of movement as "medicine" for more than 18 years. Functionally blind as a child, Schneider learned methods that enabled him to restore his sight and now applies the same principles to other types of physical dysfunction. He has worked with people with polio, muscular dystrophy, arthritis, multiple sclerosis, and sciatica using movement to unlock the body's healing mechanism and set recovery in motion.

This workshop will focus on: movement for muscles, joints, and the spine; inner movement (circulation, breathing, digestion); sensory enhancement, kinesthetic awareness, and the central nervous system; self-healing body work and massage; vision exercises/integrated body use. It is suitable for participants at all levels of health and functionality as well as health care professionals.

Bridging U.S.-Soviet Cultural Differences

Stephen Rhinesmith

The political and economic reform of the Soviet Union presents a dramatic change for everyone in the world. Old perspectives need to be revised and new visions have yet to be clearly formed.

In this time of transition, it is important to understand some of the cultural similarities and differences operating below the surface when Americans and Soviets are together. Deep-rooted American assumptions about a hi-tech world of individual achievement are often at odds with the slow-moving bureaucratic, compartmentalized legacy of Soviet Stalinist culture.

This workshop will help Americans recognize U.S. and Soviet cultural assumptions and values which affect tourism and international exchanges, business and trade relations, and joint venture development and management. It is for anyone who wants to understand the U.S.-Soviet relationship from a personal perspective. Exercises and discussions will work toward developing guidelines and methods for effective American-Soviet interaction. $325

The Many Faces of Meditation (Ancient and Contemporary Forms)

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy

Throughout history, the common denominator for accessing "The Wide Place" has been participation of the mind in an activity with the body in the present moment. Whether it is the shaman lost in drum and rattle rhythms, the yogi exploring the minute kinesthetic textures of posturing, the Tibetan chanter drowning mind and senses in a sea of mantra sounds, the zazen practitioner exploring the weavings of mind and breath, or the Christian in rich and heartful repetition of prayer, practice is based upon the joining of mind and body.

Through this commonality of intricate "taking part in," workshop participants will minutely examine:

- Japanese Soto Zen sitting practice
- Hatha Yoga
- Kum Nye (Tibetan Yoga)
- Continuum* movement/sound/breath dimensions (*developed by Emilie Conrad-Da'oud)

Maximum time will be spent in personal involvement with these modes. Participants are asked to wear layered, loose clothing and to bring a mat. $325

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods to improve their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop will be of value to anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health-care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility—painlessly and immediately.

Introduction to Gestalt Practice

Joyce Lyke

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear—
And when used—is inexhaustible.
—Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form—nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental—evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is *intra*personal rather than *inter*personal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Change and Self-Esteem

Phyllis Shankman

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creatively if one is to sustain a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, is the aspect of self which enables one to confront resistance and fear and which increases the willingness to change and take risks.

This workshop includes an in-depth process for finding and allowing self-acceptance and for creatively confronting opportunities for change and growth. Group activities include gestalt process work, discussion, massage, meditation, music, dance, art imagery exercises, and whatever else happens spontaneously. $630

Sim Van der Ryn & Pete Retondo

A departure from the usual Esalen fare, this workshop is for anyone considering remodeling or building a home. The leaders are known for innovative designs that are sensitive to people and the environment. Sim Van der Ryn, professor of architecture at UC Berkeley and former California State Architect, is currently designing a project for Esalen; Pete Retondo, graduate of Rensselaer and UC Berkeley, is a licensed architect and contractor with 15 years' field experience in design and construction.

Participants should bring their house plans, sketches, photos, and ideas. Using personal and group design exercises, they will develop a concept, program, and strategy for their projects. Other topics will include:

- Is what you want what you need?
- Principles of natural design
- Practical advice on cost estimating and choosing contractors $325

A Week with Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)

Laura DeNuccio writes: "This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

"The emphasis of this workshop will be on learning how to embody this new awareness, bridging one's personal growth and inner experience with outer involvement in the world. Inquiry will be made into the beliefs and assumptions that shape somatic reality, with special attention given to personal issues. The group will draw from breath, movement, sound, gestalt practice, imagery, and meditation to enliven, balance, and transform energy blocks and patterns in the body. For some individuals, unconscious thoughts and feelings that reside in the body tissue may come to life, which can then be consciously integrated into a new level of wholeness and well-being—physically, mentally, sexually, and spiritually.

"Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of the body. This will be encouraged through music, dance, creative use of the Spoken Word, and ritual. Practices that cultivate sensitivity, compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others will be included. In this way, the group can co-create an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore the ever-unfolding adventure of spirit and discover a deepened sense of the interconnectedness that is inherent in all life-forms."

The Feldenkrais® Method and Cortical Reeducation

Harriet Goslins & Frank Oliveira

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain/muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk of injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for the average person who feels chronically tired and stressed and wants to learn how to take better care of his/her neck, shoulders, and back, to improve his/her posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provider approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

Heather Maycock-Ogilvy

Being a good enough parent, a good enough therapist, being a good enough friend to oneself is an art not a science, a creative endeavor that must be entered into with an open mind and an open heart. This workshop offers no detailed instructions or rules but rather encouragement to develop an empathy with those with whom we would be—not perfect—but good enough.

Problem situations in love or work, childhood memories, dreams, and guided imagery will serve as material for the work. Psychodrama will be part of the process as will discussion, massage, and play.

Yoga, Body Work, and Somatic Awareness Practices

Deborah Anne Medow

A strong relationship exists between the inner sense of the body and the way we do what we do in the outer world. It could be said that inner somatic experience shapes outer activity. When learning yoga and massage together, this inner/outer relationship becomes apparent. The inner practice—yoga—gives a clear, proprioceptive sense of what it is like to be a body. This inner sense naturally informs the outer practice of giving a massage with a knowing authenticity and sense of presence.

In this workshop, participants will be given instruction in massage and gentle forms of ashtanga yoga, with awareness practices designed to integrate the somatic lessons gained from each. It is appropriate for both beginners and those with yoga or massage experience. Bring loose, comfortable clothing. $630

Paul Carter

Wisdom is the intelligence of the system as a whole.—Gregory Bateson

Connecting with one's personal source of creativity and support is essential in these increasingly complex times. This workshop will offer tools for retrieving those personal resources.

Meditation and self- and mutual hypnosis methods will be reviewed and practiced for those with little or no formal trance experience. Movement and sound will be used to deepen trance, to draw out knowledge that the body stores, and to embody creative healing processes. Dream work will help each person recover buried powers, shadow parts, and wholeness, and to generate solutions, actions, and ideas beyond the imagination. Personal as well as collective themes will be developed into healing rituals.

Each day will include movement, dancing, drawing, guided meditation, trance dreaming, communication/integration exercises, and focusing. Participants are asked to bring an 18" X 24" drawing pad and pastels. $630

What is Really Going On in Eastern Europe?

Gyorgy Balo & Andra Akers

What is it like to live through the birth of a new culture? How do people live through a period of history so revolutionary that all internal and external references are blown away? How do they keep their balance? What are the spiritual and political issues in these cultures? How are they different from each other? What do they have to teach us? What is behind the headlines? What is happening at this moment? What will the future bring?

The leaders of this workshop met and married three years ago and have lived through the transition together in Budapest, Hungary. Gyorgy Balo is president of Hungarian Television Channel 2 and director of television election coverage. Andra Akers, an American, is founder and president of International Synergy Institute, a Los Angeles-based think tank for 21st century ideas. Breaking the Chain: A Holiday Workshop For ACAs and Co-Dependents

The holiday season is difficult for most people who grew up in a dysfunctional home. It is also an opportunity to discover the truth of one's childhood condition because it is a time when buried memories and feelings emerge. As children we were not responsible for the pain we suffered, nor can we alter the facts of what happened to us. But as adults we can make choices to tell the truth about the past and to heal. The key to breaking enmeshment in the past is in learning to function as an adult in the presence of our parents and siblings. Until we do that, we bring our childhood coping strategies to all our relationships, trying to control situations and avoiding feelings of pain or abandonment.

Participants in this workshop will work toward learning new ways of being with family, current loved ones, and the past. Issues of autonomy, disengaging from entangled family systems, appropriate self-disclosure, and strategies for healing will be explored.

Healthy families are a pleasure to be with. Dysfunctional families cause enormous stress, sometimes through what is omitted rather than what is said or done. Through a program of emotional sobriety, stressful family encounters can become opportunities to set boundaries, to take good care of oneself, and to bring joy into the holiday season.

Keeping a Good Relationship Alive

Gerald Smith

This workshop will focus on a major dilemma in keeping a good relationship alive. That is: how to be close and vulnerable as partners yet separate and free to grow as individuals. This dilemma is never resolved, because each partner continues to change, but it can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship.

Much of participants' time during this weekend will be with their partners separate from other couples. Verbal, non-verbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection will be used, as will skills at resolving differences in ways that do not produce "scar tissue." And, since playing is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be experiences to kindle the imagination and willingness to play together. Limited to 12 couples. $325

Goals and Strategies of Therapy: A Workshop for Professionals

Cloe Madanes & David Eddy

This weekend workshop will provide an opportunity for therapists who think about therapy differently and work from a range of theories (such as psychoanalytic or time-limited-behavioral) to learn an approach utilizing aspects drawn from several major schools of thought.

Cloe Madanes will present the opening and concluding sessions, emphasizing goals of therapy and a range of strategies for producing change. David Eddy will present a variety of case examples with problems challenging the most seasoned therapist, and outline thinking that produced successful outcomes. Opportunities for participants to receive consultation on cases from their own work will be offered. This workshop is designed especially for therapists, supervisors, teachers of therapy, and other human service workers. $325

Creating Time: A Rhythm for Health and Longevity

Stephan Rechtschaffen

As we constantly strive to be "on time" in our fast-paced, over-scheduled lives, we lose touch with living in the flow of time. We are a society plagued with time-sickness: caught up in the stress of running to work, home, recreation, or other responsibilities and interests, we don't seem to have time for the important things. Anxious about the future, regretful of the past, we miss the fullness of the moment.

This workshop will help participants understand their own attitudes toward time and how those attitudes affect their life-style, health, and longevity. Methods that move perception away from societal time pressures into the often unexplored territory of freedom-within-time will be introduced, along with meditation, visualization, time evaluation and planning (not scheduling).

From this vantage point participants can: explore how dysrhythmic, hurried schedules affect their relationships, work, and creativity; use their expanded sense of time to define what they really want in their lives and what their real priorities are; and enjoy the simple power and pleasure of being present in each moment.

Linda Tellington-Jones

This course will provide hands-on practice of the Tellington Touch, a method which has been used successfully for healing and communicating with an intriguing variety of animals. Tellington Touch releases tension, fear, and pain and enhances cellular function and overall well-being. The benefits to the toucher are as great as to the touched.

Participants will learn how to use this method to treat shock, to release chronic and acute pain, and to alleviate allergies in both humans and animals. Eleven "touches" will be taught, with participants practicing on each other and working with live animals in the Gazebo. $325

The Power of Voice

Arthur Samuel Joseph

This course introduces a method called Vocal Awareness, which includes vocalizing, sound meditation, movement, song study, and development of the speaking voice as a means for deepening contact with the Self. Participants will work individually and in groups exploring breathing, toning, a cappella and accompanied vocalizing with poetry, sonnets, and songs.

Vocal Awareness addresses in precise ways how language affects the brain. It is now well-known in the field of psychoneuroimmunology that endorphins are released by the brain in response to verbal cues and visual imagery. Research also points to a strong correlation between language, breath, and psycho-physical response. Knowing this, developing one's vocal abilities and learning to listen to one's own language becomes a means for self-integration.

The aim of this workshop is to explore the voice as metaphor, to tap into issues of self-expression and self-esteem, and to have fun while developing vocal abilities. It is valuable for lay people and professionals alike, and is open to beginners through advanced. Tape recorders are required. $325

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is to start to rejuvenate the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body. Transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain. You will then have changed the despondent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat one.

The recipe for how to begin to rejuvenate a body in one session will be demonstrated to the group, and then experienced and performed by each participant.

This seminar is recommended for everyone. The older you are, the more stuff you have to work with. Class size is limited (two students per table). Bring a swimsuit—two-piece for women.

Recommended reading: William Leigh, A Zen Approach to Bodytherapy, From Rolf to Feldenkrais to Tanouye Roshi (University of Hawaii Press). $325

The Right Work

John Caple

What is work? And what is not work?
—The Bhagavad Gita

In this workshop participants will rediscover work-related dreams, draw power from life experiences, and clarify their vision of what they want their worklife to be. They will refine their sense of what is work and what is play, and what is right for them.

The approach will be practical, though grounded in the longings of the soul, and worldly, though enriched by the resources and culture of Esalen. There will be concepts to stimulate the intellect, processes to awaken intuitive wisdom, and a chance to bring it all together in a personal life plan. Participants will learn eleven steps to determine what work is right for them and specific strategies for getting that work, whether it involves a shift in responsibilities, a new job, or a complete career change. Some time will be available for individual work.

The Body and Zen

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is twofold: 1) to use body work methods and principles for releasing tension, trauma, and toxins from connective tissue; and 2) to circulate the vital energy in an aligned body. The group will draw from Rolfing® (structure), Feldenkrais® (function), and Zen (energy), to obtain these goals.

This is a hands-on workshop. Participants will give and receive body work and will learn methods to recognize, work with, and relieve some types of chronic muscle pain. The class will be limited in size (two people per table). Participants are asked to bring a swimsuit—two-piece for women.

Recommended reading: William Leigh, A Zen Approach to Bodytherapy, From Rolf to Feldenkrais to Tanouye Roshi (University of Hawaii Press).

Awakening Inner Power

Deborah Anne Medow, Mary Tesoro & Judith Roth

Operating from the assumption that one's innate energies lie largely untapped, this group will explore alternative means of gathering inner power. Leonard Energy Training, a comprehensive system offering tools to meet the problems, pressures, and pain of everyday life situations, will be combined with gestalt to provide a foundation for personal growth and change. Yoga and massage will be interwoven with elements of the martial art of aikido to increase the flow of vital energy through the body, mind, and spirit. $630

Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

In the moment before a new idea unfolds, our attention becomes so fully focused that time seems to disappear. Perhaps, without quite realizing it, we forget where we are and what's around us. These spontaneous states are the stuff out of which hypnotic experience unfolds and through which unconscious possibilities take form.

In this workshop, participants will investigate the hypnotic approaches developed by Milton Erickson and the systemic principles generated from Gregory Bateson's research in communication. They will explore how unconscious processes can be mobilized to creatively disrupt limiting life patterns, to organize innovative behaviors outside the range of normal conscious controls, and to more fully optimize their current living and work situations. Structured trance experiments and discussion will support the week's work.

This workshop may be of special interest to those in the helping professions as well as managers who want to expand their frames of reference and extend their understanding of Ericksonian hypnosis and communication skills. $630

Art as Therapy in Human Development

Erika Steinberger

This first part of a three-step certificate program in training in art therapy provides an opportunity to explore the use of nonverbal expression and communication as therapy.

The use of art as therapy implies that the creative process can be a means both of reconciling emotional conflicts and of fostering self-awareness and personal growth. This can be effected through various methods, materials, and journeys. In these five days, participants will explore elements of the senses, like touch, smell, and taste, and how these translate into symbolic expression. Different methods and materials will be analyzed and their therapeutic purposes explained.

This course provides introductory material for persons interested in art therapy for their own development or for working with others. Practical information about this field will be covered. Participants are asked to bring materials of their choice, such as crayons, colored pencils, pastels, magic markers, and drawing pads. Previous experience in either art or psychology is not necessary.

Dance of the Animals

Paul Rebillot & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

Some ancient teachings say that of all creatures, only man is out of harmony, and that to be made whole we must learn how to be in harmony with other spirits of the universe. The Native American Medicine Way teaches this return through identification and communion with the totem animals, who are representatives of the four directions. An animal knows its role and instinctively makes the right decisions to fulfill it. This wisdom can become ours when we recognize and unite with the power of the animal spirits.

In this workshop participants will use ritual, music, and dance not simply to imitate the totem animals, but to enter into their depths so that they can become teachers and guides as the new year begins. $325

Movement, Touch, and the Healing Process

Patrick Douce

This workshop will approach the concept of a free, effortless body through Moshe Feldenkrais's work in movement and touch. Balinese and other Indonesian systems of working with the human body will broaden the Feldenkrais® work.

Participants will be introduced to the complexity and simplicity of their spinal column. Within each spine there lies a very old intelligence. Methods used in this program will allow this "knowing" that is in each person to be awakened. Soft, conscious movement will be used to increase sensitivity for safe, hands-on explorations. Moving away from the notion of a straight, stiff, rod-like back, posture and overall flexibility of the spine improves. As the body lengthens and becomes more flexible, chronic problem areas will find themselves improving. No matter what the condition of the individual, everyone's spine "wants" to be flexible, light, strong, interconnected, and healthy, when given the choice.

The movement and hands-on work will be augmented by insights from Eastern energetic models of the body. The subtleties of working with the human body's energy field and connecting with the energetic fields that surround us will be approached.

This program is designed for both the beginner and the professional interested in the human body. It will be of benefit to those physically fit persons who want to continue to learn about and improve their own capabilities. Individuals with chronic tension or stress, and those with lower back, neck, shoulder, or hip pain, may improve, finding alternatives through learning more about the human body's possibilities. $325

Introduction to Focusing

Mary McGuire

Focusing is a step-by-step process for gaining entry into a physically felt intelligence called body wisdom or bodily knowing. This method originally came out of research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, and they found that success cannot be predicted by the personality of the client nor the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be taught to those who do not have it readily. The Focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

Focusing's applications extend far beyond its use in psychotherapy. It enhances other methods of change or growth and is used in education, business, and work with cancer patients. It offers:

- A way of listening to oneself and others
- A means to personal insights
- A resource for spiritual growth
- A path to healing and reconciliation
- A catalyst for healthier relationships
- A method for reducing stress and preventing burn-out
- A means of getting in touch with one's creativity
- A tool for phenomenological research

This workshop will cover the six steps of this method as outlined in Gendlin's Focusing, which participants are strongly encouraged to read before the workshop. Participants will be introduced to a holistic way of paying attention by creating an inner climate of gentleness, friendliness, allowing, receiving, being with, touching, listening, and waiting. This differs from the usual outside climate of forcing, pushing, shoving, and demanding. They will explore how to relate to both positive and negative experiences as they are carried in the body, without the usual response of being overwhelmed by feelings or running away from them. This way of being with oneself allows each experience to unfold in a positive direction, and the person is empowered with an inner strength and direction that allows life energy to flow forward in new ways.

Walking Improvement for People Over 50

Ed Maupin & Anne Nechama Simkin

In the ordinary aging process, the legs and pelvis tighten until agility and grounding—a secure relationship with the ground—are lost. Return of the Light: Winter Teachings

Paul Rebillot & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

With the winter solstice we touch the darkest time of the year, the stillest time, the most inward time, in which we celebrate the turning toward the light. This is the time when all creatures prepare for the next cycle of growth.

Movement toward light is movement toward individuation, and as we move through winter toward spring it is important to understand the present cycle of our life, our current season. There are many ways to this self-knowledge. Different peoples have developed different paths, using a variety of metaphors. This workshop shall use the way of the Medicine Wheel, which teaches us to celebrate our cycles and our seasons.

Participants will look at the current cycles of their lives—what has not been completed, what needs healing, what needs saying goodbye to—and what steps they need to take as they cross thresholds into a new season. Through ritual, guided fantasy, music, and play, each can seek his or her own turning point upon the Medicine Wheel, and there sow the seeds for spring. $630

Craniosacral System: Basic Workshop

Jim Asher & Jane Harrington

This workshop will offer an opportunity to learn and practice gentle yet powerful skills to bring the craniosacral system into balance. The class will combine lectures and slides on functional anatomy of the membrane system and cerebrospinal fluid movement. There will be hands-on demonstrations of a variety of methods for tapping into bone and membrane motion, rhythm, amplitude quality, restriction, and interference. Demonstrations will be followed by supervised practice. Time will also be spent evoking and developing palpatory sensitivity and fine-tuning the quality of touch.

This workshop is for people with a strong interest in developing hands-on skills and for those already practicing body work or counseling. Much of the focus will be on the head, jaw, neck, pelvis, and diaphragm systems. Cranial work can be effective in shifting emotional holding patterns and draining accumulated stresses in the nervous system.

Focusing, Dream Work, and the Helping Relationship

Mary McGuire

Focusing originally came out of research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, and they found that success cannot be predicted by the personality of the client nor the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be taught to those who do not have it readily. The Focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

This workshop is for psychotherapists, counselors, social workers, nurses, doctors, and others in the helping professions. Focusing is beneficial to these individuals because it augments their understanding of the client's inner process and aids in their own self-awareness as helper. It allows the practitioner to recognize the vulnerable or painful places in the other where new life wants to come through and to facilitate growth in a gentle way that honors the other's experience.

Participants will practice the Focusing process called Experiential Listening, a method of listening for the bodily felt sense in what the other is saying and responding from one's own felt sense of the situation. They will also be introduced to Gendlin's integrative approach to dream work. Theories of Freud, Jung, Perls, and others will serve as a source of questions; the answers will come from participants' own dream interpretations and will be explored via this method of awareness of felt experience.

Research has shown Focusing to have made a significant difference in the process of therapy clients, the lives of cancer patients, in preventing staff burn-out, and building team spirit among health care professionals. This workshop could be a new beginning. What better way to start the New Year.

A Weekend with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $325

Advanced Massage: Sculpting of the Conscious Medium

Vicki Topp & Dick Stratman

The goal of this workshop is for participants to develop their understanding of touch and hands-on skills in releasing the body from dysfunction and facilitating fluidity and balance. It is designed for those who have experience in massage and moderate knowledge of anatomy and physiology. The Royal Road to the Unconscious

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

Dreams, what are they? Freud called them the royal road to the unconscious. Modern researchers are not so sure. Are they windows on transcendence? Hieroglyphics to be deciphered? Voyages to another, archetypal world? Personal archives? Psychological garbage? None of the above? All of the above?

On the theory that it is possible to learn much about oneself from the specific content, we will spend the weekend exploring the personal night poetry we remember as dreams. Using methods developed by Freud, Stekel, and Perls, and perhaps adding some of our own, we will learn to wrest meaning from the dreamworld. We will pay attention to personal symbolism, day residue, condensation of meaning, reversals and displacements, and the strange, primal, causal relations involved.

Because dreams bypass the conscious censor, the treasures of the night, whatever they are, can sometimes ransom the problems of waking hours. They are often worth remembering. Each participant can expect to leave equipped with tools to continue this fascinating study at home. Bring comfortable clothes, a notebook, and, if possible, some dreams. $325

An Appreciation of Vision and Grace

Si Chi Ko & Chieh-Hsi Fan with Chungliang Al Huang

Chungliang Al Huang brings to Esalen two artists from his Lan Ting Institute in China. Si Chi Ko is a visionary photographer; his wife, Chieh-Hsi Fan, is a classical and modern dancer who is best known for her performance of the famous Dun Huang Buddhist Cave Rituals. Through visual imagery of the cave paintings and the dance mudras of the rituals, Ko and Fan will introduce seminarians to the beauty and spiritual dimensions of these paintings, which are found at the crossroads of Indian and Chinese Buddhist art. $630

Intermediate Craniosacral Workshop

This workshop provides a deeper and broader understanding of craniosacral work for those who have completed an introductory class. It offers several models for understanding how subtle alterations of osseous rhythm or dural tension can produce remarkable effects on the function of the body/mind/spirit.

Participants will expand their range of technical cranial expertise and refine the arts of both deductive and intuitive diagnosis. The sacro-iliac, spheno-basilar, and tempero-mandibular joints will be examined in detail. The class will also include a review of the reciprocal tension membrane system and an analysis of known brain and chord function as related to craniosacral work.

The relationship between meditation, perception, and the still point will be explored as a foundation, with emphasis placed on the daily practice of demonstrated techniques so that a high standard of individual consciousness in this work can be attained. Feedback among participants on personal issues as evoked by work in the class will be an important part of the seminar.

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for: people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $630

Elizabeth Stratton

Psychic healing bridges the physical and the spiritual. Touching as a healing act has been practiced through recorded history by practitioners of the sacred as well as the secular: healers, shamans, priests, doctors, and mothers. In the past ten years, physics and modern medicine have come to an acknowledgment of the radically relational nature of our universe. Nothing and no one functions in a void.

Human emotions affect the functioning of the body, and illness is often an outgrowth of this mind-body link. Semi-dissociative states that are induced by prayer, meditation, and trance have been found to provide a fertile ground for healing to take place. It has been discovered that "multiple personalities" exhibit different states of health in each personality. The placebo effect has become one of the most respected and well-studied issues in healing today.

A psychic healer is one who can help connect the physical, emotional, mental, and spiritual levels of another person's being with healing intention through the use of touch. This workshop will explore, both didactically and experientially, the sacred and secular uses of touch, modern theories of disease formation and healing mechanisms, the use of psychic sight in healing, forgiveness as transformational cleansing, and the channeling of healing energy through the laying on of hands.

Non-Adversarial Child Care: The Continuum Concept in Practice

Jean Liedloff

For parents, parents-to-be, and baby and child care professionals, this seminar will examine the true meaning of sociality as an innate characteristic of homo sapiens. Drawing upon her years of living with Stone Age Indians in South America's jungles, the leader propounds an approach neither punitive nor permissive that takes into account the generally unrecognized expectations and abilities inherent in our young.

Why do babies and children so often seek attention they don't need? Why do we see tots in underdeveloped countries and cultures following their parents and helping them with chores so early, while ours are frequently chased and tended, opposed, tolerated, and socialized for nerve-wracking, guilt-laden, unappreciated decades of drudgery and sacrifice ending in one degree or another of alienation?

As professor Robert Aldrich of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development said, "Basic things about human nature we forget or ignore at our peril."

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other peole without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you—singing. $325

Somatosynthesis: Touching Mind and Emotion Through the Body

Clyde Ford

Somatosynthesis is a method that uses human touch to address emotional and psychological issues underlying pain, disease, and physical symptoms. Through lecture, discussion, and demonstration, Clyde Ford will introduce the basics of this methodology, including body-mapping, which links areas of the body to emotional issues, and a language of touch that allows a practitioner to guide a client toward physical and psychological well-being. There will be plenty of time for supervised hands-on practice. It is designed for health care professionals and laypersons who wish to integrate somatic skills into their work with others or their own lives.

Psychoneuroimmunology and its Implications

George Solomon & Margaret Kemeny

The rapidly developing field of psychoneuroimmunology (PNI) is concerned with the nature of complex bidirectional interactions between the central nervous system (CNS) and the immune system and their clinical and bioregulatory implications. The CNS mediates stress effects, coping, emotions, and other psychological processes that, via the immune system, affect the onset and course of many diseases.

This didactic but interactive course will describe the immune system, how it works and is regulated. The leaders will discuss human and animal research on the effects of stress and other experiential factors on immunity and on immunologically-resisted and mediated diseases, including bacterial and viral infections, cancer, autoimmune diseases, allergies, and AIDS. The as-yet poorly researched area of the impact of interventions, including psychotherapy, on immunity and disease will be discussed. Implications of PNI for understanding traditional and alternative healing systems and placebo effects will be explored. There will be ample opportunity for questions.

Forgiveness and Letting Go of Judgment

Elizabeth Stratton

Elizabeth Stratton writes: "The training of the Western mind, both spiritually and intellectually, is oriented toward judgment. We are taught to induce, deduce, analyze, dissect, defend, debate. We are taught to feel guilty, to get sick, to engage in self-punishment and the punishment of others. We are encouraged to rebuke ourselves into perfection.

"We do not know the healing quality of true remorse or how to let go of that which we should never have held onto in the first place, which is the real meaning of forgiveness. In studies of people who have died and come back to talk about it, the most unifying element of their experiences was the meeting with a Being of white light who stood by with unconditional love, no judgment, and humor as they watched their lives roll before them like movies. The only judge was the person watching his/her own life.

"This workshop will be experiential. You are invited to observe the judgmental prison of your own mind, to feel the cleansing power of remorse, and to allow your heart to open to the freedom and healing that comes from forgiving yourself and others." $325

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead, they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

The Body is Spirit

Robert Hall

There is no difference between the bioenergetic streaming of daily body life and the divine spirit current or life force. We experience both as an ongoing felt body sense. The human ego operates under the false assumption that it is somehow separate from that sense. So we spend our lives in constant negotiation and seeking: the so-called human condition. From this position, alienation is inevitable.

This workshop is designed to explore the possibility that we are that felt body sense, that spirit current, and we are constantly, by nature, in relationship to everyone and everything that exists. Hopefully, we'll laugh a lot, too. There will be time for gestalt, individual body work, meditation, and getting to know each other well in a short time. $630

Seeds of Singing: Redefining What it Means To Be a Singer

Susan Osborn & David Densmore

The leaders write: "Within each of us is a powerful, life-giving song, which, when sung, can make sense out of chaos, open and cleanse the deepest wounds, and transform it all into joyous communion. When we sing together from this place, we can recognize the oneness of all people and celebrate our incredible variety and differences. It is a bodily experience.

"Think of the first time you sang and what song it was. Think of the feelings you had. Remember the feedback you got. We believe that these experiences are central to our development as human beings, that singing is not 'extra-curricular,' but a reflection of how we feel about our own power and our ability to create something beautiful and true out of ourselves. This will be a week to explore these possibilities and sing." $630

Questioning Western Spirituality

Brother David Steindl-Rast

Western spirituality is being rediscovered. After a long journey, some of us have found treasure buried under the very threshold over which we stepped when we left home. Yet, without the quest we could have never come to own what was ours from the beginning. Without questioning, we cannot make inherited wisdom our own.

This was not always understood by teachers of religion. Some of us were force-fed all the answers, without ever being allowed to question. This weekend will be a time to catch up on what we missed.

Brother David has helped diverse groups experience inner liberation and new insights through honest questioning. Every question, even an angry one, is a gift. Answers like to hide in questions. Together we shall try to teethe them out of hiding. We shall survey key issues in Western spiritual tradition and offer participants opportunities to raise their own. $325

Michael Harner

Shamanism is an ancient human strategy for personal learning and for acting on that learning, using normally neglected or hidden potentialities of the heart, mind, and spirit. Shamanic methods can contribute to virtually any aspect of living, as they have for tens of thousands of years, and are especially useful for problem-solving, well-being, and healing.

In this experiential workshop, participants will be introduced to basic methods of the shaman (a specific type of medicine man or woman) and initiated into the classic shamanic journey. Otherwise known through myth and accounts of great spiritual experiences, this visionary method can be used to enter nonordinary reality to obtain knowledge, to answer personal questions, to maximize power to achieve personal goals, and to contribute to the health of oneself, others, and the Planet. Participants will be aided by traditional drumming and movement and will be provided with methods for journeying to discover and study with their individual spiritual teachers in nonordinary reality, a classic step in shamanic practice.

The shamanic journey can be utilized to help restore spiritual power and health and has practical applications to contemporary daily life. Practices this weekend will include comparison of discoveries and work on personal problem-solving and wellness.

Please bring a bandanna to cover your eyes, a pen and notebook to record your journeys and, if you have them, a drum and/or a rattle. Wear comfortable clothing.

Women's Wisdom: Celebrating Sacred Dimensions of the Feminine

Jean Shinoda Bolen & Jananne Lovett-Keen

By tapping intuitive sources of wisdom, creativity, and spirituality, life takes on deeper meaning. We are nourished by what we feel and know and dream and express. In the outer world, change and transitions are inevitable. What we often miss is time to reflect upon the meaning of events and to take stock of who we are becoming.

This retreat invites women to take time for inner reflection in the nurturing company of other women in an environment of natural beauty. Jean Shinoda Bolen, author of Goddesses in Everywoman, will lead participants inward through myths and meditation to their personal symbols and to the truth in their dreams. Jananne Lovett-Keen, a musician and body worker, will teach participants to care for their bodies and to be attuned to their vulnerabilities, pain, trust, and strengths. Through music, participants will touch sources of inspiration and creativity and be reminded of the profound connection between women's nature and Mother Nature, between music and body knowledge.

These five days will provide women with an opportunity to experience their inner trusting child, the grown woman choicemaker, and the wisewoman aware of the sacred dimension of ordinary life. $630

The Future of Psychotherapy

Rollo May

Returning from teaching in Greece and studying with Alfred Adler in 1933, Rollo May received a degree in theology and another degree in psychoanalysis. He introduced the existential approach into therapy in this country and is a principle creator of humanistic psychology. His published works include the well-known The Courage to Create, Love and Will, and My Quest for Beauty. His forthcoming book, The Cry for Myth, explores the significance of myths in psychotherapy and in finding a direction in our distraught world. In this seminar, Dr. May will speculate about therapy for the future. He writes:

"The revolution which Freud and Nietzsche reflect has pierced to the center of our moral and psychological world. In this continuing revolution, discoveries of the psyche have occurred. We will discuss how these discoveries concern the emotional and moral problems of our day, the many forms psychotherapy has taken—which has become the new way of health for the 20th and 21st centuries—and how to seek ways of living with some joy in a radically new world." $325

Sensory Enhancement

Dean Marson & Kathleen O'Shaughnessy

This workshop directs itself toward those just beginning to explore touch as communication. Demonstrations will be augmented by supervised practice, and discussion will offer insights into various body work approaches and how they may be used in everyday life to ease stress and enhance the senses. Other topics will include: basic full body massage, breath-energy sensing and contact, passive movement, self-care with massage, self-awareness and using this sensitivity with others. $325

Word Magic:
A Personal Adventure through Writing

Nancy Bacal

We all have stories and the ability to tell them. But when asked to translate them onto the page, many of us are inhibited by self-judgment. Through a series of exercises designed to bypass blockages, participants will be encouraged to move beyond the controlling arm of the critic and tap their reservoirs of personal experience. These exercises will provide an opportunity to turn the burdens in our lives into stories, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. They are specific enough to excite the imagination yet loose enough for the writer inside to experiment with form and images and remain open to surprise.

This writing workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the would-be writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, walks, meditation as it relates to creative process, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The intention will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, functioning relationship with one's work.

Expressive Arts:
Turning Wounding into Creative Action

Elisa Lodge

During this time of cultural change and ecological crisis, it is essential to accept and embrace our personal history and have the creative resources to more fully express the truth of our being. The language of the expressive arts meets the needs of our time by fostering freedom of choice and aliveness in how we are in the world.

Rather than being judged, evaluated, or fixed, participants are invited to illuminate and enact patterns which have been restricting their awareness, self-expression, and self-worth. Patterns to be explored are breath, sound, body image, body movement, thought, feeling, attitude, character masks, and relationships. In amplifying and contrasting these patterns in a relaxed and playful manner, new choices may present themselves from within. A broadened sense of identity and more fluid repertoire of possibilities emerge from this process. It is especially relevant for those in the helping professions who wish to take more risks and integrate the arts and body-oriented approaches into their work. $630

Psychological Implications of Symbols: The Tarot

Angeles Arrien & James Wanless

The tarot is an ancient book of wisdom that visually captures possible internal and external experiences that individuals can have. Participants in this weekend workshop will have the opportunity of seeing multiple ways symbols can be practically used as guides and clarifiers for life issues.

This workshop is structured to meet the needs of participants at any level of experience or inexperience they may have with tarot. $325

Personal Energy Management

Myron McClellan

We are beings made up of four energies: physical, emotional, mental, and spiritual. When we are healthy, productive, creative, and in touch with our feelings, we manage our energies effectively. When we are ill, sullen, morose, or lazy, we are not managing energy well. Energy management requires awareness and action. It requires knowledge of the nature of each of the four aspects of being and how each is used for maximum effectiveness and enjoyment. This workshop teaches skills for getting the most out of the body, feelings, mind, and spirit, both in times of ease and in times of stress.

Topics to be covered include: using the body to transmute intense emotions into energy for growth; expressing and releasing feelings; reeducating the brain; using meditation as a grounding experience; using music and movement for physical health and aliveness; establishing harmony among the four bodies in order to create what the heart desires.

The methods used in this course are fun and invigorating and are intended to give the participant tools that can be used on a daily basis to promote aliveness, no matter what physical or emotional circumstance one finds oneself in. Music, movement, toning, games, processes, and discussion are all part of the experience. $325

Biofeedback Assisted Open Focus and Brain Wave Synchrony Training

Les Fehmi & Susan Shor

Brain wave activity is directly correlated with the way one pays attention. Synchrony is associated with "in-to-it," broad-scoped attention and effortless performance; desynchronized brain wave activity is associated with remote, narrow-focused attention and effortful performance. Brain wave synchrony and attention training consequently guide one toward an awareness that is simultaneously narrowed-in on detail, panoramic in scope, and bathed in an effortless sense of the moment.

The Open Focus methods presented in this experiential workshop support the rapid reduction of both conscious and unconscious physical and emotional stress and pain. Rather than ignoring unpleasant experience, participants will practice melting it directly, using attention skills they already possess. This method of dissolving stress and pain generates a sense of well-being and creative energy. Interested workshop participants will receive biofeedback training using an instrument that monitors brain activity from the major lobes of the brain and provides a feedback signal when whole-brain, in-phase synchrony is produced. An Open Focus tape will be provided for home practice.

Cosmic Conspiracy: A Game of Enlightenment

Robert Anton Wilson

Robert Anton Wilson writes: "Based on my psychological works and science-fantasy novels, this Game may shake the foundations of your world. When you enter the portals of Chapel Perilous, you will be given a deceptive Cover Story and a Real Identity—which is also fiction and exists only for the duration of the Game (if you're lucky). Thus, every participant is a liar—and you can't be too sure about the leader either. In regular sessions, I will lecture on such concepts as the presentation of the self in everyday life, the social creation of reality, the Game element in behavior, but between sessions you will have to deal with these abstract concepts in very concrete ways as spies, criminals, government agents, and extraterrestrials, as Cosmic Forces of Good and Evil attempt to lure you into their plots and counterplots.

"Can you find the Maltese Falcon before any other player? Is some clever villain among you using the Game as a front to deal drugs or to brainwash other players? Will you spot the CIA assassin before you're 'killed' and removed from the Game? If you do get 'killed,' what will happen in Rebirthing, before you can enter the Game with a new Ego? As you deal with these increasingly urgent questions, you will also have to decide if this 'Game' is teaching you social psychology, mysticism, agnosticism, paranoia, or if it's 'just a Game' after all.

"Warning: the Attorney General has determined that this Game may be hazardous to your dogma." $325

Cross-Cultural Shamanic Practices

Angeles Arrien

Participants of this workshop will be introduced to shamanic tools from diverse cultures in order to access and empower their inner teacher, healer, visionary, and warrior. The universal healing salves of singing, storytelling, dancing, and silence will be engaged to rekindle the spirit and retrieve any soul loss.

Group members will work individually and collectively to: honor ancestor spirits by releasing limiting family patterns; enhance personal and professional power by speaking with "spirit tongue" (truth-telling); and experience shamanic practices that reveal internal mythology, help heal wounds, and adjust imbalances.

This week qualifies as a Foundational Training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien. $630

The Art of Saying Goodbye

Paul Rebillot & Melissa Kay

The loss of a loved one, whether through death or separation, is a huge rent in the fabric of one's life. It is difficult to get on with other relationships until that rent is attended to. The pain of the loss needs to be released, and the difficulty of day-to-day existence after the loss needs to be acknowledged.

To learn something from suffering makes it worthwhile; to create something makes it bearable. Using open seat and emotional release, workshop participants will deal with their losses—not just in anguish, not only in pain—but artistically, musically, creatively. They will seek to give birth to new life, to create an artwork, a ritual both of letting go and of gathering within themselves the strength and the love which they have felt from those who have gone.

This workshop gives participants the opportunity to say goodbye, to experience the tears, the grief, and the potential for emotional renewal, and most importantly, to reconnect with the source of their own lives. $630

Back Into Action: Neuromuscular Reeducation

Laurence Goldfarb

Back Into Action is a proven approach to changing habitual postures and movement patterns. Originally designed for chronic back pain patients who failed to benefit from standard exercises and treatment modalities, it teaches a series of structured movement sequences which can be used as a complete program or modified to meet each person's specific needs.

This workshop combines lecture, lab, demonstration, case study presentation, and experiential Feldenkrais® movement so participants can develop the theoretical understanding, observational skills, and treatment repertoire needed to apply neuromuscular facilitation and movement reeducation in orthopedic rehabilitation. They will be shown how to:

- Assess the relationship of movement dysfunction to diagnosed pathology, mechanical stress, and hypo/hyper mobility
- Refine visual and palpatory evaluation skills
- Utilize programmed movement sequences, verbal cues, guided imagery, and manual contact to increase flexibility, coordination, and strength
- Teach neuromuscular control and kinesthetic acuity necessary for efficient, pain-free motion
- Integrate fundamental changes in habitual postures and movement into daily life

Each participant will receive an illustrated copy of the Back Into Action Handbook. $630

Everyone has at least one good story in them. The aim of this workshop is to create a safe, supportive space to give birth to that story. Each member of the workshop will be asked to function as storyteller, audience, and critic. When you're not telling, you'll be asked to listen and respond.

This workshop is limited to twelve people who will be chosen on the basis of personal letters sent to Spalding Gray c/o Esalen. The letters should explain why you feel it is important for you to take the workshop. Please send no fees until you are notified by mail of your acceptance. $325

Jerry & Kathleen Fletcher

Most people have had the experience of having something they were doing "take off" and go much better than expected. Yet many assume such times are lucky accidents, that it is not possible to create or sustain such performance deliberately or without stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout.

The results from ten years of research by the workshop presenters demonstrate that these times of exceptional performance are not capricious. Each individual has a pattern of actions that produces his or her best results. Once people learn their personal high performance patterns, they can carry out activities in a way that fits them and produce much better results for the same effort over sustained periods of time.

This seminar takes participants through a process in which they identify their individual high performance patterns and learn to apply them to their life and work. Developed through years of work with successful managers, executives, professionals, and work teams, it offers an approach to sustainable high performance, a welcome alternative to the stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout that accompanies constantly forcing oneself to peak periods of high output. $325

Turning Fifty: For Women Only

Marion Woodman

These five days are for women, ages 49, 50, or 51, to celebrate the meaning of mature womanhood. Through lectures, discussions, and body awareness they will contemplate the questions most relevant to women at this age: What is our present relationship to our partner? What are the most important values in our ongoing relationship? What is our relationship to our inner partner? What is our relationship to ourselves if we do not have a partner? How do we relate to our children and to our parents? How do we relate to our menopausal bodies?

These and other questions arising in this transitional period will be the theme of this workshop. Participants are asked to bring musical instruments, art supplies, or any object that would be of importance to them in a ritual.

Please note: This workshop will begin Monday morning at 9 AM instead of Sunday evening. However, participants are welcome to arrive anytime after 4 PM on Sunday. $630

On Being a Man

David Schiffman

Many men today have sought to honor and embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result of this emphasis, the right to celebrate and honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man's sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own natures which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood, and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and goodwill, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the "wild man" within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

A variety of experiential processes will illuminate these and similar issues. Traditional initiation rituals and purification ceremonies using drumming, chanting, and a sweat lodge will be incorporated in this journey as well. $630

Helen Palmer

The enneagram is an ancient psychological typology that describes nine personality types and their interrelationships. Each type is defined by a chief mental and emotional preoccupation to which attention habitually returns. The types correlate well with the current categories of psychological practice, but can open us to the fact that the repeating preoccupations of heart and mind that we in the West tend to dismiss as merely neurotic can also be used as access points into states of awareness like empathy, omniscience, and love.

Beginning with a review of the nine types, this workshop will focus on advanced material that can best be understood through oral teaching methods. These include learning to recognize type by listening to the differences in people's stories, by learning to ask key questions, and by paying attention to one's own internal impressions when in the presence of the different types.

This program is for those who are already familiar with the nine personality types and who wish to broaden their understanding of the system. It is intended for anyone who is interested in: recognizing ways in which the nine types relate to each other in intimate partnership and in work-related settings; determining strategies for working with the types; developing competency with the patterns of attention that support each type; gaining an understanding of the higher human abilities that can develop from working with the issues of type. This intensive can be applied as one of the requirements for the Enneagram Professional Training Program.

Rap Dancing into the Third Millennium

Terence McKenna

The approaching new millennium, its perils and promise, will be the theme of this weekend. We will analyze and review the past thousand years with an eye to trends and opportunities that the future may bring. Western civilization is caught in a phase transition to the first planet-wide, species-wide civilization. Does the emergence of a shared set of universal values—democracy, free markets, and the dignity of the individual—have to mean the end of diversity and pluralism? What does human self-imaging through technology portend for each of us? Is the human race down for the count, or on the brink of its greatest adventure?

Psychedelics, virtual reality, and the transformative power of magic and language will be topics for discussion. Join us for a lively exploration of the unfolding drama of the human family's entry into hyperspace. "He who is not busy being born, is busy dying." $325

The Path of Transformation in Psychotherapy and Meditation

Daniel Brown

This workshop is designed for psychotherapists, practitioners of meditation, and those interested in the integration of the worlds of psychotherapy and spirituality. The leader will present an integrated model for the path of transformation, for the development of emotional experience, the sense of self and others, and reality sense. This model of normal, pathological, and optimal human development is drawn from the fields of child development, clinical psychology, and the great Eastern traditions of meditation.

This workshop will show how the path of meditation unfolds and will present a vision of optimal human development. It will also help participants learn to assess and treat different types of problems (clinical symptoms and meditation crises) which occur at various points along the overall developmental continuum. The workshop will address how psychotherapy can be used as a way to attain some of the necessary prerequisites for spiritual development and can assist with the problems that occur for the meditation practitioner and meditation teacher. It will also show how spiritual awareness can inform one's view of psychotherapy. Various experiential exercises and meditation practices will be used along with clinical case material. The workshop will be both experiential and didactic.

Much of the material will be drawn from the leader's experience as a clinician and teacher, and from his 18 years of practicing meditation, translating meditation texts from Sanskrit and Tibetan sources, and conducting scientific studies on deep meditation states and enlightenment on meditation masters in this country and in South Asia.

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will be to enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder of meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and movement are one." $630

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

This course will synthesize neurolinguistics and Ericksonian hypnosis, drawing heavily from the enneagram of character fixation. It satisfies the hypnosis coursework requirements for the M.F.C.C. and complies with the California state requirement for hypnosis certification.

While the use of hypnosis in habit control and symptom removal will be covered, a primary focus will be on hypnosis as a tool of spiritual emergence. Starting with the presupposition that we already live in trance and that the goal is waking up, the roots of personality structure and the filters of perception in the creation and transformation of reality will be carefully explored. Participants will have the opportunity to experience the power of trance to transform their lives, which will create a model for working with clients.

The structure of rapport, pacing and leading, and various hypnotic patterns of induction will be demonstrated and practiced along with a variety of clinical interventions, including reframing, change history, metaphors, and storytelling. There will be videotapes of Erickson and other well-known leaders in the field of hypnosis. Participants will have daily practice with each other and the opportunity to be videotaped doing a hypnotic induction. Daily zazen, Taoist yoga, and movement led by Antoinette Varner will also be a part of this program.

Upon completion of this course, participants who want to be certified must demonstrate a high level of professionalism as well as proficiency in technical skills to the satisfaction of the instructors before certification will be granted. After certification by the Institute for Advanced Hypnosis (testing and certification fee, $300), additional certifications are available from the American Council of Hypnotist Examiners ($125) and the Society of NeuroLinguistic Programming ($200).

Emotional Healing:
From Co-Dependence to Aliveness

Karen Paine-Gernée & Terry Hunt

Children who grow up in alcoholic, abusive, or otherwise unhealthy homes often develop certain disabilities which last through their lifetimes unless they are deliberately addressed, among them: an inordinate need to control, an over-developed sense of responsibility, fear of authority figures, inability to trust, difficulty having fun, compulsive behavior, fear of abandonment, and chronic lack of self-esteem.

Alcoholism is a disease of denial. ACAs tell themselves that it really wasn't so bad, and they learn not to feel what they cannot tolerate. As they deny pain, they screen out joy, and their adult lives are often filled with depression and loneliness. ACAs are often survivors, though, and most have emerged as successful-appearing adults. Yet they often spend so much energy managing and controlling work and relationships that they have little left for themselves.

COURTESY ESALEN SOVIET-AMERICAN EXCHANGE PROGRAM

Soviet entrepreneur Joseph Goldin, who helped inspire the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program, with Mary Payne and Jim Hickman, two of the Exchange Program's founders, in Moscow in 1980.

A necessary part of recovery is moving from the state of being co-dependent in one's life toward a state of emotional sobriety. Through self-exploration, participants will have the opportunity to access, express, and release blocked emotions that they still carry from childhood and to tap the aliveness that was sacrificed when they buried their anger, fear, and grief. Points of focus for this workshop will include:

- Emotional Sobriety: Having a personal sense of balance and physical boundaries from which to find peace and a capacity for genuine sharing and pleasure.
- Pleasure/Addictions: Learning that true pleasure is a life-affirming non-addictive experience.
- Sexuality: Separating the unmet needs of the wounded child from adult intimate sexual relationships; learning basic tools for nurturing and sustaining healthy relationships.
- Boundaries: Looking at the tendency to alternate between fusing with another and then completely isolating oneself.
- Spirituality: Learning to have faith in the face of the horror experienced in childhood.
- Self-Esteem: Realizing that self-doubt is oftentimes based on old mental patterns, not on reality.
- Learning New Behaviors: Identifying and overcoming old ways of reacting.
- Looking Beyond the Label: Knowing when to stop calling oneself a co-dependent.

Massage Practitioner
Certification Program

Esalen offers a California state-approved massage program. Upon completion of a two-month massage work study track or a 130-hour massage practitioner workshop (see Special and Future Programs for dates), and after giving 30 additional massages elsewhere, graduates will receive their certificates. This program provides at least 130 hours of instruction, including anatomy, supplemented by study in body-mind disciplines such as yoga, gestalt awareness work, and movement, fulfilling the state requirement.

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring Project offers outreach, education, and referrals that extend Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent, service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring operates a global referral system, linking visitors to Esalen with body workers, counselors, and teachers from their home areas. There are ongoing programs at Esalen and a traveling workshop service in the U.S. and abroad. Instructors teach self-healing, Esalen body work, yoga, breath and body awareness, dance and centering movement, and meditation. Many instructors have experience in gestalt practice and movement continuum.

The Healthspring Library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, philosophy, yoga, nutrition, and organic gardening which may be borrowed by seminarians for a two-week period while at Esalen. Donations of books or periodicals are greatly appreciated.

For access to the referral system and traveling workshop program, write to Laurie Lioness Parizek at Esalen, c/o Healthspring.

Institute of Transpersonal Psychology Offers External Master's Degrees

Beginning in September 1990, work students will have the opportunity to integrate their work study experience at Esalen with the external degree program of the Institute of Transpersonal Psychology. The external degree format enables students to study at any location. Work students will be able to continue the dynamics of personal growth fostered at Esalen while earning master's degrees in transpersonal studies or in transpersonal psychology.

■ WILDERNESS PROGRAMS

Esalen Wilderness Programs Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The standard refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered. To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, we require a deposit of $200. The balance of the fee is due 14 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited. (Please note: The Grand Canyon trip has a different cancellation and refund policy. See workshop description below.)

August 27–September 9
Path of the River: A Grand Canyon Journey
Steven Harper, Wendy Palmer, Bob Melville & Arizona Raft Adventures Staff (AZRA)

The Grand Canyon and Colorado River provide an environment of dramatic variety which is intimate and awesome, soft and demanding, yet always rewarding for those who are open to all it has to offer. On this 14-day whitewater raft trip through the entire length of the Grand Canyon, participants can explore offerings of river, canyon, and natural world. The river is a teacher and primary metaphor. The group will draw from aikido, dance, energy awareness, meditation, and gestalt to enhance their experience of this majestic wilderness area.

Travel will be in paddle and oar rafts. Instruction will be offered in basic aspects of river life such as paddling and minimum-impact river camping. Group members will have time to discuss the Canyon's ecology, geology, natural and cultural history; to hike and explore side canyons; to sit quietly and reflect; to integrate learnings from this trip into their lives.

River experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity and to participate fully. The workshop begins at 7 AM August 27 in Flagstaff, Arizona; there will be a pre-trip meeting at 6 PM the evening before. AZRA will supply all the necessary river rafting gear, food, and transportation between Flagstaff and the Canyon. Details and a personal equipment list will be sent upon registration. Enrollment is limited.

Due to Esalen's special arrangement with AZRA, the following cancellation policy is in effect for this workshop: A $200 nonrefundable deposit per person will confirm your reservation. Balance is due May 27, 1990. If you cancel prior to May 27, your nonrefundable deposit, less a $60 registration fee, may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. No refunds are available after May 27. This program will be canceled if not full by May 27. Register early to reserve your spot and to ensure that the trip will go. $1800

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program. It is advantageous for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study Coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program.

Two programs are planned for each month. Programs scheduled thus far for 1990-91 include:

August 26–September 23
Karuna Licht offers women a month of healing and recovery. Emotional work, meditation, art, dance, and ritual will be the modalities.

Judy Blackstone will teach Subtle Self Work, a method for deep attunement to oneself and others, combining meditation, movement, and gestalt.

DAVID NELSON

The approach to the baths today

The Hot Springs

• by Keith Thompson •

TOM GALLOWAY

On a particular winter morning at Esalen I found myself awake at three o'clock trying to force a new window into an old wall of my life. Lacking a design plan I decided to quit and make my way down to the hot springs. I still vividly remember the walk: pitch-darkness, coastline cradled in fog, absence of human sounds save for my footsteps, which, for some unknown reason, I counted from the moment I left the edge of the lodge deck until I reached the bathhouse below. One hundred sixty hurried steps in the cold dead of night.

Clear though they seem, these images approach vagueness compared to my memory of the discourses that echoed in the bathhouse that night, the night the springs were traced to a multiple source.

Plain white candles flickered in sand-filled cement containers as I padded through the section once called The Men's Side, toward the two stone tubs beyond the north wall of the bathhouse. I chose the nearest one, empty of passengers unlike the bigger round one where a symposium of sorts seemed to be under way. Its participants, I discovered, included a geologist, a professor of ancient history, a theologian, a physician, and a longtime Big Sur local: a grizzled, wiry old man whose photo was probably on file at Central Casting under Forest Dweller, Primordial.

The geologist was holding forth as I submitted to the steaming sulfurous pool. I was glad to track a conversation other than the ones racing in my own head.

"The origin of the water? The veins and tissues of Mother Earth, if you want the mythic answer," I heard her say. "Speaking geologically, thermal springs come from waters rising out of fissures in high-temperature rocks, and from volcanic waters, either as geysers or hot springs. Once I brought a thermometer here to the baths. The water as it came right out of the ground was 115 degrees. A sample I took to the lab for analysis showed traces of sulphur, soda, arsenic, iron, copper, carbonate and sulfate of lime, common salt, magnesia, and lithium."

A voice asked whether the springs will remain hot permanently.

thermal springs come from waters rising out of fissures in high-temperature rocks, and from volcanic waters, either as geysers or hot springs.

"As in 'forever'? I hope so, but the answer, really, is 'Maybe, maybe not.' Thermal water sources sometimes cool down due to seismic changes of various kinds. Others, like those in Saratoga Springs, New York, and Aachen, West Germany, remain quite hot."

These were things I had wondered about. After a pause, the historian spoke up.

"I suppose it's my immersion in the classics, but I doubt that the real source is underground," he said, with playful authority. "The water, yes, that's in the earth. But the source for baths, for public bathing rituals, for what we are doing here tonight—for that we must look to the species of nature called culture. I've made a study of the history of baths . . ."

This was soon evident. The story he told, summarized here, is a vast and rich one.

Mohenjo-daro, the civilization built in the Indus Valley in 3000 B.C., featured a public bath of 24 by 40 feet and an elaborate drainage system allowing at least one bathroom in a house, with brick horizontal drains and terra-cotta pipes fitted with spigot and faucet joints and protected by brickwork or the walls. Later, the Minoan Palace of Knossos, on Crete, included a sophisticated drainage system with bathrooms, footbaths, stone drains, and a tub believed to date from 2000 to 1800 B.C. Vertical pipes may even have permitted an upward flow of water.

"Consider the white porcelain bathtubs over there," the historian continued, waving broadly toward the bathhouse. "The structure of bathtubs has changed very little since the one found inside the queen's apartment in the Palace of Knossos. Her tub was modest in scale and designed for function, and it fits the description of the Mycenaean tub in which the Homeric heroes later bathed after 'soul-exhausting toil'."

A magnificent book by Siegfried Giedion, Mechanization Takes Command, chronicles the history of bathing through the current century. Giedion argues that the Greek bath cannot be understood apart from the institution that gave it meaning, the gymnasium, the educational center of the Hellenes, where citizens came for strenuous exercise as well as to hear poets, philosophers, and rhetoricians speak. The bath here "lies on the divide between the hours of strong physical effort and contemplative discourse," Giedion writes. "No other period more organically fused the bath into human regeneration."

Given the proximity of the Esalen baths to physical culture—somatics and body work—and to emotional, mental, and spiritual exploration—the courses offered at Esalen—fascinating parallels emerge between the Greek gymnasium and Esalen as a center of learning.

Romans continued the Greek tradition on a grand scale. A system of aqueducts fed sumptuous baths (thermae), such as those of Caracalla, begun around A.D. 217 and growing to cover some 28 acres. Individual baths covered an area of 1000 square feet; those built by Diocletian from A.D. 298-306 accommodated 3200 bathers at once! Roman steam baths featured rooms heated to different temperatures, like 20th century Turkish baths. By the beginning of the 4th century A.D. there were 1000 baths in Rome alone.

Red-hot irons or heated stones were used to generate heat which circulated beneath the floors and through a system of earthenware pipes (tubulae) which carried heat through hollow walls. "Abundance of water and heat give the Roman thermae their unique stamp," writes Giedion. "What makes them impressive are not the quantities of water and amounts of heat they absorbed, but the way they served total regeneration."

The thermae opened at noon, two hours before the average Roman (at work since dawn) would quit for the day and go to "take the waters." Vigorous exercise loosened muscles and stimulated circulation. This was followed by 30 minutes or so in the tepidarium (warm room); then a shorter stay in the caldarium (hot room); then an even briefer visit to the laconicum, where hot, dry air, approaching 210 degrees Fahrenheit, pushed the limits of endurance. Bathers would then soap up, take a massage, and plunge into a swimming pool. All this at a ridiculously low admission price "quite out of proportion to the expense and upkeep of the establishment," Giedion writes.

COURTESY MICHAEL MURPHY

Entrance to the baths, 1902

Back at Esalen, his fellow bathers now clearly entranced, the historian continued. "After Rome, the nature of public bathing changed decidedly. Gone was the colossal scale and the Greco-Roman focus on bathing for rejuvenation. Medieval bathing facilities were far more primitive and served a very basic end: cleanliness." With this he stepped out of the tub and turned a hose of cold water on himself, adding, "Alternating cold with hot is a custom of Turkish baths. There's much more to say about all this, of course, but for once I'm not in the classroom. So I think it's time for me to be quiet and let one of the rest of you regale us."

He sat back down in the tub to a round of applause from his companions. "That's for talking, not for stopping," said the geologist. "Now, who's next? Who will tell us something else about what brings us to the waters?"

It was very late—or early, rather. The fog had shifted and the moon was poised for a breakthrough. Its silver shadow made the night air seem cooler. I reached back to the trough to let in more hot water, wondering how long the people in the adjacent tub had known each other.

Now the theologian (actually, a postgraduate divinity student) spoke up. "I have something to say in the spirit of the good professor's search for the true source of bathing," she began. "Yes, there's bathing for comfort and rejuvenation, and of course bathing for cleanliness. But I suspect these are offshoots of a more basic category: ceremonial purification. Like baptism, ranging from total immersion in rivers and streams to symbolic sprinkling . . . or tirthayatra, the Hindu pilgrimage bath in a holy river . . . or the Hebrew mikvah, which prescribes specific amounts and kinds of water for ritual purification. And then there are magical uses of water, like the Zande of Central Africa who pour water over the bodies of persons suspected of delaying or preventing rain."

Early ritual uses of water, shamanic initiations no less than Christian baptisms, are indeed rife with symbolic significance. Alchemy begins with the liquefactio, a symbolic melting or dissolution in order to release what's fixed. The great mythologist Mircea Eliade sees immersion in water as equivalent to a "dissolution of forms" and emersion from water as repeating the primordial act of "formal manifestation." Water "purifies the luminous breath within us," says the ancient Greek Iamblichus. The prophet in the Fifty-first Psalm sings: "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." Jung says water symbolizes "the living power of the psyche." Boldly, the French dramatist Paul Claudel insists: "Everything the heart desires can always be reduced to a water figure."

So it went, into the morning. Eventually the physician offered his diagnosis. "So far we have bathing for comfort, rejuvenation, cleanliness, and purification. Now I'll add my idea, namely, bathing for health. Of course that's implicit in all that's been said, but health has a peculiarly modern connotation. Prior to the germ theory of disease, health couldn't have been an intention of bathing, though it must have been one effect. In our age the word that usually precedes spa is health. Many of the European spas built in the early 18th century were constructed on the sites of abandoned Roman baths. They became fashionable secular centers, during the tourist season especially. Spas eventually offered year-round treatment for maladies of all sorts. The waters were for drinking, too."

The doctor continued. "My theory is that a crucial aspect of the curative factor of spas is their environment—Switzerland, France, Austria, Italy. You put your everyday life on hold, travel perhaps a great distance, enter a new climate, change your diet, get more exercise, fresh air, expand your horizons. And you're surrounded by people who, like you, know they must change their lives."

"That last part sounds like Esalen," said the geologist.

The collective silence that followed seemed an appropriate acknowledgment that a journey into the history of bathing had at last returned to these baths. But the symposium was far from over.

"It's about time. . . . I was wondering when one of you was going to figure that out." The primordial forest dweller from Big Sur had awakened from his two hours of soaking, occasional stretching, and unapparent listening. He shot up like Ahab's great whale, sending water over the sides.

"You've each got part of it—health, purification, comfort, culture. All are aspects of the baths we're sitting in right here. Now, I've got some stories to tell about this very place, how it was, how it came to be. Goes back long before the Murphy family, you know. It's an epic, I'll tell you."

And he did, rather like Homer. Here is his account, paraphrased, and supplemented by other sources as indicated.

References to when the California coast was settled tend to imply that prior to the arrival of European immigrants the area was "unsettled." It would be more accurate to say that with the arrival of white people an existing way of life was doomed, for there's little doubt that a native people variously called Esselen, Excelen, Excerem, Excsalen (among numerous approximations) lived in the heart of Monterey County, perhaps originally at Tassajara Hot Springs near the site of the Zen monastery there today, long before the arrival of Spanish missionaries.

In Big Sur's Lost Tribe, The Esselen, D. M. Howard writes that the Esselen "possessed a sharply defined language of their own" which rendered them "distinct and apart from" other Indian tribes of the region. H. E. Ludewig's The Literature of American Aboriginal Languages (1858) reports that the Esselen (placed "east of Monterey") speak "the richest idiom of all the California Indians." The language scholar A. L. Kroeber reports Esselen words for animals, including seal, rabbit, fish, and flea; for verbs such as to bet, to eat, to laugh, to sing, to flirt; and expressions "for a bead necklace, to bring the coat of rabbit skins, he is drunk." (Kroeber says the last phrase probably refers to post-contact times, "unless the allusion is to drug intoxication.")

The Esselen word for water is azanax; the word for warm or hot, tak. How satisfying it would be to find some specific references to how the Esselen may have enjoyed the hot mineral waters pouring onto beach rocks from the cliffs, especially at night (tomanis) when the moon (tomanis-ashi) was full in the heavens (imita). Unfortunately, no reliable accounts exist of Esselen bathing practices.

The Esselen were "herded into the missions at Monterey and Carmel, and they perished in a few generations . . . the first California Indians to become totally extinct," writes Walt Anderson in The Upstart Spring. Mrs. Hans Ewoldsen of Big Sur reported that by the time of her grandfather Michael Pfeiffer's arrival at Big Sur in 1869 there were no indigenous Indians to be found. That same year Missouri native Thomas Benton Slate arrived in Monterey County after a few years of mining in British Columbia. In 1882 Slate and his wife, the former Bersabe R. Soberanes, a descendant of the original Vallejo family, homesteaded on the site of what is today Esalen Institute. From then, until the early 1960s, the property was called Slate's Hot Springs.

Slate, according to legend, had sought the hot springs to relieve his arthritis. The cabin he and his wife first occupied was located where the machine shop is now found at Esalen. The "same" cabin stands today as the Farmhouse, across from the Gazebo School/Park, although Michael Murphy notes "there's probably not a single piece of the original wood left. It's like the Greek ship that Socrates described as having sailed for many years: every board had been replaced but, still, it was the same ship."

In 1893 Slate sold the property to a family named Little, who in 1910 sold it to Henry Murphy, a doctor from Salinas, for $7500. Doc Murphy, with his wife, Vinnie, had visited several European health spas and was impressed by what he had seen. Slate's Hot Springs, he decided, could be such a place. In 1914 he hired a fishing boat from Monterey and "with the help of its owner, an elderly Chinese, brought two huge claw-footed Victorian bathtubs down the coast and hauled them up the rocks to the springs," where they sat "elegantly on a wooden platform on the edge of the cliff," Anderson writes.

A description of coming upon Slate's Hot Springs on horseback is given by J. Smeaton Chase in California Coast Trails (1913):

"Here I found a comfortable, old-fashioned house where I could put up for the night. In fact, the place makes some claim to rank as a resort, by virtue of its medicinal springs, though no guests were in evidence, nor any token of either expectation or accommodations for them. A quarter of a mile from the house I found a couple of tents pitched on a ledge of rock halfway down the hundred-foot bluff. In them were bathtubs to which hot sulphur water was led to springs that break out all along the cliff. . . . It was an enjoyable experience to bathe thus, as it were, in mid-air, with gulls screaming all around and breakers roaring fifty feet below."

Author Henry Miller at the "Men's Side" of the baths in 1950

In 1937, after the new highway from the north finally reached what continued to be known as Slate's Hot Springs, John Murphy (Dr. Murphy's son) and his wife Marie built the Little House, which stands today across Hot Springs Canyon. Across the lawn, two years later, the Big House was constructed.

Much had happened by the time Michael Murphy and Richard Price became interested in putting the old Murphy family property, Slate's Hot Springs, to good use. Henry Miller, the provocative author of Tropic of Cancer and Tropic of Capricorn, had helped make Big Sur nationally famous as a Bohemian paradise. "It is here, and nowhere else, that I have witnessed people re-cast their lives and live them out," Miller wrote in Big Sur and the Oranges of Hieronymous Bosch, published in 1957.

Murphy and Price had met in San Francisco. Both were 3c, interested in Eastern religions, new psychotherapeutic methods, altered states of consciousness, and what today would probably be called "holistic health." Both wanted to explore these areas, but had no interest in joining any of the dogmatic meditation groups organized around a single idea or charismatic individual. Graduate training in psychology was a possibility, but neither felt called to conduct behavioral experiments with rats and pigeons. Nor were they eager to enlist in academic philosophy's then-prevalent campaign to reduce metaphysics and religion to linguistics.

They decided instead to head down to the land at Big Sur, where they could probably find part-time jobs. "If they didn't like it, they could always go back to San Francisco," Anderson recounts. "If they did like it, they could stay on indefinitely, meditate, and read."

So, in the spring of 1961 they loaded up the red Jeep pickup Price had borrowed from a friend and left for Big Sur. Arriving late, they made their way to the Big House, selected a couple of bedrooms, and went to sleep. After midnight Murphy wakened to a flashlight shined at him by an ominous figure holding a billy club.

"Who the hell are you guys?" the man demanded to know. "What are you doing here?"

His name was Hunter Thompson, an aspiring writer hired by Michael's grandmother Vinnie to guard the property. She had neglected to tell him her grandson and a friend were coming down. Thompson was at work on a novel about Puerto Rican baseball players. Murphy would come to appreciate this encounter as an early glimpse of memorable adventures ahead, especially at the baths.

Here, roughly, is the scene Murphy and Price encountered in their first weeks at Slate's Hot Springs:

After Henry Murphy's death in 1948, his widow had established a modest tourist enterprise—a motel, restaurant, and bar based around "the water cure." The accommodations were managed by a Mrs. Webb, from Fresno, with help from fellow members of the First Church of God of Prophecy. These were "sober, hard-working types who used the lodge for their Saturday night services when they gathered together to sing hymns and speak in tongues," writes Anderson.

In contrast, many of the steady weekend customers came to the hot springs for revelry of a more Dionysian sort. Mrs. Webb and her associates got on well enough with them largely by arranging not to notice late night goings-on at the bathhouse. An aspiring folksinger named Joan Baez had taken up residence and spent much of each day in song. A carpenter and his family lived in the Little House on the north side of the property. Dick Price read and did odd jobs while recovering from aftereffects of the Draconian psychiatric "treatment" he had received years before. For his part, Michael meditated a lot and dreamed of inviting original thinkers to lead seminars on new ideas.

Anderson paints a vivid picture of Slate's Hot Springs during the spring and summer of 1961: glossalalia in the lodge, torid midnights at the baths, folk music in the cabins, brawls in the parking lot, meditation in the Big House. "Hunter Thompson marched amid all this with his billy club, representing the forces of law and order," writes Anderson, adding that the future "gonzo" journalist's attempts to enforce morality at the baths and break up fistfights stood in sharp contrast to Mrs. Webb's genius for being "elsewhere when there was trouble."

Michael realized it was time for a change. He was ready to begin inviting speakers and teachers to be in residence, but first there had to be drastic reforms at Slate's Hot Springs. He asked his grandmother to let him take over the motel, but she wouldn't go for it—not at first; she suspected her meditating grandson would just give it all away to "some Hindu." In the meantime, Mike and Dick continued to brainstorm ideas. Maybe Alan Watts, already teaching in the area, could be persuaded to give classes at the lodge.

Eventually Michael's reluctant father, John Murphy, came to view the undertaking with enthusiasm. In time he prevailed upon his mother to give Michael and Dick a long-term lease on the property. A high metal fence with a gate went up across the pathway leading to the baths, which were now restricted in hours. Most of the intransigent bath clientele were permanently frightened off one infamous night by the mere sound of Hunter Thompson and several cohorts piloting three leashed, fiercely-barking Doberman pinschers down the path to the bathhouse.

Once the dust had settled from this near encounter, it took Murphy and Price time to realize what had happened. Soon it sank in: the property was now theirs in fact, not just on paper. So they got busy—Dick on the business side of things, Mike signing up Alan Watts, Gregory Bateson, Aldous Huxley, among many others, to teach. The first brochure of programs appeared in the fall of 1962. Its heading: "The Human Potentiality." Esalen Institute was being born.

Well before his death in 1980, Henry Miller's legendary several times weekly six-mile round-trip trek to wash diapers at the hot springs entered the book of discontinued bathhouse rituals. In recent years there have been other changes as well.

Via a conductive heat-exchange system, a pump underneath the swimming pool now draws runoff hot water from the springs up the cliff into a system of coils which heats the swimming pool water. In the early 1980s, two beautiful stone tubs were built outside the northern wall of the bathhouse, affording a spectacular view of the Pacific. Using a pre-existing trough, these tubs make possible the quintessential open-air bathing envisioned by spa innovators throughout the world.

Plans are currently being drawn for redesigning the entire bathhouse in 1991, to secure its physical standing and make it more "intimate and grotto-like so it blends right into the hillside, with rock face on the cinder block walls and more outside baths," says Esalen president Steven Donovan.

As for the water itself, it continues to flow. It remains hot. (People are still asked not to climb into the troughs, where water temperature sometimes approaches 120 degrees.) The old tents on the hillside, described above by J. S. Chase, are long gone. Yet the dance of Neptune and Apollo—sea, air, and light—continues from every possible vista.

> the baths do not and cannot exist apart from the myriad legends surrounding them

Who can doubt the uniqueness of the Esalen baths? The stories the Big Sur local told—amazing! Yet who can question the continuity of these springs with public baths and bathing traditions the world over?—the grand thermae of the classical world, the spas of old Europe, the Japanese furo, Turkish hot-and-cold baths, Native American sweat lodges, Finnish saunas, the steamy mud baths of Calistoga, and various symbolic water ceremonies. Water indeed calls to us, in ways we scarcely fathom.

The geologist was right—its source is the earth.

The historian was right, too, in defining the culture of comfort and rejuvenation associated with bathing.

The divinity student was right. Purification happens daily at the baths: sometimes with flowers and herbs and fragrances; other times in specific meditations; and always in the impulse, conscious or not, to respect the springs as sanctuary.

The physician was right about health, so central to Doctor Murphy's original vision when he bought Slate's Hot Springs. He saw a spa.

Maybe the Big Sur local was the most right of all, in reminding us that the baths do not and cannot exist apart from the myriad legends surrounding them, nor from the controversies they have occasioned, nor from the conversations the waters still shape, and overhear. Conversations conducted by water: how many have there been like the one I witnessed that night, not only at Esalen but in cultures past? And how many more not like that one?

Thinking back, I don't even remember the specific quandary that kept me from sleep and led me to the bathhouse. But I do recall its image—a sense of forcing something that wouldn't fit. By the time I walked back up the hill after sunrise, the image had evaporated.

This elemental metaphor better fits my sense of the matter than images of change biased toward cognition: "new knowing," "fresh insight," "awakened understanding." These have their truth, too, but still, I had slipped bodily into the water that night. There I listened not only to words but to sounds dancing with air. I glimpsed moonlight glancing off wet stones and distant human forms. I smelled sulphur. I tasted rivulets of sweat running down my face. Especially, I felt amniotic warmth subtly linking me with the murmurings of my heart. This let me finally . . . go.

> . . . By morning
> I had vanished at least a dozen times
> into something better.

> — Mary Oliver,
> "Sleeping in the Forest"

Maybe we come to "take the waters" most of all with a secret hope that we ourselves will be taken . . . away. Waters flow, waters form, waters go. We too long to go, to flow and fall—and fly. Yes, fly. "Water invites us on an imaginary journey," writes Bachelard. "It is near water and on water that we learn to sail on clouds."

The Body at Esalen

GEORGE ERLICH

In the connection it makes between physical locale and theoretical articulation, Esalen stands with other places that have figured in the evolution of human consciousness: the monasteries scattered throughout the world where monks lovingly and often unwittingly preserved humanistic treasures; Cordova in that brief golden period of Christian, Jewish, and Islamic collaboration; Renaissance Florence; pre-Hitler Vienna and the Bauhaus; post-Hitler New York and Princeton. It is too easy to think of great jumps in theory as coming "from above," like Jesus begotten in Mary's womb by the Holy Spirit. But if you actually examine the great leaps forward in thought, you often find that they were engendered by intense conversational intercourse: Braque and Picasso painting side by side for eight years; Freud, Adler, and Jung puzzling together over their dreams and those of their analysands; Marcuse, Adorno, and Hochheimer in their Frankfurt café dissecting the fascist mind just beginning to dawn over Europe.

Similarly, the unique physical qualities of Esalen—the hot springs, massage rooms and deck, the lodge, gardens, the Big Sur coast—and the meetings among extraordinary individuals which have occurred there, have been of great significance in the creation of somatics. The evolution of this diverse field, in part, has taken place through chance encounters at the baths, conversations over dinner, walks in the redwoods.

Like simultaneous developments within the field of psychology, the widely varying methods developed by the pioneers of somatics share fundamental assumptions about human reality which constitute a break with the past, establishing it as a field rather than a collection of different schools.[1] But unlike psychology, somatics has evolved outside the universities and research labs which offer people in those institutions the opportunity for constant dialogue.

Moreover, the pioneers in this field, most of whom spent their early years in a European world saturated with language and on the brink of unimaginable horrors perpetrated in the name of abstract theories, chose to leave the world of verbal discourse to explore what Ida Rolf called "the silent level of flesh." That descent into silence has been an essential process in the life of somatics; without it there can be no serious work. Those of us involved in this field know how many years of quiet work it takes even to begin to inhabit our hands, breath, joints, and gut.

But the need for silence, compounded by the lack of opportunity for dialogue among leaders in the field, has generated problems. The different schools have grown up fragmented, incapable of entering into the kind of discourse required as one step in building a shared body of knowledge. Critical inquiry into any particular school is not looked upon with great favor; it is often perceived as a threat to the unchallenged wisdom of the founder. But without debate and collective research with other schools, somatics institutes can become more like churches based on faith than schools of empirical investigation. It is often rhetoric rather than public evidence that is adduced to justify one method in opposition to others. That fragmentation has kept the somatics movement from identifying the underlying principles common to the wide variety of particular methods. It has also kept this now large body of practitioners from engaging in the widespread collaborative research that would be necessary to establish the scientific reliability of the work.

From its very beginnings, Esalen Institute has created the opportunity for various schools to emerge from such isolation. Pioneers such as Ida Rolf, Charlotte Selver, Alexander Lowen, and Moshe Feldenkrais offered workshops and trainings at Esalen, in the same physical place. They and their early students met over meals to talk about their common work; they often attended each other's demonstrations and traded sessions at the baths. At Esalen, they became aware of new possibilities that eventually nurtured their own approaches.

The Esalen massage crew has played a peculiar role in the development of this field. They are somewhat like a community of anthropologists who have visited many cultures, and, knowing so many different worldviews, are freed from taking any one as the absolute truth. The longtime Esalen practitioners have typically studied with many of the pioneers, and, as a result, various methodologies are embodied in the approach of the single practitioner. It is not unusual when receiving an Esalen massage to feel hints of Feldenkrais, Rolf, Trager, or Fritz Smith. Esalen massage instruction itself became an early example of the convergence of various approaches into a unified field because the emphasis in teaching was placed on basic principles rather than specific techniques. The Esalen student has to confront deep, personal issues of becoming sensitive to the reality of the other person and inventive in responding to that particular person's needs. He or she cannot fall back on the comfort of preprogrammed "strokes."

In addition, the major forms of somatics are usually represented at Esalen by outstanding teachers of such methods as Rolfing, Feldenkrais, Trager, osteopathy, and deep tissue work. These practitioners, working side by side with practitioners of other methods and often joining in collaborative teaching, have generated a common field.

For the past three years, some of us have been building on this informal Esalen matrix to create a more explicit sense of the field through collaborative research and dialogue with people representing the major institutions of society: religion, education, psychology, science, and medicine. In June 1987 we held the first interdisciplinary conference on the body, in which a group of somatic teachers came together with biological and human scientists, a shaman, a poet, and a teacher of meditation, to explore the nature of our work within a larger context. That conference gave rise to an ongoing study group of somatics teachers, including Judith Aston, creator of Aston-Patterning; Bonnie Bainbridge Cohen, founder of the school of Body-Mind Centering; Emilie Conrad-Da'oud, originator of Continuum; Robert Hall, cofounder of the Lomi School and the Tomales Institute of Somatic Psychotherapy; Charlotte Selver, who brought the Sensory Awareness work of Elsa Gindler to this country; and myself, of the Antioch-New College graduate programs in somatic psychology and education.

[1] I want to acknowledge the enormous contribution to the field by Thomas Hanna, a beloved friend and colleague and a frequent teacher at Esalen, who was killed in an auto accident on July 29, 1990. It was he, as founder and editor of the journal Somatics, who first used the term to describe these various works as a single school.

From January 1988 to September 1989, that group conducted a cooperative educational venture with a group of sixteen experienced health practitioners, including a physician, two nurses, and body workers practicing several methods. The venture was designed to explore and develop a theory and practice based on the underlying principles of the multiple methods rather than the specific techniques practiced within each field. The group met for a one-week intensive every three months, with various members of the faculty in attendance. The seminar provided a further step in advancing a dialogue among leaders in the field.

May 1988 marked the beginning of the body-spirituality project, originally funded by Laurance Rockefeller and now additionally by the Fetzer Foundation. That project has brought together the somatics team of teachers with leaders of major religious institutions, including theologians, pastors, rabbis, nuns, ministers, and directors of clinics, seminaries, and religious communities, to explore the relationships between earthly and spiritual values. The emphasis in these seminars has been on experiential work designed to explore tensions produced by the dominant social images of the body and to offer alternative images more conducive to respect for human beings and the planet. The somatics faculty has conducted group exercises in body image and personality, sensory awareness, body movement, breath, imagery, and simple forms of touch. In addition, each participant has had the opportunity for several private sessions of body work from the Esalen massage crew. There have been theoretical discussions exploring the implications of the experiential work for healing, social organization, and particularly for world peace. Out of those discussions has emerged a joint project of the massage crew and the New College Somatics Program to create a healing center for survivors of political torture. The clinic itself will be in San Francisco, with Esalen providing a retreat location for community leaders.

In 1989, Dmitri Spivak of Leningrad, a researcher on the effects on consciousness of the various ancient meditation practices found in the Soviet Union, was a participant in our seminar. Through him, we have contacted a number of people in the Soviet Union who are involved in the historic renewal of spiritual consciousness in that country. Some of those people will join us in 1991. In January of 1992, the various somatics and religious leaders involved over the five years in this project will present the fruits of their work to the public in a large Esalen seminar.

On a different front, the somatics team has been meeting regularly to promote greater conceptual clarity about the nature of our work, to clean up vague notions, purge unquestioned dogmas, and pare down our methods to their essential structures. This has been a fundamental preliminary task for empirical inquiry into the nature of our shared work. To this end, a team of scientists has become part of our ongoing group: Seymour Levine, a psychobiologist from Stanford University; Martha Stampfer, a microbiologist from UC Berkeley; and George Solomon and Margaret Kemeny, psychoneuroimmunologists from UCLA. They have had the great patience to engage with us in our various experiential works (and question our articulations of those works) to help us make sense of what we are up to. As a result of these dialogues, the first steps are now underway for specific research projects.

The first international conference on somatics was held in Paris in November 1988. As a representative of Esalen, I was invited to give a major address at that conference in addition to experiential workshops. Robert Hall represented us at the second international somatics conference in Montevideo in March 1990. I represented us at the international conference on psycho-corporal therapies at the University of Montreal in October 1990. Through our presentations at these conferences, and through the ongoing teaching work of the massage crew throughout the world, Esalen is becoming well-known for its role in articulating the field of somatics.

Nineteen ninety-one sees two new aspects of somatics at Esalen. The first is an invitational conference in June on the phenomenology of the body. Twelve philosophers, professors from major universities and writers about the body, will convene to discuss the interaction between practical work with the body and the theoretical understandings of that work that come out of the tradition originated at the turn of the century by Edmund Husserl. In brief, Husserl argued that Western culture had become untethered from its roots in perception and that there was a desperate need to return to our bodily roots to regain a lost sanity. The sorry history of the past 100 years has added new weight to his analysis. There has been an outpouring of work among philosophers during the past ten years which has been based on this theme and which is closely related to the practical methods of somatics.

The second new aspect is a project to expand the ethnic base of somatics, breaking it out of its tightly-woven white cocoon. Our first move is to have an invitational conference with practitioners of body-based methods from Afro-American and Native American traditions. We anticipate establishing relations over the next few years with practitioners from other countries throughout the world.

And in 1992, there will be a series of conferences and workshops organized around the publication of Michael Murphy's monumental book, The Future of the Body. We will use the opportunity of Michael's synthesis to reflect on the work of the past several years, with an eye to reshaping our vision for future work.

Don Hanlon Johnson, Ph.D., is director of the graduate studies program in somatic psychology and education at New College of California, and of the Esalen Institute Somatic Research and Education Project. He is the author of two books and several articles on the body.

ESALEN NOTES

THANKS

Much of Esalen's work is made possible by gifts from a number of generous people. In this catalog we acknowledge some of those people, and in future catalogs will acknowledge others.

The managers, staff members, program leaders, and work students, who since 1962 have given us their time and energy, are Esalen's most important contributors. Our first thanks go to all of them.

Mark Dayton, now an Esalen trustee, has made substantial contributions to Esalen for twenty years. He has helped fund our Soviet-American exchanges, our Revisioning Philosophy program, Esalen scholarships, our fitness center, our building program, and other projects. Since the early 1970s, he has come to Esalen's aid whenever asked.

Laurance Rockefeller gave Esalen a founding grant for its Study of Exceptional Functioning (in 1979) and was the first person to make a substantial donation to our Soviet-American Exchange Program (in 1980-81). He funded our Revisioning Philosophy, Somatic Education, and Somatics and Spirituality projects. Most recently, he pledged $250,000 for reconstruction of the Big House. His gifts to us now total more than $600,000.

Mr. Rockefeller has also supported Buddhist communities in the United States during the past twenty years and has funded several hundred individuals and groups attempting to revitalize American spiritual, moral, philosophical, and artistic activity. No philanthropist in American history has been more courageous and farsighted than he in supporting pioneering projects in religion and philosophy.

Jean and Sidney Lanier have advised Mr. Rockefeller in his philanthropic activities and have been involved in his grants to Esalen. Jean gave the Revisioning Philosophy program its name, and both she and Sidney participated in it. They both have been friends and supporters of Esalen and have counseled its founders and leaders for more than twenty-five years. Several Esalen programs have been strengthened by their generosity and good advice.

Ken Smith, a founder of Craver, Matthews, and Smith, the eminent fundraising firm, has donated his own time and the resources of his organization to Esalen's Soviet-American Exchange Program for nearly ten years. Without his generous support, our Soviet-American exchanges would not have survived.

PAUL HERBERT

The baths sometime in the early 1960s

Bokara Legendre has helped support a number of Esalen programs and has been the principal funder for the Institute's meditation center. With her husband Arthur Patterson, she has entertained Esalen leaders and Soviet visitors in New York, San Francisco, and Big Sur, and has advised Esalen on program directions for the past six years.

John Murphy secured the original lease that made Esalen possible, set up the Institute's legal structure, served as its lawyer without pay for several years, and with his wife Marie Murphy made financial donations that helped get Esalen through its first years. Beneficiaries of the Vinnie A. Murphy trust have also generously supported Esalen, especially John Ashley Murphy, his wife Maggie, and sister Sarah.

INVITATIONAL CONFERENCES

In its continuing commitment to the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Currently scheduled programs and their conveners are listed here.

April 7–12
Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program

Advisors of this program from the United States and the Soviet Union will discuss new developments in Soviet-American relations, review the many extraordinary changes occurring within the Soviet Union, and plan new Soviet-American initiatives.

April 14–19
New Directions in Meditation Research III

Cosponsored by Esalen Institute, the Institute of Noetic Sciences & Marius Robinson

Participants will identify critical issues involved both in the study of meditation and its use in clinical or educational contexts; discuss methodologies for meditation research; explore the interface between meditation traditions and the disciplines of science, psychology, and human development; explore the potential significance of meditation and meditation research for the individual and society.

April 28–May 3

The Phenomenology of the Body
Convened by Don Hanlon Johnson & Elizabeth Behnke

A group of academic philosophers trained in phenomenological reflection will gather with somatic practitioners to think through the presuppositions underlying the contemporary resurgence of interest in the body. Particular emphasis will be placed on how these presuppositions affect the practice of body therapies.

June 9–14
History, Religion, and Evolution of Consciousness
Convened by Robert McDermott

This seminar will focus on the history and variety of religious experience in relation to the evolution of consciousness. While many of the participants will speak from the perspective of either transpersonal psychology or spiritual-scientific (anthroposophical) epistemology, this seminar is intended to encompass a variety of points of view.

June 16–21
The Future of Reality
Convened by Howard Rheingold

Key thinkers, scientists, and engineers from around the world who are creating virtual reality technology will discuss the wider ethical, spiritual, and social dimensions of what they're doing and the implications of this technology.

■ WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 49-50. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops.

In addition, there are other events which enrich life at Esalen. There are frequent forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, choirs, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. Finally, there is a community event schedule that is offered; please check the bulletin board for details.

The Hot Springs at Esalen

In this catalog, we describe Esalen's place in the long tradition of public bathing with its ancient emphasis upon healing and rejuvenation.

We would like those people who are planning their first visit to Esalen to know that swimsuits are optional, and nudity common, in the hot springs, massage area, and swimming pool. We encourage each individual to choose what is most comfortable for them, either wearing a swimsuit or not, and emphasize that the environment at Esalen is one of personal sanctuary and respect for the human body.

Walking Improvement for People Over 50

Ed Maupin & Anne Nechama Simkin

In the ordinary aging process, the legs and pelvis tighten until agility and grounding—a secure relationship with the ground—are lost. Mental and emotional turmoil may substitute for physical orientation. This workshop will utilize simple exercises drawn from martial arts to recharge the legs. Gestalt processes will be used to explore personal issues and patterns which interfere with grounded awareness.

Return of the Light: Winter Teachings

Paul Rebillot & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

With the winter solstice we touch the darkest time of the year, the stillest time, the most inward time, in which we celebrate the turning toward the light. This is the time when all creatures prepare for the next cycle of growth.

Movement toward light is movement toward individuation, and as we move through winter toward spring it is important to understand the present cycle of our life, our current season. There are many ways to this self-knowledge. Different peoples have developed different paths, using a variety of metaphors. This workshop shall use the way of the Medicine Wheel, which teaches us to celebrate our cycles and our seasons.

Participants will look at the current cycles of their lives—what has not been completed, what needs healing, what needs saying goodbye to—and what steps they need to take as they cross thresholds into a new season. Through ritual, guided fantasy, music, and play, each can seek his or her own turning point upon the Medicine Wheel, and there sow the seeds for spring.

Craniosacral System: Basic Workshop

Jim Asher & Jane Harrington

This workshop will offer an opportunity to learn and practice gentle yet powerful skills to bring the craniosacral system into balance. The class will combine lectures and slides on functional anatomy of the membrane system and cerebrospinal fluid movement. There will be hands-on demonstrations of a variety of methods for tapping into bone and membrane motion, rhythm, amplitude quality, restriction, and interference. Demonstrations will be followed by supervised practice. Time will also be spent evoking and developing palpatory sensitivity and fine-tuning the quality of touch.

This workshop is for people with a strong interest in developing hands-on skills and for those already practicing body work or counseling. Much of the focus will be on the head, jaw, neck, pelvis, and diaphragm systems. Cranial work can be effective in shifting emotional holding patterns and draining accumulated stresses in the nervous system.

Focusing, Dream Work, and the Helping Relationship

Mary McGuire

Focusing originally came out of research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, and they found that success cannot be predicted by the personality of the client nor the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be taught to those who do not have it readily. The focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

This workshop is for psychologists, counselors, social workers, nurses, doctors, and others in the helping professions. Focusing is beneficial to these individuals because it augments their understanding of the client's inner process and aids in their own self-awareness as helper. It allows the practitioner to recognize the vulnerable or painful places in the other where new life wants to come through and to facilitate growth in a gentle way that honors the other's experience.

Participants will practice the focusing process called Experiential Listening, a method of listening for the bodily felt sense in what the other is saying and responding from one's own felt sense of the situation. They will also be introduced to Gendlin's integrative approach to dream work. Theories of Freud, Jung, Perls, and others will serve as a source of questions; the answers will come from participants' own dream interpretations and will be explored via this method of awareness of felt experience.

Research has shown focusing to have made a significant difference in the process of therapy clients, the lives of cancer patients, in preventing staff burn-out, and building team spirit among health care professionals. This workshop could be a new beginning. What better way to start the New Year.

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting—to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants are given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

A Weekend with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $325

The goal of this workshop is for participants to develop their understanding of touch and hands-on skills in releasing the body from dysfunction and facilitating fluidity and balance. It is designed for those who have experience in massage and moderate knowledge of anatomy and physiology. The instructors will work from a deep tissue/structural integration orientation, with the primary focus on the pelvis (sacrum, ilium, femor relationship) to improve balance of the spine and thorax.

Through demonstration, practice, and discussion, participants will study the plastic nature and changeability of the body's connective tissue, and explore the delicate edge of sculpting with the human form.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (insight) meditation practice is a systematic examination of the mind/body process through calm and focused awareness. Learning to observe experience from a place of stillness enables one to relate to life without fear or clinging. One begins to accept pleasure and pain, fear and joy, with increasing equanimity and balance. Life is seen as a constantly changing process. Insight is the deepening experience of the process itself, free of interpretation, leading to wisdom and compassion.

This seminar is designed for those who have had no previous meditation experience as well as for those who wish to deepen their practice. Meditation instruction, the philosophy behind the practice, group discussions, and actual practice periods will be offered. Special emphasis will be placed on how to integrate Vipassana practice in daily life after the workshop is over.

The Royal Road to the Unconscious

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

Dreams, what are they? Freud called them the royal road to the unconscious. Modern researchers are not so sure. Are they windows on transcendence? Hieroglyphics to be deciphered? Voyages to another, archetypal world? Personal archives? Psychological garbage? None of the above? All of the above?

On the theory that it is possible to learn much about oneself from the specific content, we will spend the weekend exploring the personal night poetry we remember as dreams. Using methods developed by Freud, Stekel, and Perls, and perhaps adding some of our own, we will learn to wrest meaning from the dreamworld. We will pay attention to personal symbolism, day residue, condensation of meaning, reversals and displacements, and the strange, primal, causal relations involved.

Because dreams bypass the conscious censor, the treasures of the night, whatever they are, can sometimes ransom the problems of waking hours. They are often worth remembering. Each participant can expect to leave equipped with tools to continue this fascinating study at home. Bring comfortable clothes, a notebook, and, if possible, some dreams. $325

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Beliefs, fears, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate—in the moment—to ourselves, to our work, and to those we love.

The workshop includes periods of body work for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dream work, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge. Maximum enrollment: 30.

An Appreciation of Visior and Grace

Si Chi Ko & Chieh-Hsi Fan with Chungliang Al Huang

Chungliang Al Huang brings to Esalen two artists from his Lan Ting Institute in China. Si Chi Ko is a visionary photographer; his wife, Chieh-Hsi Fan, is a classical and modern dancer who is best known for her performance of the famous Dun Huang Buddhist Cave Rituals. Through visual imagery of the cave paintings and the dance mudras of the rituals, Ko and Fan will introduce seminarians to the beauty and spiritual dimensions of these paintings, which are found at the crossroads of Indian and Chinese Buddhist art. $630

Intermediate Craniosacral Workshop

Hugh Milne

This workshop provides a deeper and broader understanding of craniosacral work for those who have completed an introductory class. It offers several models for understanding how subtle alterations of osseous rhythm or dural tension can produce remarkable effects on the function of the body/mind/spirit.

Participants will expand their range of technical cranial expertise and refine the arts of both deductive and intuitive diagnosis. The sacro-iliac, spheno-basilar, and tempero-mandibular joints will be examined in detail. The class will also include a review of the reciprocal tension membrane system and an analysis of known brain and chord function as related to craniosacral work.

The relationship between meditation, perception, and the still point will be explored as a foundation, with emphasis placed on the daily practice of demonstrated techniques so that a high standard of individual consciousness in this work can be attained. Feedback among participants on personal issues as evoked by work in the class will be an important part of the seminar.

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for: people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $630

Elizabeth Stratton

Psychic healing bridges the physical and the spiritual. Touching as a healing act has been practiced through recorded history by practitioners of the sacred as well as the secular: healers, shamans, priests, doctors, and mothers. In the past ten years, physics and modern medicine have come to an acknowledgment of the radically relational nature of our universe. Nothing and no one functions in a void.

Human emotions affect the functioning of the body, and illness is often an outgrowth of this mind-body link. Semi-dissociative states that are induced by prayer, meditation, and trance have been found to provide a fertile ground for healing to take place. It has been discovered that "multiple personalities" exhibit different states of health in each personality. The placebo effect has become one of the most respected and well-studied issues in healing today.

A psychic healer is one who can help connect the physical, emotional, mental, and spiritual levels of another person's being with healing intention through the use of touch. This workshop will explore, both didactically and experientially, the sacred and secular uses of touch, modern theories of disease formation and healing mechanisms, the use of psychic sight in healing, forgiveness as transformational cleansing, and the channeling of healing energy through the laying on of hands.

Non-Adversarial Child Care: The Continuum Concept in Practice

Jean Liedloff

For parents, parents-to-be, and baby and child care professionals, this seminar will examine the true meaning of sociality as an innate characteristic of homo sapiens. Drawing upon her years of living with Stone Age Indians in South America's jungles, the leader propounds an approach neither punitive nor permissive that takes into account the generally unrecognized expectations and abilities inherent in our young.

Why do babies and children so often seek attention they don't need? Why do we see tots in underdeveloped countries and cultures following their parents and helping them with chores so early, while ours are frequently chased and tended, opposed, tolerated, and socialized for nerve-wracking, guilt-laden, unappreciated decades of drudgery and sacrifice ending in one degree or another of alienation?

As professor Robert Aldrich of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development said, "Basic things about human nature we forget or ignore at our peril."

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you—singing. $325

Somatosynthesis: Touching Mind and Emotion Through the Body

Clyde Ford

Somatosynthesis is a method that uses human touch to address emotional and psychological issues underlying pain, disease, and physical symptoms. Through lecture, discussion, and demonstration, Clyde Ford will introduce the basics of this methodology, including body-mapping, which links areas of the body to emotional issues, and a language of touch that allows a practitioner to guide a client toward physical and psychological well-being. There will be plenty of time for supervised hands-on practice. It is designed for health care professionals and laypersons who wish to integrate somatic skills into their work with others or their own lives.

Psychoneuroimmunology and its Implications

George Solomon & Margaret Kemeny

The rapidly developing field of psychoneuroimmunology (PNI) is concerned with the nature of complex bidirectional interactions between the central nervous system (CNS) and the immune system and their clinical and bioregulatory implications. The CNS mediates stress effects, coping, emotions, and other psychological processes that, via the immune system, affect the onset and course of many diseases.

This didactic but interactive course will describe the immune system, how it works and is regulated. The leaders will discuss human and animal research on the effects of stress and other experiential factors on immunity and on immunologically-resisted and mediated diseases, including bacterial and viral infections, cancer, autoimmune diseases, allergies, and AIDS. The as-yet poorly researched area of the impact of interventions, including psychotherapy, on immunity and disease will be discussed. Implications of PNI for understanding traditional and alternative healing systems and placebo effects will be explored. There will be ample opportunity for questions.

Forgiveness and Letting Go of Judgment

Elizabeth Stratton

Elizabeth Stratton writes: "The training of the Western mind, both spiritually and intellectually, is oriented toward judgment. We are taught to induce, deduce, analyze, dissect, defend, debate. We are taught to feel guilty, to get sick, to engage in self-punishment and the punishment of others. We are encouraged to rebuke ourselves into perfection.

"We do not know the healing quality of true remorse or how to let go of that which we should never have held onto in the first place, which is the real meaning of forgiveness. In studies of people who have died and come back to talk about it, the most unifying element of their experiences was the meeting with a Being of white light who stood by with unconditional love, no judgment, and humor as they watched their lives roll before them like movies. The only judge was the person watching his/her own life.

"This workshop will be experiential. You are invited to observe the judgmental prison of your own mind, to feel the cleansing power of remorse, and to allow your heart to open to the freedom and healing that comes from forgiving yourself and others." $325

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

We tend to assume that mastery is available only to those born with exceptional abilities. But mastery is not a goal or destination. It is a journey that every one of us can take, provided we have the right map.

This workshop offers clear directions for the journey of mastery in whatever field you may choose. It will include discussion, demonstration, and movement exercises from Leonard Energy Training (LET) which emphasize mastery in daily life. For those familiar with LET, this workshop will present new material. Some of the topics to be addressed:

- Five keys to mastery
- How to avoid being a Dabbler, Obsessive, or Hacker
- Creating a vision
- The secrets of practice
- Staying balanced and centered on the path of mastery
- Avoiding pitfalls
- Playing the edge
- Loving the plateau
- Dealing with conflict
- Negotiating with change
- Staying on the path
- Getting energy from mastery

This workshop involves physical movement, but is not strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Couples' Workshop

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead, they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

The Body is Spirit

Robert Hall

There is no difference between the bioenergetic streaming of daily body life and the divine spirit current or life force. We experience both as an ongoing felt body sense. The human ego operates under the false assumption that it is somehow separate from that sense. So we spend our lives in constant negotiation and seeking: the so-called human condition. From this position, alienation is inevitable.

This workshop is designed to explore the possibility that we are that felt body sense, that spirit current, and we are constantly, by nature, in relationship to everyone and everything that exists. Hopefully, we'll laugh a lot, too. There will be time for gestalt, individual body work, meditation, and getting to know each other well in a short time. $630

Susan Osborn & David Densmore

The leaders write: "Within each of us is a powerful, life-giving song, which, when sung, can make sense out of chaos, open and cleanse the deepest wounds, and transform it all into joyous communion. When we sing together from this place, we can recognize the oneness of all people and celebrate our incredible variety and differences. It is a bodily experience.

"Think of the first time you sang and what song it was. Think of the feelings you had. Remember the feedback you got. We believe that these experiences are central to our development as human beings, that singing is not 'extra-curricular,' but a reflection of how we feel about our own power and our ability to create something beautiful and true out of ourselves. This will be a week to explore these possibilities and sing." $630

Brother David Steindl-Rast

Western spirituality is being rediscovered. After a long journey, some of us have found treasure buried under the very threshold over which we stepped when we left home. Yet, without the quest we could have never come to own what was ours from the beginning. Without questioning, we cannot make inherited wisdom our own.

This was not always understood by teachers of religion. Some of us were force-fed all the answers, without ever being allowed to question. This weekend will be a time to catch up on what we missed.

Brother David has helped diverse groups experience inner liberation and new insights through honest questioning. Every question, even an angry one, is a gift. Answers like to hide in questions. Together we shall try to teethe them out of hiding. We shall survey key issues in Western spiritual tradition and offer participants opportunities to raise their own. $325

Michael Harner

Shamanism is an ancient human strategy for personal learning and for acting on that learning, using normally neglected or hidden potentialities of the heart, mind, and spirit. Shamanic methods can contribute to virtually any aspect of living, as they have for tens of thousands of years, and are especially useful for problem-solving, well-being, and healing.

In this experiential workshop, participants will be introduced to basic methods of the shaman (a specific type of medicine man or woman) and initiated into the classic shamanic journey. Otherwise known through myth and accounts of great spiritual experiences, this visionary method can be used to enter nonordinary reality to obtain knowledge, to answer personal questions, to maximize power in achieving personal goals, and to contribute to the health of oneself, others, and the Planet. Participants will be aided by traditional drumming and movement and will be provided with methods for journeying to discover and study with their individual spiritual teachers in nonordinary reality, a classic step in shamanic practice.

The shamanic journey can be utilized to help restore spiritual power and health and has practical applications to contemporary daily life. Practices this weekend will include comparison of discoveries and work on personal problem-solving and wellness.

Please bring a bandanna to cover your eyes, a pen and notebook to record your journeys and, if you have them, a drum and/or a rattle. Wear comfortable clothing.

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

This workshop is open to anyone interested in learning to recognize, trust, and use their psi abilities. The leaders will use exercises designed to aid participants in recognizing their perceptive styles and trusting the intuitive input they normally receive. Anne Armstrong will use her tracking abilities, acquired from over twenty-five years in this field, to assist participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

One of the basic objectives of the workshop is to demystify the intuitive/psychic process and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives—personal, professional, and spiritual. The workshop will include personal psychic scans and practice on selected cases. $630

Jean Shinoda Bolen & Jananne Lovett-Keen

By tapping intuitive sources of wisdom, creativity, and spirituality, life takes on deeper meaning. We are nourished by what we feel and know and dream and express. In the outer world, change and transitions are inevitable. What we often miss is time to reflect upon the meaning of events and to take stock of who we are becoming.

This retreat invites women to take time for inner reflection in the nurturing company of other women in an environment of natural beauty. Jean Shinoda Bolen, author of Goddesses in Everywoman, will lead participants inward through myths and meditation to their personal symbols and to the truth in their dreams. Jananne Lovett-Keen, a musician and body worker, will teach participants to care for their bodies and to be attuned to their vulnerabilities, pain, trust, and strengths. Through music, participants will touch sources of inspiration and creativity and be reminded of the profound connection between women's nature and Mother Nature, between music and body knowledge.

These five days will provide women with an opportunity to experience their inner trusting child, the grown woman choicemaker, and the wisewoman aware of the sacred dimension of ordinary life. $630

The Future of Psychotherapy

Rollo May

Returning from teaching in Greece and studying with Alfred Adler in 1933, Rollo May received degrees in theology and psychoanalysis. He introduced the existential approach into therapy in this country and is a principle creator of humanistic psychology. His published works include the well-known The Courage to Create, Love and Will, and My Quest for Beauty. His forthcoming book, The Cry for Myth, explores the significance of myths in psychotherapy and in finding a direction in our distraught world. In this seminar, Dr. May will speculate about therapy for the future. He writes:

"The revolution which Freud and Nietzsche reflect has pierced to the center of our moral and psychological world. In this continuing revolution, discoveries of the psyche have occurred. We will discuss how these discoveries concern the emotional and moral problems of our day, the many forms psychotherapy has taken—which has become the new way of health for the twentieth and twenty-first centuries—and how to seek ways of living with some joy in a radically new world."

Sensory Enhancement

Dean Marson & Kathleen O'Shaughnessy

This workshop directs itself toward those individuals just beginning to explore touch as communication. Demonstrations will be augmented by supervised practice, and discussion will offer insights into various body work approaches and how they may be used in everyday life to ease stress and enhance the senses. A Look Within

Jessica Moore Britt & Scott Layton

This will be a week for participants to attend to and explore themselves away from their usual busy lives. As they settle into the grandeur of Big Sur and the quiet within, they can begin to penetrate their conditioned views of themselves and the world.

The point of inquiry will be the relationship of the mind, body, and emotions and the essential nature of the self. Participants will focus on understanding who and what they are, especially as beings of compassion, strength, will, power, joy, and presence. They will explore how their past conditioning and present beliefs block their awareness of these qualities in themselves. The tools for self-discovery will be an interplay of Eastern and Western practices, including Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, touch, movement, and Reichian/gestalt work. This time, dedicated to being present and looking within, holds the possibility for participants to open their perceptions so they might obtain a deeper appreciation for who they are.

Please note: To enroll in this workshop, prior experience in emotional work is required.

Word Magic: A Personal Adventure through Writing

Nancy Bacal

We all have stories and the ability to tell them. But when asked to translate them onto the page, many of us are inhibited by self-judgment. Through a series of exercises designed to bypass blockages, participants will be encouraged to move beyond the controlling arm of the critic and tap their reservoirs of personal experience. These exercises will provide an opportunity to turn the burdens in our lives into stories, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. They are specific enough to excite the imagination yet loose enough for the writer inside to experiment with form and images and remain open to surprise.

This writing workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the would-be writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, walks, meditation as it relates to creative process, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The intention will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, functioning relationship with one's work.

Expressive Arts: Turning Wounding into Creative Action

Elisa Lodge

During this time of cultural change and ecological crisis, it is essential to accept and embrace our personal history and have the creative resources to more fully express the truth of our being. The language of the expressive arts meets the needs of our time by fostering freedom of choice and aliveness in how we are in the world.

Rather than being judged, evaluated, or fixed, participants are invited to illuminate and enact patterns which have been restricting their awareness, self-expression, and self-worth. Patterns to be explored are breath, sound, body image, body movement, thought, feeling, attitude, character masks, and relationships. In amplifying and contrasting these patterns in a relaxed and playful manner, new choices may present themselves from within. A broadened sense of identity and more fluid repertoire of possibilities emerge from this process. It is especially relevant for those in the helping professions who wish to take more risks and integrate the arts and body-oriented approaches into their work. $630

Angeles Arrien & James Wanless

The tarot is an ancient book of wisdom that visually captures possible internal and external experiences that individuals can have. Participants in this weekend workshop will have the opportunity of seeing multiple ways symbols can be practically used as guides and clarifiers for life issues.

This workshop is structured to meet the needs of participants at any level of experience or inexperience they may have with tarot. $325

Personal Energy Management

Myron McClellan

We are beings made up of four energies: physical, emotional, mental, and spiritual. When we are healthy, productive, creative, and in touch with our feelings, we are managing our energies effectively. When we are ill, sullen, morose, or lazy, we are not managing energy well. Energy management requires awareness and action. It requires knowledge of the nature of each of the four aspects of being and how each is used for maximum effectiveness and enjoyment. This workshop teaches skills for getting the most out of the body, feelings, mind, and spirit, both in times of ease and in times of stress.

Topics to be covered include: using the body to transmute intense emotions into energy for growth; expressing and releasing feelings; reeducating the brain; using meditation as a grounding experience; using music and movement for physical health and aliveness; establishing harmony among the four bodies in order to create what the heart desires.

The methods used in this course are fun and invigorating and are intended to give the participant tools that can be used on a daily basis to promote aliveness, no matter what physical or emotional circumstance one finds oneself in. Music, movement, toning, games, processes, and discussion are all part of the experience. $325

Les Fehmi & Susan Shor

Brain wave activity is directly correlated with the way one pays attention. Synchrony is associated with "in-to-it," broad-scoped attention and effortless performance; desynchronized brain wave activity is associated with remote, narrow-focused attention and effortful performance. Brain wave synchrony and attention training consequently guide one toward an awareness that is simultaneously narrowed-in on detail, panoramic in scope, and bathed in an effortless sense of the moment.

The Open Focus methods presented in this experiential workshop support the rapid reduction of both conscious and unconscious physical and emotional stress and pain. Rather than ignoring unpleasant experience, participants will practice melting it directly, using attention skills they already possess. This method of dissolving stress and pain generates a sense of well-being and creative energy. Interested workshop participants will receive biofeedback training using an instrument that monitors brain activity from the major lobes of the brain and provides a feedback signal when whole-brain, in-phase synchrony is produced. An Open Focus tape will be provided for home practice.

Cosmic Conspiracy: A Game of Enlightenment

Robert Anton Wilson

Robert Anton Wilson writes: "Based on my psychological works and science-fantasy novels, this Game may shake the foundations of your world. When you enter the portals of Chapel Perilous, you will be given a deceptive Cover Story and a Real Identity—which is also fiction and exists only for the duration of the Game (if you're lucky). Thus, every participant is a liar—and you can't be too sure about the leader either. In regular sessions, I will lecture on such concepts as the presentation of the self in everyday life, the social creation of reality, the Game element in behavior, but between sessions you will have to deal with these abstract concepts in very concrete ways as spies, criminals, government agents, and extraterrestrials, as Cosmic Forces of Good and Evil attempt to lure you into their plots and counterplots.

"Can you find the Maltese Falcon before any other player? Is some clever villain among you using the Game as a front to deal drugs or to brainwash other players? Will you spot the CIA assassin before you're 'killed' and removed from the Game? If you do get 'killed,' what will happen in Rebirthing, before you can enter the Game with a new Ego? As you deal with these increasingly urgent questions, you will also have to decide if this 'Game' is teaching you social psychology, mysticism, agnosticism, paranoia, or if it's 'just a Game' after all.

"Warning: the Attorney General has determined that this Game may be hazardous to your dogma." $325

Recovery for Adult Children and Co-Dependents

Julie Bowden

This week-long journey will be a healing of the "child within" in an atmosphere of safety and respect. Experiencing and integrating the past allows us to live in the present, no longer tyrannized by previous pain and outmoded behaviors. We are freed to be more fully in relationship with ourselves and others. The training in an alcoholic or dysfunctional family is to deny what you see, feel, and think. This is the primary coursework for co-dependency. In this week we will commit to the inner waiting child and address our own addictions in order to clear the field for deep, lasting changes. People in all stages of recovery are welcome, as are treatment providers. $630

Cross-Cultural Shamanic Practices

Angeles Arrien

Participants of this workshop will be introduced to shamanic tools from diverse cultures in order to access and empower their inner teacher, healer, visionary, and warrior. The universal healing salves of singing, storytelling, dancing, and silence will be engaged to rekindle the spirit and retrieve any soul loss.

Group members will work individually and collectively to: honor ancestor spirits by releasing limiting family patterns; enhance personal and professional power by speaking with "spirit tongue" (truth-telling); and experience shamanic practices that reveal internal mythology, help heal wounds, and adjust imbalances.

This week qualifies as a Foundational Training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien. $630

The Art of Saying Goodbye

Paul Rebillot & Melissa Kay

The loss of a loved one, whether through death or separation, is a huge rent in the fabric of one's life. It is difficult to get on with other relationships until that rent is attended to. The pain of the loss needs to be released, and the difficulty of day-to-day existence after the loss needs to be acknowledged.

To learn something from suffering makes it worthwhile; to create something makes it bearable. Using open seat and emotional release, workshop participants will deal with their losses—not just in anguish, not only in pain—but artistically, musically, creatively. They will seek to give birth to new life, to create an artwork, a ritual both of letting go and of gathering within themselves the strength and the love which they have felt from those who have gone.

This workshop gives participants the opportunity to say goodbye, to experience the tears, the grief, and the potential for emotional renewal, and most importantly, to reconnect with the source of their own lives. $630

Back Into Action: Neuromuscular Reeducation

Lawrence Goldfarb

Back Into Action is a proven approach to changing habitual postures and movement patterns. Originally designed for chronic back pain patients who failed to benefit from standard exercises and treatment modalities, it teaches a series of structured movement sequences which can be used as a complete program or modified to meet each person's specific needs.

This workshop combines lecture, lab, demonstration, case study presentation, and experiential Feldenkrais® movement so participants can develop the theoretical understanding, observational skills, and treatment repertoire needed to apply neuromuscular facilitation and movement reeducation in orthopedic rehabilitation. They will be shown how to:

- Assess the relationship of movement dysfunction to diagnosed pathology, mechanical stress, and hypo/hyper mobility
- Refine visual and palpatory evaluation skills
- Utilize programmed movement sequences, verbal cues, guided imagery, and manual contact to increase flexibility, coordination, and strength
- Teach neuromuscular control and kinesthetic acuity necessary for efficient, pain-free motion
- Integrate fundamental changes in habitual postures and movement into daily life

Each participant will receive an illustrated copy of the Back Into Action Handbook. $630

Gestalt Practice

Joyce Lyke

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear—
And when used—is inexhaustible.
—Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form—nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental—evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

STEVE BECK

The emphasis is *intra*personal rather than *inter*personal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

True Stories: Autobiographic Storytelling

Spalding Gray

Everyone has at least one good story in them. The aim of this workshop is to create a safe, supportive space to give birth to that story. Each member of the workshop will be asked to function as storyteller, audience, and critic. When you're not telling, you'll be asked to listen and respond.

This workshop is limited to twelve people who will be chosen on the basis of personal letters sent to Spalding Gray, c/o Esalen. The letters should explain why you feel it is important for you to take the workshop. Please send no fees until you are notified by mail of your acceptance. $325

Jerry & Kathleen Fletcher

Most people have had the experience of having something they were doing "take off" and go much better than expected. Yet many assume such times are lucky accidents, that it is not possible to create or sustain such performance deliberately or without stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout.

The results from ten years of research by the workshop presenters demonstrate that these times of exceptional performance are not capricious. Each individual has a pattern of actions that produces his or her best results. Once people learn their personal high performance patterns, they can carry out activities in a way that fits them and produce much better results for the same effort over sustained periods of time.

This seminar takes participants through a process in which they identify their individual high performance patterns and learn to apply them to their life and work. Developed through years of work with successful managers, executives, professionals, and work teams, it offers an approach to sustainable high performance, a welcome alternative to the stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout that accompanies constantly forcing oneself to peak periods of high output. $325

Marion Woodman

These five days are for women, ages 49, 50, or 51, to celebrate the meaning of mature womanhood. Through lectures, discussions, and body awareness they will contemplate the questions most relevant to women at this age: What is our present relationship to our partner? What are the most important values in our ongoing relationship? What is our relationship to our inner partner? What is our relationship to ourselves if we do not have a partner? How do we relate to our children and to our parents? How do we relate to our menopausal bodies?

These and other questions arising in this transitional period will be the theme of this workshop. Participants are asked to bring musical instruments, art supplies, or any object that would be of importance to them in a ritual.

Please note: This workshop will begin Monday morning at 9 AM instead of Sunday evening. However, participants are welcome to arrive any time after 4 PM on Sunday. $630

On Being a Man

David Schiffman

Many men today have sought to honor and embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result of this emphasis, the right to celebrate and honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man's sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own natures which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood, and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and goodwill, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the "wild man" within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

A variety of experiential processes will illuminate these and similar issues. Traditional initiation rituals and purification ceremonies using drumming, chanting, and a sweat lodge will be incorporated in this journey as well. $630

Helen Palmer

The enneagram is an ancient psychological typology that describes nine personality types and their interrelationships. Each type is defined by a chief mental and emotional preoccupation to which attention habitually returns. The types correlate well with the current categories of psychological practice, but can open us to the fact that the repeating preoccupations of heart and mind that we in the West tend to dismiss as merely neurotic can also be used as access points into states of awareness like empathy, omniscience, and love.

Beginning with a review of the nine types, this workshop will focus on advanced material that can best be understood through oral teaching methods. These include learning to recognize type by listening to the differences in people's stories, by learning to ask key questions, and by paying attention to one's own internal impressions when in the presence of the different types.

This program is for those who are already familiar with the nine personality types and who wish to broaden their understanding of the system. It is intended for anyone who is interested in: recognizing ways in which the nine types relate to each other in intimate partnership and in work-related settings; determining strategies for working with the types; developing competency with the patterns of attention that support each type; gaining an understanding of the higher human abilities that can develop from working with the issues of type. This intensive can be applied as one of the requirements for the Enneagram Professional Training Program.

Please note: Enrollment in this workshop presupposes previous work with the enneagram. The emphasis will be on inner material, but not personal process work. It will be a large group, with a maximum enrollment of 40.

Rap Dancing into the Third Millennium

Terence McKenna

The approaching new millennium, its perils and promise, will be the theme of this weekend. We will analyze and review the past thousand years with an eye to trends and opportunities that the future may bring. Western civilization is caught in a phase transition to the first planet-wide, species-wide civilization. Does the emergence of a shared set of universal values—democracy, free markets, and the dignity of the individual—have to mean the end of diversity and pluralism? What does human self-imaging through technology portend for each of us? Is the human race down for the count, or on the brink of its greatest adventure?

Psychedelics, virtual reality, and the transformative power of magic and language will be topics for discussion. Join us for a lively exploration of the unfolding drama of the human family's entry into hyperspace. "He who is not busy being born, is busy dying." $325

Daniel Brown

This workshop is designed for psychotherapists, practitioners of meditation, and those interested in the integration of the worlds of psychotherapy and spirituality. The leader will present an integrated model for the path of transformation, for the development of emotional experience, the sense of self and others, and reality sense.

This model of normal, pathological, and optimal human development is drawn from the fields of child development, clinical psychology, and the great Eastern traditions of meditation.

This workshop will show how the path of meditation unfolds and will present a vision of optimal human development. It will also help participants learn to assess and treat different types of problems (clinical symptoms and meditation crises) which occur at various points along the overall developmental continuum. The workshop will address how psychotherapy can be used as a way to attain some of the necessary prerequisites for spiritual development and can assist with the problems that occur for the meditation practitioner and meditation teacher. It will also show how spiritual awareness can inform one's view of psychotherapy. Various experiential exercises and meditation practices will be used along with clinical case material. The workshop will be both experiential and didactic.

Much of the material will be drawn from the leader's experience as a clinician and teacher, and from his eighteen years of practicing meditation, translating meditation texts from Sanskrit and Tibetan sources, and conducting scientific studies on deep meditation states and enlightenment on meditation masters in this country and in South Asia.

Psychology of Spiritual Essence: Introduction to Ridhwan Work

Karen Johnson & Linda Krier

Ridhwan, translated from Arabic, means contentment. The Ridhwan Work School is dedicated to the development of the human essence. It uses primarily the Diamond Approach, a modern, psychological method used as a spiritual practice, to guide students to a precise understanding of their personal experience. By understanding one's discontent, longing, emptiness, and life situations, it becomes possible to realize the innate aspects of love, awareness, will, and joy. Such precision offers psychological clarity and ultimately leads to spiritual presence.

This workshop will use conceptual presentations, interpersonal exercises, meditation, and personal emotional work to activate the essential aspects of presence and resolve the psychological barriers against them. It is for individuals who have done a lot of emotional and growth work, and speaks to the longing of the heart for what will truly fulfill it. In such a short time, participants may only get a taste of this essence, but they can go a long way in terms of awakening their sleeping potential. Private sessions will be available for an additional fee.

A Workshop for Couples

Daniel Brown & Marushka Glissen

This workshop is for couples who want to improve their communication skills and increase their understanding of each other. Ways for resolving conflict and practical methods for becoming self-assertive and self-transcending in a partnership will be taught. Some of the work will address how the family of origin and past conditioning contribute to the bonding as well as the conflicts. Time will also be spent on how to find satisfaction, mutual support, relaxation, solitude, and play in day-to-day living as partners. Helping couples discover the wider purpose of being together through a sharing of values, love, and perhaps a spiritual vision will be emphasized. $630

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will be to enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder of meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and movement are one." $630

In many indigenous cultures across the world, the shaman has functioned as healer and therapist in the physical, psychological, intellectual, transpersonal, social, and environmental domains. During this weekend, anthropologist Joan Halifax will look into the traditions of shamanism for those practices and methods possibly relevant for use in contemporary psychotherapy. Included will be the function of art in personal, social, and environmental healing; the role of ritual in individual and community process; the use of entheogens in psychophysical transformation; and the relationship of the natural environment (as reality and metaphor) to the healing process. This program includes experiential practices, teachings, and discussion.

Noble Visions: Living a Committed Life

Bill Puka

This seminar is designed to affirm and enhance participants' commitments to high ideals, toward living inspired lives as inspiring people. It will look at ethical visions and ethical visionaries. Participants will reflect on the components of respecting and appreciating each other, of loving and caring. They will consider ways of practicing these arts more gracefully, drawing from humanistic counseling methods, yogic meditation, and the psychological research of Kohlberg and Gilligan on moral development and gender outlook. They will also consider the creative use of moral perception and imagination evolved by various spiritual traditions. In so doing, they will compose ethics-for-living that are self-expanding, spiritual, and aesthetic rather than judgmental and duty-bound, ethics which show a sense of wisdom and perspective and express the goodwill they prescribe. But they will also seek ethics which can solve concrete problems and use them to take up moral dilemmas members of the group may be facing. A main theme will concern how to align psychological growth and career progress with personal integrity, interpersonal responsiveness, and active social concern. $350

A Weekend with Jeffrey Masson

Jeffrey Moussaieff Masson is the author of Assault on Truth: Freud's Suppression of the Seduction Theory (about the reality of childhood sexual abuse), A Dark Science: Women, Sexuality, and Psychiatry in the 19th Century (about the contempt shown for women by psychiatry throughout its history), Against Therapy: Emotional Tyranny and the Myth of Psychological Healing (a criticism of the power imbalance inherent in psychiatry and psychotherapy), and, just recently published, his autobiography, Final Analysis: The Making and Unmaking of a Psychoanalyst (about the consequences of telling the truth and whistle-blowing within the profession of psychoanalysis).

This weekend he will lead the first in a series of seminars on these and other topics, including: Do animals feel deep emotions? Are all gurus exploitative? The problem with Anna Freud. Ethics in journalism. Psychiatry and the holocaust: the collusion of German psychology in the final solution.

Note: You don't have to agree with Masson's radical stance, but be prepared for intellectual fireworks. Masson writes: "This is not a workshop, not a growth experience; there will be no hand-holding, no meditating, and no massaging."

Transitions

Elliot "Waker" Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg

Disorganization is a natural part of transition and facilitates reorganization. People are almost constantly in a state of transition—whether it be getting married, beginning a new career, becoming a parent, letting go of a relationship, or moving on to the next stage in the life cycle. These changes can be exciting and, at the same time, can evoke a loss of internal balance. The result can be loss of self-esteem, confusion about one's identity, and doubts about one's perceptions. New feelings and ideas are fragile during these periods of transition and require special nurturance.

The goal of this workshop is to gain perspective on the process of making transitions. Through guided fantasies, self-exploration, and didactic presentations, participants may develop ways of enhancing their understanding of themselves and increasing their overall effectiveness.

Deborah Madison, Diane Joy Goodman & Esalen Garden and Farm Staff

To have a passion for exceptional food is to be concerned with the honesty and care with which it is grown and prepared. This workshop is for cooks, gardeners, food professionals, agriculturists, or anyone who loves food and gardens. The leaders include the founding chef of Greens restaurant in San Francisco and a food and agriculture consultant. They will focus on the inherent relationship between food and its source, the premise being that the character of the food you produce is only as good as the quality of the ingredients. Practices that support environmentally and economically sustainable agriculture, such as growing your own food, buying locally and seasonally, and seeking out high quality organic produce, will be illuminated.

In this hands-on workshop, participants will prepare food using new ideas and techniques. They will spend time in the Esalen garden and farm, in the kitchen at the Big House, and at the table. They will create soups, salads, breads, pastas, main courses, breakfasts, sauces, condiments, desserts, and other sweets from Esalen's spring harvest and other local purveyors.

There will also be time for a group process in which participants can explore their individual relationships to food. At week's end they will leave with information, skills, recipes, and, hopefully, insights and a new vision that celebrate the natural integrity of food. $675

Weekend of March 15–17

Accessing Creative Process

Dianne Laurence

This workshop is for artists and non-artists who are having trouble starting or developing creative work. Mistaken notions about oneself, fears of imperfection, a need for control, and a tendency to emphasize results are some of the obstacles to imagination. Creative vitality and the ability to express oneself effectively arise from being attentive to one's fascinations, accessing impulses beyond the confines of the intellect, developing a healthy, critical eye and ear, and becoming a risk-taker.

Creativity is not something that just a few gifted people possess, but a natural part of everyone's make-up. Skill, intellect, emotions, and imagination are the cornerstones of creativity. In this workshop, participants will use exercises in writing, acting, and painting, and discussions on the nature of creativity to help expand their emotional vocabulary, develop imagination, encourage spontaneity, and instill confidence in the expression of their inner life. Everyone will be supported, encouraged, and given the opportunity to confront their walls and turn them into stepping stones. $350

Abuse Survivors and Their Mates: A Couples' Workshop

Jessica Moore Britt & Scott Layton

The leaders write: "While leading survivors groups together, we have come to appreciate that survivors of childhood abuse and their mates oftentimes face issues in their relationships that need special attention.

"This is an invitation to survivors who have previously worked on their childhood abuse issues who, with their mates, would like help in exploring questions of trust, sexuality, and intimacy. It is an opportunity to share difficulties, fears, and triumphs with other couples in a similar situation in order to build a bridge of understanding. We will work with the qualities of allowing, compassion, curiosity, adventure, and play. Gentleness, honesty, and courage will be supported throughout the weekend.

"We would like each couple to send us a letter expressing their hopes, fears, and expectations about this workshop by March 8 to: 312 Morning Sun, Mill Valley, CA 94941."

Overcoming Overeating: Breaking the Diet/Binge Cycle

Jane Hirschmann

Diet/binge. Good food/bad food. Punishment/reward. These conflicts are the compulsive eater's nightmares. The lifelong pattern of recrimination, obsession, and guilt leads inevitably to more overeating and more weight gain. This seminar presents a radical new approach for resolving eating problems once and for all. It shows how to stop dieting and how to eat your way out of an eating problem. The following topics will be addressed for both the beginner and those already familiar with this approach:

- How to give up dieting and learn to eat less without restraints
- The difference between stomach hunger and mouth hunger
- How to stop overeating and lose weight naturally
- How to translate "fat thoughts" back into real concerns

Didactic material will be presented. However, most of the weekend will be a living lab with activities such as guided imagery, body and mirror work, journal writing. A kitchen is provided for participants' use, and they are invited to bring the foods they love most as an addition to Esalen's normal fare.

Please note: To make best use of the time in this weekend workshop, participants are asked to read Hirschmann and Munter's Overcoming Overeating, (Fawcett), prior to arrival.

Embodied Gestalt Practice: Body and Soul

Edward Smith

Gestalt practice focuses on personal process as it unfolds moment to moment in the here-and-now. The value is on awareness, actuality, and personal responsibility. As a path of growth, Embodied Gestalt Practice integrates methods from various Eastern and Western body-oriented systems. It includes one-on-one work with the leader, group exercises, movement, meditation and other spiritual practices, and time spent in the natural environment to help foster personal and spiritual healing and growth.

Performance Art

Rachel Rosenthal

Rachel Rosenthal offers a workshop that explores performance as a means of accessing one's deeper self and for reconnecting with the earth. It is based on her "Doing by Doing" teachings, a framework that activates the spiritual self through the medium of performance by uniting ritual with spirit and nature with inner knowledge.

Participants will approach the source of their individual creativity and translate this energy into the poetics of action through movement, vocal and instrumental sound, ritualized gesture, and collective improvisation. Through a succession of processes—relaxation, awareness, guided imagery, body and voice work—they will compose short performance pieces as solos, duets, or ensembles to evoke the power and beauty of the earth and to reconnect themselves to the matrix of the planet.

This work explores individual expression as well as group ritual and demonstrates how contemporary urban human beings can still discover community. Participants are encouraged to bring musical instruments, sound-makers, and any object, fabric, mask, or hat that they wish to work with or make available to the group. Found objects will also be used. $675

A Week with Laura DeNuccio

Learning communities are being built everywhere.
The whole world is a learning community!
Where is the True Human Being?—Rumi

We live in a time when many people are called to a higher consciousness that transcends merely material concerns. Yet, paradoxically, this calling, without a grounding in nature and the body, may only lead to partial realization. This workshop seeks to heal the split between vision and the world.

Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can increase their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Tools for this self-discovery include movement, music, breath, and various meditations to enliven, balance, and transform energy blocks in the body.

This workshop will be a time of nourishment. Participants will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one's inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What's meaningful and significant to you? What's truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth.

While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group can experiment with co-creating community, an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore the ever-unfolding adventure of spirit.

Weekend Renewal at Esalen

This will be a weekend for people to renew themselves in the tranquil and beautiful setting of Esalen. It will not be a structured program, although several ongoing classes in the various practices offered here will be available for guests to choose from. These may include: sessions in gestalt, movement, meditation, massage, day-hikes, singing gestalt, aerobics, stretching, and yoga. The swimming pool and natural hot baths will be available as usual.

The food will be specially prepared, with an emphasis on a diet of fresh vegetables and grains. Much of the produce is picked daily from Esalen's own organic garden and farm.

A Christic Institute Seminar with Daniel Sheehan & Sara Nelson

This seminar will address needed changes in the national security state structure of America in light of the changes in world economic and military structures generated by President Gorbachev, and in light of the public revelation of General Richard Secord's private criminal covert operations enterprise.

The leaders will review evidence for criminal activities by publicly-revealed participants in the Iran/Contra scandal, but also for other high-level Reagan/Bush Administration personnel. They will discuss the thirty-year history of men who set up and direct the now infamous "Off-the-Shelf, Stand-Alone Enterprise," including the formation of alliances with major heroin traffickers in Southeast Asia, organized crime figures in Florida, Las Vegas, and New Orleans, and more recently with cocaine traffickers from the famous Medellin Cocaine Cartel of Columbia.

Based upon this review, the leaders will detail concrete organizing and education steps which must be undertaken to dismantle this covert national security state apparatus and to open the way for ushering in a new era of international peace and cooperation at the beginning of the twenty-first century based upon a spiritually-informed, yet politically-sophisticated, ethical base. $350

Relating to Self and Others Through Adversity

Mari Krieger

Our illusions of security and invulnerability may be breached at any time. Situations such as life-threatening illness, death of a loved one, or loss of economic resources may have to be faced despite our attempts to control our probabilistic universe. In this workshop, through the use of gestalt, self-acceptance training, and interpersonal interaction, participants will be guided toward responding to adversity in a way that deepens, rather than erodes, their aliveness and compassion.

Mari Krieger is a longtime Esalen leader who trained with Fritz Perls and Richard Olney. Her present teachers include her three-year-old daughter and her struggle with cancer. $675

Follow Your Bliss: Joseph Campbell Week

Chungliang Al Huang & Guests of the Joseph Campbell Foundation

To continue the annual tradition of the Myth-Body to Live By seminars during Joseph Campbell's birthday week, Chungliang Al Huang will coordinate ongoing study sessions on the essence of Campbell derived from his eight years of collaboration with the late mythologist. Participants will reenact many of Campbell's teachings through rituals, myths, and stories. The workshop will also combine Tai Ji, music, and discussion to allow the individual to enter and reflect upon his or her own "hero's journey."

Sexual Abuse Survivors: The Process of Empowerment

Carolyn Braddock

Please note: This workshop is for professionals who work with sexual abuse victims/survivors.

Immeasurable numbers of children count the regular exploitation of their bodies as part of their formative experience. Trusted adults assault, neglect, and sexually abuse them, leaving physical and emotional scars. Professional counselors need special skills to work with these victims/survivors. This workshop adds new dimensions to traditional strategies in dealing with those who have experienced sexual abuse.

The primary focus will be to explore the process of empowering the therapist and client working together, from both cognitive and body-oriented approaches. Participants will discuss the victim/survivor's belief system, cognitive characteristics, and physical and behavioral manifestations, all of which increase understanding of the varying reactions and means of survival. This understanding holds the key to the short- and long-term effects of the abuse in the victim's body, mind, and spirit. It also provides a solid base for developing predictive tools and guidance in the intervention process.

The leader will present specific intervention strategies and will detail patterns of child abuse and neglect, family dynamics, belief systems of the victim/survivor, and body reactions. Much of the week will be experiential. Participants will be actively involved in intervention demonstrations, discussions of ethical issues, and case presentations. The focus will be on individual and group process with some time devoted to legal issues, including court testimony. Breath work, sound, movement, gestalt, role-playing, and creative cognitive work will all be used.

Rabbi Nahum Ward and Shelley Mann will introduce participants into the rich Jewish Passover tradition; Brother David will explore what the sacred mysteries of Easter can mean to us today; Chungliang Al Huang will lead all in a Taoist dance of springtime.

Participants may want to arrive in time for the 3:00 PM Good Friday service at the Camaldolese Benedictine Hermitage, twelve miles south of Esalen, or plan to take part in the Paschal Liturgy there during Easter night. The focal point of the weekend will be a Seder service with its message of freedom and liberation. Living Meditations

In our busy lives we do so much—but how do we do it? Are we fully aware of our actions and the consequences of what we do? Are our actions as appropriate and response-able as they could be? Could our lives be easier or more energetically economical? What are we doing to/with ourselves, and how does that affect us and others, our health, our relationships, work, longevity, our well-being?

This workshop encourages participants to "tune in" and become more aware on many levels of how they live. The work is experiential; through awareness of breath, self, and each other, and by focusing on everyday activities such as walking, sitting, standing, touching, and the processing of such as desirable, participants develop a fuller sense of mindfulness. This direct study of one's experience provides a practice ground for change and can suggest how to go about it. Such awareness of personal needs and desires can increase one's chances for becoming a fuller, more realized, happier, and healthier human being.

Life Stories: Healing the Sorrows

Peter Finkelstein

Painful experience is one of life's givens. However, whether we are discussing the inevitable existential concerns of aloneness, freedom, or death, or the personal tragedies of divorce or untimely loss, it is the manner in which we give form to our painful stories that defines our personal development. The mere attention we give to the ongoing creation of our own story can help us broaden our sources of satisfaction, concentrate our energies productively, and recognize life's wisdom in its many forms.

Participants will use group exercises and individual work to help them acknowledge and integrate painful life experiences such as divorce and bereavement. Each will tell at least one of their most disturbing memories; they will practice telling their stories effectively so that communication both with others and within themselves will benefit. Guided imagery, dream interpretation, hypnosis, didactic material, and attention to group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Blocks to the successful completion of healing will be explored, and material about health and integration will be presented both didactically and experientially. Reading and written assignments will be used.

The Subtle Self in Motion

Judy Blackstone

This workshop offers subtle, concentrated work to help participants truly inhabit their bodies. Mind-breath-body exercises will be used to awaken consciousness of the inner depths of the body, to attune to the emotional underpinnings of bodily tensions, and to release the bound energy of old pain.

The personal themes which emerge from this work will be explored verbally in a supportive group setting and in a free-movement class for the expression of nonverbal experience. There will be daily meditation practice as well as sound and visualization exercises for penetrating to the core of the body-mind, to a level of unified awareness. Through this unbroken contact with the self, participants may discover the joy, health, and spontaneity of their essential nature. This workshop will not be physically taxing; the emphasis will be on introspective work. $350

David Streeter & John Harris

Since its introduction to this country, sports massage has undergone many changes. Standard cross-friction and compression strokes have been enhanced by trigger point and neuromuscular methods. In order to be effective, the practitioner must have an understanding of anatomy and his/her own body usage, so an important part of this workshop will be daily "body-dynamics," a movement class developed at Esalen for massage students, and brief anatomy lectures. Lots of hands-on practice and individual instruction will round out the week.

This course is appropriate for a wide range of health care practitioners, both beginning and advanced.

Human Potential: Theory and Practice

John Heider

This workshop will consist of a synthesis of group process, gestalt, body work, and meditation. While the workshop will be mostly experiential, there will be time for questions and answers and for discussion of the work. $675

Acting and Being

Paula Sholachman Shaw

Meryl Streep or Bette Midler; Dustin Hoffman or Pee-wee Herman. The same persona and core issues that infuse our acting performance also shape our experience of ourselves and the world around us. We all know the experience of watching an actor who appears disengaged from his performance, leaving us unmoved. And, similarly, we know the experience of feeling disconnected from ourselves and from those with whom we seek to connect.

Bridging the separation between self and experience and self and other, available in acting, makes it possible to reconnect with the source of one's personal power for creativity, communication, and being. This workshop addresses these issues through presentation and theater games, performance and improvisation. It encourages personal outrageousness and playing 100%. It's an opportunity to experience what is meant by stage presence and full self-expression. Life imitating art or vice versa? Acting or being? The rewards are commensurate with the risks. Previous performance experience is not necessary.

Requirement: a one-to-three-minute memorized performance piece of any kind. Maximum enrollment: 25. $675

Dreaming: The Magic Mirror that Never Lies

Jeremy Taylor

Participants will share and work with their dreams, drawing upon timeless mythological/archetypal images that shape our contemporary individual and collective lives. Although the focus will be dream interpretation in a collective context, the methods are designed to give participants the ability to engage in their own dream work upon returning home.

Those people who are just beginning to explore the world of their dreams, as well as professionals who work with dreams, are welcome. As Jeremy Taylor comments, "Only the dreamer can say with any certainty what meanings his or her dreams may hold, and dream work is one of the few activities that puts beginners and experts on an equal emotional footing from the outset." $350

Crazy Wisdom: A Weekend of Philosophy and Laughter

Wes "Scoop" Nisker & Paul Krassner

What a fine comedy this world would be if one did not play a part in it.—Denis Diderot

This is more like a *play*shop than a workshop, but that does not mean there is nothing important to be gained here. Perhaps there is nothing more useful these days than to cultivate the art of play and laughter, and to learn how not to take ourselves so seriously.

This weekend is designed to help people develop both their comic and cosmic perspectives. Through talks, discussion, writing exercises, and theater games, participants will explore their own sense of humor as well as their philosophy of life. Sessions will include the presentation of Zen and Taoist wisdom tales (the lighter side of enlightenment), trickster stories, Mark Twain's dark writings, some poetry and jokes, and audio- and videotapes of some of the great satirists and comedians, including Charlie Chaplin, Lenny Bruce, Nichols and May, Robin Williams, and Woody Allen. There will also be discussion of the uses of humor in the helping professions and in people's everyday lives. This popular Esalen workshop will not necessarily help you to be funny, but should help you to see funny. At least one belly laugh is guaranteed. $350

Harriet Goslins & Frank Oliveira

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain/muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk of injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for the average person who feels chronically tired and stressed and wants to learn how to take better care of his/her neck, shoulders, and back, to improve his/her posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provider approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

Self-Acceptance: The Freedom to Be

David Schiffman

Each of us has unique capacities to feel and express tenderness and strength, anger and affection, autonomy and needfulness, as well as compassion, humor, and wisdom. The degree to which we allow the fullness and vibrance of each of these qualities determines how alive and gratified we are.

In this workshop, participants will focus on how they diminish or affirm these essential qualities as they are expressed through their bodies, sexuality, creativity, relationship to power, friendships, and expectations. In an atmosphere of tenderness and support, participants will clarify the nature of who they are and how they can best take care of themselves, both at Esalen and on returning home. The workshop will be grounded in gestalt, group process, guided fantasy, massage, and bioenergetics.

What is This Thing Called Love?

Madeline Nold

Why are we drawn to stories of love and loss, unrequited love, and blissfully romantic endings? Did the famous romantic pairs in literature and myth have wonderful relationships after all?

This workshop is about all kinds of love, stressing what does and does not work in love relationships. Group discussion and video presentations will look at romantic love as exemplified in Eastern and Western mythology and further explore topics such as:

- Our predisposed expectations of love
- What draws us to our partners
- How we seek to fill needs left unmet from childhood
- The pitfalls of consciously or unconsciously repeating destructive family patterns of loving
- Healing false expectations

Through gestalt, movement, and other expressive work, participants will draw on stories from their own lives and juxtapose them with those from literature and myth. They will explore new ways and meanings in which to support themselves and each other in creating and sustaining loving relationships. They may find that, after all, love is a tribute to one's courage to take risks and to the courage to trust. $675

Relationships: Embracing the Challenge

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared—by their family backgrounds or society—to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $350

Charlotte Selver & Charles Brooks

Much as we may wish to live in the present, we are often preoccupied with images and ideas of how it ought to be. Instead of responding to the situation at hand with the innumerable nerves, muscles, and interweavings of consciousness which are we, much of us is immobilized by early conditioning, acute emotional problems, or by habit, and much is held back until the inner board of review gives the OK.

But children and sages have a different way of functioning. For them the world flows into their consciousness as the air into their lungs, and their responses are organismic and direct, bypassing the evaluation center which is the educated mind of the adult. It is our lack of immediacy which is usually felt as tedium and which necessitates ever stronger stimuli in the search for joy, or self-disciplines in the search for peace. By giving up these preconceptions and gradually coming to follow our sense of reality, we begin to respond not to what should be but to what is, and the world catches fire for us.

This workshop will explore direct experience which, as it becomes clearer and stronger, tends to burn away the mist of concepts and restrictions which our conditioning has interposed between ourselves and living.

Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

In the world's great psychological and religious traditions, life is seen as the arena for human transformation. We are told we must evolve through knowing ourselves. A fallen state like slumber, exile, or forgetfulness must be transmuted into personal fulfillment. Even the United States Constitution assumes this is our direction and our birthright.

But how to attain contentment? How to turn the secret sufferings of envy into a generosity of spirit? Or liberate oneself from the burdened chaos of unmet obligations? Or dismantle the loaded gun in one's heart? How to endure intimacy or even bear the manifestations of others? How to turn aimlessness into vocation and boredom into engagement?

In a weekend of lecture, gestalt, discussion, journal writing, and experiential exercises, participants will confront the core issues involved in the technology of happiness. Each will be encouraged to discern and face the individual choices involved in living out his or her own best pattern of love and work, the one that will lead toward satisfactions that celebrate individuality. In this quest they will be helped by the philosophers of impeccability—Schopenhauer, Spinoza, Alain—and even by literary and cinematic inspirations. But the main endeavor will be a personal, practical, and possibly life-changing, pursuit of happiness-inducing insight. $350

Robert Helm & Roger Grandy

The depth of our work is more than skin deep; it touches the hearts and lives of people, healing the invisible wounds we carry and sometimes have forgotten we have. —Judith McKinnon, The McKinnon School of Massage

This week is structured for beginners and those who would like a review of basic massage skills. Optional afternoon classes in advanced methods will also be offered. The longer morning sessions will be demonstration and hands-on practice of the fundamental methods used in a full-body Esalen-style massage. The emphasis will be on quality contact through mindfulness rather than technique.

Most days, participants will have time from lunch until dinner to enjoy the baths, community, and the grounds, or to explore the magnificent Big Sur coast and nearby hiking trails. Evening sessions will include movement for body workers and group discussion.

Integral Transformative Practice

Michael Murphy & George Leonard

Participants in this workshop will discuss evidence for human transformative capacity collected by Michael Murphy for his forthcoming book, The Future of the Body, and will explore the relations between such evidence and their own experience of practices developed by George Leonard to educate body, mind, and spirit.

On the basis of evidence for high-level change he has collected, Murphy proposes that we need a balanced, or integral, transformative practice to best realize our potentials for growth. Leonard's approach constitutes such a practice. It includes exercises for physical, psychological, ethical, and transpersonal development.

How Hungry Am I and For What: A Workshop for ACAs

Mariah Fenton Gladis

The road to recovery for adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive parents (ACAs) is challenging and can be deeply rewarding. It requires determination, lifelong commitment, and positive experiences. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health. Group members will work toward transforming their personal histories from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom, focusing on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of chronic trauma;
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries;
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation toward stability and abundance;
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

The workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals working with ACAs.

A Weekend with David Schiffman

The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning. $350

Music and Dance of Haiti

Blanche Brown & John Scovel

Blanche Brown has taught jazz dance, Afro-Haitian dance, and traditional Haitian dance for the past eighteen years. She integrates the dance, music, and culture of the Haitian people in her work, teaching traditional dance steps as well as the background and spirituality of these dances. She is the artistic director of the performing ensemble Roots of Haiti, which strives within the performance to educate its audience to the heritage, versatility, and nuances of Haitian culture brought about by the amalgamation of the many nations of African slaves.

John Scovel has studied and played traditional drums for fourteen years. He combines his knowledge of Haitian and African cultures with his performing experience in demonstrating the relationship between the dance and the drum. In Haitian dance, the drum rhythms that correspond to each movement not only inspire the dancer but provide the very structure for the dance patterns.

In this weekend workshop, the leaders will create rhythms and energies to enthuse and inspire the participant. $350

Courage, Risk, and Self-Acceptance

Phyllis Shankman

Although it is understood that growth and change require courage and the willingness to risk, many of us find ourselves unable or unwilling to make a move until we feel certain of the outcome. And while we hesitate, we often miss out on enjoyable or important opportunities. Courage requires a blend of self-acceptance, heart, boldness of spirit, a sense of humor, and the willingness to trust oneself and the goodwill of others.

This workshop offers participants a supportive environment in which to experience themselves as courageous and able to successfully take risks. Group activities will include gestalt, discussion, massage, meditation, art imagery exercises, dance, and play. $675

Performance Workshop

Dianne Laurence

Participants in this workshop will choose a site on the Esalen property and create a performance for it. Previous acting experience is not necessary, only the desire to communicate something genuine to an audience.

The class will be limited to six people. In addition to working with the group, each person will receive individual attention and direction. They will present their performances on the last afternoon in front of an audience that will be guided from site to site. Each performance will take 10-15 minutes.

Risk-taking and trust can stimulate self-discovery and expression. Performance can be exciting and magical as subconscious impulses make synchronistic connections with the environment. Everyone has something to share, and there is nothing quite like an audience's enthusiastic response when this is done with a combination of honesty and imagination. This workshop provides the opportunity to begin with little else but oneself and make something interesting and meaningful happen. $675

Yoga: A Week of Learning and Rejuvenation

Ganga White & Tracey Rich

Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and which combines grace and flow with postures, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the art of enlightened living.

Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies. Through Jnana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.

Participants of all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at: White Lotus, 2500 San Marcos Pass, Santa Barbara, CA 93105; (805) 964-1944. $675

Socratic Midwifery: Uncovering Beliefs that Block Human Excellence

Pierre Grimes

Pierre Grimes will discuss the Socratic art of philosophical midwifery and show how it addresses a new class of human problems: the pathologos. A pathologos is a false belief about oneself and one's reality, and although its presence is unsuspected, it is unquestioningly accepted as true. It exerts a pervasive influence upon our lives and is irreconcilable with the attainment of our highest goals. It produces the sense of being bound by our past and renders us unable to secure our profoundest ideals. Philosophic midwifery provides a method for discovering the origin, maintenance, and dissolution of the pathologos which functions behind and through our problems, and offers a new way of understanding the function of the mind.

This workshop will offer participants insights into the nature of their own pathologos and an understanding of how it is passed on by each generation. It will explore family dynamics and how to cultivate excellence in the family.

Philosophical midwifery is unlike the interpretive systems of psychology. Even though a mode of Socratic dialectic has been adapted by psychologists for clinical practice (called Dialectical Rational Psychotherapy), its more profound use is for those who seek to achieve the most significant goal of human excellence: to know thyself.

Selections from Pierre Grime's book, Philosophical Midwifery as a Mode of Rational Psychotherapy and its Validation, will be available to participants, as will his computer program, To Artemis: The Challenge to Know Thyself.

Men Together

Robert Hall & Richard Strozzi Heckler

Reclaim your maleness in an atmosphere of trust and support. Join other men in talking, moving, playing, and sitting. Share emotions and feelings that have long been withheld; come closer to yourself and other men.

The seminar leaders, Robert Hall and Richard Strozzi Heckler, have been best friends and professional colleagues for over twenty years. They are both fathers; they are co-founders of the Lomi School; they share the same spiritual practice. Robert is gay, Richard is straight.

Recommended reading: Heckler, In Search of the Warrior Spirit (North Atlantic Books). $350

Creative Writing Brainstorming

Herbert Gold

From feeling to expression to communication, this workshop will carry participants into the possibilities of making literature. Exploring an experience different for everyone, yet shared by all, they will probe for the riches within.

Participants should bring typewriter, word processor, pen, soft pencil, or clay tablets and stylus to the meetings. A situation will be called forth—love, death, ambition, pride, fear, hatred, jealousy—and after preparation in the discussion, participants will write. Then they will read and rewrite each other's work. They may expect to go from truth to lying: from recollection to art.

What may develop is a sense of style and control as a part of the mastery of experience. Participants will practice the freedom of imagination by giving shape to it. $350

Vision Painting for Women

Helen Malcolm-Neeb

Vision painting is a process through which a personal map of the future is crafted. Each aspect of the person's life is addressed from its highest potential. Through meditation, guided visioning, and play, dreams are organized into images. The vision painting is an affirmation of the individual in her professional, spiritual, and personal life.

This is an opportunity for women to affirm the spirit within from a place of play, creativity, and strength. The maps they create will use symbols, pictures, color, and words. Beginners and artists are welcome. Create a vision of your future as you want it to be.

Self-Expression through Music for Everyone

David Darling

This workshop will help soothe and heal the inner self by directing energy into sound-making, rhythmic grooving, chant-shouting, poem- and sculpture-designing, group productions, breath perception, meditation, smiling, clowning, chamber music inspiration, instrument-inventing, and humor.

Participants are asked to bring instruments that they want to learn to play or that they can play now. Percussion instruments will be provided. The voice will be, of course, the center of the entire process: where it is, how it is, what to do with it. $675

Releasing Stress, Returning to Self

Daniel Bianchetta & Cynthia Johnson Bianchetta

Our busy lives seem to take us everywhere but here and now. Frequently, in our human doingness we forget about our human beingness. But if we stop and listen to our inner voice, we can cultivate a relationship to the self that will remind us of our essential nature and return us to the aliveness of the moment.

This week will be spent renewing, relaxing, refreshing, revitalizing, and practicing how to maintain equanimity in the midst of everyday life: under pressure, under stress, in a hurry, or anytime. Participants will use the portable tools of energy awareness, intuition, play, meditation, gentle risk-taking, aikido, and movement to return to the self. They will be encouraged to reacquaint themselves with "the child inside," a place of simplicity, innocence, and vulnerability. It is from this center that knowledge of the self emerges and which can help turn the heart homeward. There is really nowhere else to go.

Advanced Hypnosis: Exploring Beyond the Edges of Identity

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

When a pickpocket meets the Buddha, he only sees his pockets.—Zen proverb

The leaders write: "We are all living in trance—a trance of the senses, a bubble of perception. Different traditions call it by different names. For the Hindus it is Maya, for the Buddhists it is Samsara. Padmasambhava, an Indian tantric hero of early Tibet, said, 'Heaven and hell are the same thing, both creations of mind.'

"The senses condition and create our relationship with the world. Belief in the senses is the jail of the spirit. The world is as it is; it is our relationship to it that creates suffering or bliss. In this seminar for helping professionals, participants will explore how people create reality, and then practice various strategies of intervention. Vedanta and Buddhism will be used as the context for the model of Ericksonian hypnosis.

"Interpersonal work takes place on one of three levels: symptom removal, ego strengthening, and ego transcendence. This seminar will address all three levels in theory and practice, and participants will have the opportunity to work both personally and professionally. Personal unfolding will go hand in hand with the didactic learning; however, method will be considered secondary to the growth of each participant.

"The enneagram of character fixation will be an integral part of the week, and open seat sessions will be available. There will be daily zazen and Taoist yoga stretching."

Exploring the Hermetic Tradition

Terence McKenna

This seminar will explore the literature of visions and ideas that constitutes the Corpus Hermeticum. Through reading and discussion of the Trismegistic Hymns, participants will discover Hermetic thought to be a bridge of startling literary beauty connecting the world of ancient Greek and Gnostic philosophical thinking to later traditions of alchemical thought and, in our own era, the rebirth of psychedelic shamanism. The Hermetic and alchemical contribution to a millenarian recasting of human dreams and society will be the overarching theme of this weekend.

Finding Inspired Work in Mid-Life

Peller Marion

At 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people don't live to be 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them largely because their lives seem effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop, drawing from a conceptual base of adult development theory and models of aging, will explore these issues. Through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, What's my dissatisfaction? Who am I? What's my definition of success?, the leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain a clarity, focus, and direction of one's life contributions. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision. $350

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy & Rita Thangaraj

The central theme will be primary approaches to full body massage, which the leaders will introduce through demonstration and experiential exchanges. Self-awareness through movement, sound, and breath will be used to enhance the senses. Discussion will offer insights into various approaches to body work and how they address both the physiological and emotional body.

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as base camp, the group will explore different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff

In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality. This loss fosters suffering.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one's authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work. $675

Presence: A Fluidity of Being

Elisa Lodge

Elisa Lodge writes: "Presence is a power that arises from a deep sense of self-worth and trust. It reflects a broadened vision and whole-hearted acceptance of the varied facets of being. It is a state of dynamic balance where there is no unnecessary strain of self-defeating awkwardness. One is at home in oneself and at ease with the world.

"During this week, participants can gain a deepened appreciation of the elements in themselves that contribute to this timeless state of fluidity and ease. They will have an opportunity to experiment and explore how their bodies' shapes and forms, emotional histories, and self-images are intimately intertwined. This growing awareness is the basic grounding from which the creative experience of presence can be known. Movement patterns, the ways we walk and breathe, also reveal how we inhibit or allow our personal power. As we become more comfortable with ourselves, we transform not only the way we might carry our head or make contact with another, but our whole way of being in the world.

"This work is based on an approach woven from gestalt, psychosynthesis, Rolf movement, and performance art. Video feedback will be used." $675

Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming

Stephen LaBerge

Dreams are worlds of wonder where anything imaginable can happen. However, most of the time we sleep through our nightly journeys, unaware of the opportunities available. Only upon awakening do we realize that we have been dreaming.

But we are not bound to forever sleepwalk through our dreams. Lucid dreams are dreams in which we know we are dreaming while we're dreaming. Lucid dreamers are fully conscious that the world they are experiencing in the dream is a mental creation and that they are completely free to act in the dream without constraint by laws of physics or society.

Research has shown that people can develop the skill of lucid dreaming. Workshop participants will practice methods for inducing lucid dreams and explore the possibilities of their uses: creative problem-solving, healing, adventure, self-exploration/integration. A presentation of recent scientific research will demonstrate how dreams profoundly affect our brains and bodies.

The scope of this seminar will extend beyond dreams and dream lucidity to provide an understanding of the nature of our experience of the world and the origins of our perceptions of reality. It will suggest that all perceptions are illusory and that the waking reality we experience is, like dreaming, a mental construction.

Opening the Feelings

Dale Cummings & Gena Louise Sorensen

Participants will employ Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants. Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexuality intensify and merge. $675

Acting is Doing

Stephen Book

Remove the restrictions, both inner and outer, which suppress the spontaneity of any human being, and his/her natural spontaneity will show itself as artistic creativeness. In this workshop, complicated theater techniques are transformed into simple game forms which produce spontaneous behavior through playing. True playing is spontaneous and requires focus—the absorption in what one is doing, to the exclusion of other thoughts.

This experiential workshop, which is designed for the layperson, emphasizes playing and focusing. Participants will heighten and focus energy, increase communication skills, extend powers of observation and concentration, and improvise imagined realities. $675

Myers-Briggs Type Indicator: A Tool for Personal and Organizational Transformation

Maggie Seeley & Mark Lipton

Differences in personal preference create excitement, attraction, and synergy. They can also be the source of great tension and misunderstanding between friends, lovers, colleagues, and family members. Understanding differences can transform these relationships. The Myers-Briggs Type Indicator, based on Carl Jung's observations of personality and behavior, is a simple, accurate indicator of personal preference in the areas of:

- Focus of attention (extraversion/introversion)
- Information collection (sensing/intuition)
- Processing of data (thinking/feeling)
- Decision-making (judgment/perception)

Workshop participants will use the Myers-Briggs to become more aware of their own needs and preferences, thereby gaining a fuller appreciation of themselves. Their focus will then shift to relationships with others. The course will mix theory, practice, type-watching, and field work. By mid-week, participants will choose an area of concentration with the MBTI, such as counseling, management, relationships, teaching, marketing, spiritual development. $675

Self-Expression through American Sign Language

Lorraine Peters

American Sign Language, or ASL, is most often thought of in terms of communication for deaf people. Rich with facial expression, pantomime, gestures, and specific signs made with the hands and fingers, it embodies the spirit and cultural uniqueness of the deaf. But ASL can also be a vehicle for the hearing to explore subtle forms of non-verbal communication. It offers them an alternative means of self-expression as they step out from behind the mask of words and reveal themselves through facial expression and body movement.

This workshop invites participants to tune in to their emotions and become aware of the gestures and postures that convey them. While specific ASL signs will be taught, participants will be encouraged to express their individuality by creating new signs of their own. Music, movement, and other experiential activities will be used in an atmosphere of humor and play.

This weekend is for those who want to become more emotionally expressive, for those in theater or dance, or for those who just want to begin learning American Sign Language. Previous sign language skills are not necessary.

Reviewing and Revisioning Your Life

Sam Keen

Periodically, everyone needs to review and revision their lives. Every decade of the life cycle brings new tasks, goals, pleasures, and horizons. When the trauma of divorce, illness, tragedy, or sudden good fortune strikes, or when dissatisfaction, boredom, or depression sets in, it is time to take stock of the past and look for a new vision of the future. This seminar will guide participants in this exploration through questions such as:

- Where are you in your life cycle?
- Thus far what have you accomplished, experienced?
- What's old, stale, worn-out, boring?
- What's new, interesting, exciting, appealing?
- What decisions do you need to make?
- How are you haunted by your past?
- What do you fear?
- What wounds still fester?
- What destructive patterns do you repeat?
- What debts of gratitude have you not repaid?
- What hasn't happened yet?
- What promises and potentials are still unfulfilled?
- What are your dreams, values, visions?

To help in this review and revision, participants are asked to assemble objects that might be useful to a biographer: photos from different times, diaries from over the years, newspaper clippings of personal accomplishments, objects of special importance, remembered songs. Bring a blank book and colored pencils. $350

Group Process: The Key

Will & Ailish Schutz

Focus will be on the principles of group process for group leaders and for people who want personal experience in a group. Discussion will view the events in this group as a paradigm for understanding individuals, relationships, and social events such as: business dilemmas, child rearing practices, world revolutions, and the sweeping question of how we make the transition from authoritarianism to democracy.

To make effective, creative choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set—the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressures of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

In this week, participants will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and bouyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Continuum Movement and Wilderness Awareness Practice

Susan Harper & Steven Harper

Nature is a primary teacher of movement, creativity, and awareness. Being outdoors in the richness and beauty of nature awakens our outer senses. Continuum movement takes us inward, heightening our awareness of our inner senses. These five days will combine both practices, integrating the subtle inner explorations that Continuum movement inspires with the activity of day-hiking in the magnificent Big Sur backcountry.

The day-hikes will introduce participants to basic and increasingly-refined awareness practices to enhance their sensitivity to all that wilderness and being out-of-doors offer. In doing so, they not only will have contact with the natural world, they will have the opportunity to reawaken those elements of wilderness within.

In the indoor sessions, participants will explore movements which express and embody what they have taken in during their walks, invigorating their ability to feel what they see in nature and to feel their own inner nature. Engaging with this sensual environment, they will play with movement, breath, sound, dreams, and ritual.

This is a time for contact with nature and wilderness, inside and out. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance. $675

Poetry as Food for a Full Life

Brother David Steindl-Rast

Nature and people at Esalen help poetry come alive. So many have found this to be true that Brother David is offering a new selection of poems in the same workshop format and setting as last year.

Poems are high-energy food for life's journey. Some people thrive on this fare; for them, this weekend will provide the delights of a festive meal. Others have been estranged from poetry ever since high school days; in this workshop they may discover rooms of their own house which they have never entered before.

Why does school spoil for many young people the taste for poetry? Why does Sunday School turn so many away from religion? These two phenomena are closely related. Yet, it is never too late to discover the divine poet child within us, a child more alive than we ever dreamed we could be. $350

Gestalt Practicum: A Seven-Day Intensive

Christine Stewart Price & Joyce Lyke

This workshop is open only to people who have previously participated in a Gestalt Practice workshop and who would like to further explore this form in theory as well as through personal experience. It is especially appropriate for those in the helping professions, such as counselors, body workers, and teachers, who are interested in integrating this approach into their current practice. The format will include open seat sessions with the leaders, structured exercises where participants work with each other, didactic presentation, and discussion. Persons without previous experience in gestalt are referred to the Gestalt Practice workshops scheduled for February 15-17, April 21-26, and May 10-12, or they may write a letter of application to Christine Stewart Price, c/o Esalen Institute.

Childhood Sexual Abuse: A Healing

Jessica Moore Britt & Scott Layton

To guard against the hurts, fears, and confusion that sexual invasion of a child's physical and psychic boundaries can create, the child often abandons the place of conflict—the body. This withdrawal, though protective in nature, slowly begins to separate the child from her/his essential nature. This may be reflected in tension patterns, numbness, and oversensitivity and may further the child's sense of alienation from the world and self.

During these seven days, participants will move gently toward reintegrating their bodies and feelings with self. They will use gestalt practice, Reichian breath work, movement, touch, and meditation to reenter their private world of memories and feelings. They may gain a deeper understanding that the learned idea of self as bad, based on the sexual abuse, is not the essential truth of who they are. The focus will be on allowing the hurt, negative feelings and doubts to be acknowledged, felt, and used as energetic seeds for reawakening a positive sense of self. Through the supportive group atmosphere, participants may discover that it is safe once again to embody beauty, life, and love.

Film and the Quest for Wholeness

Francis Lu & Brother David Steindl-Rast

Film has become the leading medium for exploring the hero's journey and the meaning of life. A good film can help us enter the various phases of our quest for wholeness: integrating our shadow; accepting the animus or anima; letting our true self become manifest; discovering the transcendent meaning of immediate experience. Many have been helped by finding the right film at the right time.

Should this help be left to chance? Like reading a novel, viewing a film is an art. Practicing this art can heighten our enjoyment and deepen our insight.

Francis Lu and Brother David consider enjoyment and insight the twofold goal of this workshop: in the incomparable setting of Esalen, a film festival and more than that. $675

Introduction to Rudolf Steiner

Robert McDermott

This workshop will introduce the life and work of Rudolf Steiner, the early twentieth century spiritual scientist and founder of the Waldorf School Movement. Robert McDermott, author of The Essential Steiner, will discuss and expand on selections from his book grouped under five headings: knowledge, nature, and spirit; spiritual anthropology; historical vision; esoteric Christianity; society and education.

Although the content of the discussion will depend on the interests of the participants, emphasis will probably fall on Steiner's theory of supersensible perception, including its methodology and application in the sciences, arts, and human development (particularly in relation to child development and education).

No previous knowledge of the subject matter is required, but the value of the workshop will be enhanced by prior reading of McDermott's The Essential Steiner (Harper & Row, 1984). $350

Healing, Meditation, and Dzogchen

Sogyal Rinpoche

In the stillness and presence of meditation, we discover a pure awareness beyond the ordinary thinking mind and catch a glimpse of our true nature, something long lost to the busyness and turmoil of our lives. The core of meditation practice is the releasing of heart and mind in deep ease and relaxation, dissolving tensions, and connecting with a tremendous source of healing within. Health is a state where all aspects of body and mind are in balance. Through meditation practice, the mind's natural freedom begins to shine through whatever arises in everyday life, bringing us confidence and skillfulness in our action.

At the heart of the Buddha's teachings lie the ancient meditation practices of Dzogchen, taught by Sogyal Rinpoche, heir to the 2,500 years of wisdom of Buddha. Rinpoche blends teaching with meditation, exploring the expansive Dzogchen view and showing how it can be integrated into everyday living. This weekend will be a valuable introduction for beginners and of special interest to those who have attended Rinpoche's previous workshops and wish to deepen their practice.

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive

Ayala Pines

When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. Unfortunately, more often than not, with the dampening effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, and it is not caused by major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfactions, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find their own romantic schemata and to rekindle the romantic images they shared at the beginning of their relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive in their relationships and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods to improve their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop will be of value to anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility—painlessly and immediately.

Golf in the Kingdom... an exploration of the inner game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart.—Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It may be experienced not simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

In these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two of the days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Healing the Healer: A Workshop for Helping Professionals

Peter Finkelstein

Working in the field of health care brings the practitioner into contact with sorrow and death. And although health care professionals accumulate great emotional burdens, many do not pay enough attention to staying whole, integrated, and nondepressed while doing this work. Often, in fact, institutional arrangements foster the opposite: isolation, dehumanization, withdrawal. Hence, it remains for the practitioner to find a personal approach in which to process sorrow, frustration, and fear, both wisely and well.

The central exercises in this workshop will be the telling of stories from the world of health care. Each participant will tell of an event from their practice, one that deeply moved them, with the focus on the telling, that is, telling the story well, fully inhabiting it in all its dimensions. Group members will then discuss the story: what it reveals about the health care profession and what it reveals about the teller. Through such telling we can reveal and heal those sometimes invisible wounds that interfere with our own growth and ability to continue helping others. Guided imagery, dream interpretation, didactic material, and group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Special attention will be given to creating a setting of trust and to understanding the properties of such settings.

Image and Insight: The Integration of Art and Physics

Leonard Shlain

The origin of the word "physics" means nature. Both artists and physicists are engaged in an ongoing attempt to describe nature's reality. The artist uses chiefly image and metaphor; the physicist, number and equation. This seminar will explore the connections between the conceptual ideas inherent in revolutionary art movements and the visionary breakthroughs that have occurred in physics.

Throughout history, but particularly in the modern era, the artist sees the world in a new way. Later, the physicist discovers a new way to think about the world. When these two opposing viewpoints are superimposed on each other, their images and insights are seen to have an uncanny similarity. In this seminar, Leonard Shlain will strive to demonstrate that they are but two different aspects of the same reality.

The changing view of three basic constructs—space, time, and light—in various periods of art, science, and culture will be the basis for a slide show and discussion that explore the reciprocal nature between cubism and a new concept of space, futurism and a new concept of time, and fauvism as a new concept of light. From there, attention will turn to a theory of consciousness which posits the split brain model in the individual as the source of the art/science division in the general culture. Stressing the need to combine the two hemispheric viewpoints, this seminar will examine the benefits that accrue when art is seen in terms of its precognitive ability, and when the imagery of modern physics is understood.

There will be no equations and one need not have a background in either art or physics to enjoy and participate in this workshop. The only prerequisites are a sense of wonder, an open mind, and an innate curiosity. $350

Emotional Healing:
From Co-Dependence to Aliveness

Karen Paine-Gernée & Terry Hunt

Children who grow up in alcoholic, abusive, or otherwise unhealthy homes often develop certain disabilities which last through their lifetimes unless they are deliberately addressed, among them: an inordinate need to control, an over-developed sense of responsibility, fear of authority figures, inability to trust, difficulty having fun, compulsive behavior, fear of abandonment, and chronic lack of self-esteem.

Alcoholism is a disease of denial. ACAs tell themselves that it really wasn't so bad, and they learn not to feel what they cannot tolerate. As they deny pain, they screen out joy, and their adult lives are often filled with depression and loneliness. ACAs are often survivors, though, and most have emerged as successful-appearing adults. Yet they often spend so much energy managing and controlling work and relationships that they have little left for themselves.

A necessary part of recovery is moving from the state of being co-dependent in one's life toward a state of emotional sobriety. Through self-exploration, participants will have the opportunity to access, express, and release blocked emotions that they still carry from childhood and to tap the aliveness that was sacrificed when they buried their anger, fear, and grief. Points of focus for this workshop will include:

- Emotional Sobriety: Having a personal sense of balance and physical boundaries from which to find peace and a capacity for genuine sharing and pleasure.
- Pleasure/Addictions: Learning that true pleasure is a life-affirming non-addictive experience.
- Sexuality: Separating the unmet needs of the wounded child from adult intimate sexual relationships; learning basic tools for nurturing and sustaining healthy relationships.
- Boundaries: Looking at the tendency to alternate between fusing with another and then completely isolating oneself.
- Spirituality: Learning to have faith in the face of the horror experienced in childhood.
- Self-Esteem: Realizing that self-doubt is oftentimes based on old mental patterns, not on reality.
- Learning New Behaviors: Identifying and overcoming old ways of reacting.
- Looking Beyond the Label: Knowing when to stop calling oneself a co-dependent.

Body work will be studied as a tool for optimal well-being and stress reduction and as a valued aid to transpersonal growth. Workshop sessions will meet Sunday through Friday and on alternate weekends. Upon satisfactory completion of the program, and after giving 30 additional recorded massage sessions, a California state-approved certificate of completion will be issued. This is a professional program, with limited admission.

A Workshop with Jack Rosenberg and Beverly Kitaen Morse

This workshop will start wherever participants are in their inner journey. The work is an in-depth integration of body and gestalt practices, object relations, and the transformative process of consciousness. The course will cover:

Psychology of the Self: Participants will work with early unfinished situations that interrupt their sense of well-being and interfere with their relationships in the present. Sexual implications of this work will be dealt with in body work and in lecture.

Body Work (Integrative Body Approach): This will be theoretical and practical application, combining Integrative Body Practice, exercise, and massage.

Transformative Process of Consciousness: As the inner journey progresses, one's figure/ground is shifted from "doing" and "having" to "being" and to one's relationship with the eternal. Participants will explore ways to integrate and sustain these new awarenesses in their everyday lives.

Standard Accommodations: $1665
Bunk Bed Room: $1155

Certification in Clinical Hypnosis

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian hypnosis, neurolinguistics, and the enneagram of character fixation. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the M.F.C.C. and complies with the California state requirements for hypnosis certification.

While the use of hypnosis in habit control and symptom removal will be covered, the primary focus will be on hypnosis as a tool for developing spiritual awareness. Starting with the presupposition that we already live in trance and that the goal is waking up, the roots of personality structure and the filters of perception in the creation and transformation of reality will be carefully explored. Participants will have the opportunity to experience the power of trance to transform their lives, which will create a model for working with clients.

The structure of rapport, pacing and leading, and various hypnotic patterns of induction will be demonstrated and practiced along with a variety of clinical interventions, including reframing, change history, metaphors, and storytelling. There will be videotapes of Erickson and other well-known leaders in the field of hypnosis. Participants will have daily practice with each other and the opportunity to be videotaped doing a hypnotic induction. Daily zazen, Taoist yoga, and movement led by Antoinette Varner will also be a part of this program.

Upon completion of this course, participants who want to be certified must demonstrate a high level of professionalism as well as proficiency in technical skills to the satisfaction of the instructors before certification will be granted. After certification by the Institute for Advanced Hypnosis (testing and certification fee, $300) additional certifications are available from the American Council of Hypnotist Examiners ($125) and the Society of NeuroLinguistic Programming ($200).

Required reading: J. Haley, Uncommon Therapy (Norton); Grinder and Bandler, Trance-Formations; Frogs into Princes; and Reframing (all, Real People Press); H. Almaas, Essence; Chogyam Trungpa, Shambhala (Shambhala); P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous (Harcourt, Brace & World); C. Castaneda, Tales of Power (Simon & Schuster).

Massage Practitioner Certification Program

Esalen offers a California state-approved massage program. Upon completion of a two-month massage work study track or a 130-hour massage practitioner workshop (see Special Programs, March 8-April 5), and after giving 30 additional massages elsewhere, graduates will receive their certificates. This program provides at least 130 hours of instruction, including anatomy, supplemented by study in body-mind disciplines such as yoga, gestalt awareness work, and movement, fulfilling the state requirement.

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring Project offers outreach, education, and referrals that extend Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent, service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring operates a global referral system, linking visitors to Esalen with body workers, counselors, and teachers from their home areas. There are ongoing programs at Esalen and a traveling workshop service in the U.S. and abroad. Instructors teach self-healing, Esalen body work, yoga, breath and body awareness, dance and centering movement, and meditation. Many instructors have experience in gestalt practice and movement continuum.

The Healthspring Library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, philosophy, yoga, nutrition, and organic gardening which may be borrowed by seminarians for a two-week period while at Esalen. Donations of books or periodicals are greatly appreciated.

For access to the referral system and traveling workshop program, write to Laurie Lioness Parizek at Esalen, c/o Healthspring.

Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center
Steven Harper & Guest Leader

Nature can provide opportunities to stretch one's limits and explore one's inner wilderness. By living in a natural environment it is possible to expand one's sense of self and depth of being.

The group will spend a day and a night at Esalen, leaving the next morning to hike through the Ventana wilderness. Participants will travel "light," with instruction in minimum impact camping, ecology, geography, and the cultural history of the area.

Wilderness will be a mirror and primary teacher as the group lives simply and in direct contact with nature. Participants will explore their inner world of dreams, feelings, and sensations as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice and group process. Taking inspiration from natural and native purification practices, they will create a time of cleansing and contemplation, culminating in a 24-hour period alone. The group will hike on to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center, deep in a rugged wilderness valley with natural hot springs, for their last night together. There, meditation instruction will be available for those who wish it.

Backpacking experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

■ WORK STUDY PROGRAM

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program. It is advantageous for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study Coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program.

Two programs are planned for each month. Programs scheduled thus far for 1991 include:

December 16, 1990–January 13, 1991
Beverly Silverman and Michel Roure will lead a dialogue between body and spirit using Rolfing®, gestalt, and psychosynthesis.

January 13–February 10
Dianne Laurence will use painting, writing, and theater games that establish a working relationship with one's creative force.

Vicki Topp and Lorin Roche will explore the interplay and complimentarity of meditation, movement, and massage (with the emphasis on meditation), and how each enriches the other.

February 10–March 10
Mary (Devarani) Goldenson's program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, Radix®, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy offers exploration of ancient and contemporary meditation practices; centering through movement, sound, and breath; and contact through massage.

March 10–April 7
Joyce Frazee will focus on dream work using a variety of approaches, including gestalt, dream body awareness, and mandala drawing.

John Soper's group will focus on ways to improve the quality of life. The work will start with the individual and grow to include the environment.

April 7–May 5
Julian Silverman's program will draw from psychosynthesis, gestalt, and A Course in Miracles to explore the ideas of being responsible for one's life and personal power.

Esalen staff members will offer a sampler of methods of inquiry found at Esalen, including gestalt, meditation, movement, and body work.

May 5–June 2
Eli Jaxon-Bear, Antoinette Varner, and guest leaders will combine hypnosis, movement, and meditation as vehicles for engaging life as a spiritual path.

Marilyn Harris Kriegel will lead a program on relationship: to self and others, to the familiar and unknown. Tools will include psychosynthesis, gestalt, garden and cookbooks.

June 2–30
In this non-certification program, participants will learn to give and receive a full body massage. Kathleen O'Shaughnessy and David Streeter will incorporate tools of yoga, movement, sound, breath, and ancient meditation practices to help expand sensory abilities.

Jackie Rosin and Kay Brownfield offer a month of psychosynthesis to explore the nature of essence. Meditation, guided imagery, music, movement, art, and individual process work will be some of the modalities used. Professionals are invited.

June 30–July 28
Jeanne Achterberg and Frank Lawlis will focus on the healing power of the imagination. Components of healing ritual, sounds and symbols of various cultures, and healing rites which combine ancient wisdom with modern knowledge will be explored.

Karuna Licht and Cynthia Johnson Bianchetta will facilitate the spirit of creativity as a healing journey of self-discovery and self-expression through various artistic processes, meditation, and ritual.

July 28–August 25
Design your own program, alone and with other participants, using your intuition, intelligence, and imagination. Find surprising resources; harvest and recycle your energies. Facilitated by Janet Lederman.

Mary (Devarani) Goldenson will repeat her program of February 10-March 10.

August 25–September 22
Phyllis Shankman offers a month of in-depth group process/gestalt work using the creative arts, as well as meditation, massage, and movement for self-exploration and healing.

Julian Silverman will repeat his program of April 7-May 5.

September 22–October 20
Til Luchau and guest teachers will use body work, movement, yoga, meditation, and sensory awareness practices to explore the nature of somatic experience.

Dianne Laurence will use theater games as a forum for nurturing a relationship with one's creative force through imagination, spontaneity, and emotional honesty. Performances will be presented at month's end.

JOYCE LYKE

October 20–November 17
John Soper will repeat his program of March 10-April 7.

Jackie Rosin and Kay Brownfield will repeat their program of June 2-30.

November 17–December 15
Karuna Licht will lead a monthlong journey using the creative processes of art, ritual, and guided imagery as the language of the heart.

Participants in William Pennell Rock's group will use psychodrama to clarify and reunite their inner feminine and masculine qualities. They will work individually, then come together in a group performance for the Esalen community.

In as much as the Work Study Program is a complete program in itself, please do not plan to take regularly scheduled catalog workshops during your stay. Professional services, such as massage, are available at staff rates.

Accommodations are shared, with up to four people to a room, usually at South Coast Center, a staff complex located 1½ miles north of Esalen.

A deposit of $350 in U.S. currency is required with your application. The cost of all 28-day Work Study Programs, except the two-month body work program, is $700 the first month, $650 the second month, $600 the third month. Work students may be invited to remain for a second or third month depending on space available and community needs. There are no scholarships available for the Work Study Program.

For more information contact Bette Dingman: (408) 667-3010.

Note: Application is not registration in the program. Registration is made only after approval of application and upon receipt of deposit. The balance of the fee is due on arrival. Of the original deposit, $100 is nonrefundable and may be transferred to other programs within one year of receipt. Please return the application form (see page 51) with your deposit to:

■ Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

THE BIG HOUSE RENOVATION:

LAURANCE ROCKEFELLER'S GIFT

TOM GALLOWAY

In early 1990 we asked Laurance Rockefeller, who over the past ten years has been Esalen's most generous financial supporter, to contribute $250,000 toward the renovation of the Big House. The house had not been remodeled since its construction in 1937 and needed major repair. With an improved Big House, we hope to extend Esalen's programming into the workplace by hosting groups of individuals who work together—be they corporate, governmental, educational, scientific, legal—in one building.

(continues)

The Big House Renovation: Laurance Rockefeller's Gift

Such groups would spend five days at Esalen exploring various practices with workshop leaders of their choice, and then take these new approaches back to their work environment. Since Esalen's founding in 1961, virtually all workshops have been for individuals who have no contact with each other outside Esalen (except couples). Mr. Rockefeller was enthusiastic about our plan because it improved our most important facility and created a new role for Esalen—humanizing the work environment.

During the spring of 1990, the main portion of the Big House was completely gutted. The original wiring and plumbing were replaced, bathrooms were added, the kitchen was redone, a deck was added connecting the living and dining rooms, new furnaces were installed, and a handicapped-accessible room and bath were constructed. The rooms behind the Big House, called the annex, will be renovated in the fall of 1991. The entire structure will have ten bedrooms, accommodating up to twenty individuals, and ten bathrooms.

The total cost, including construction, architectural fees, all interior furnishings and appliances, will approach one million dollars when the annex is complete $250,000 of this was covered by the Rockefeller gift, the balance by Esalen. The cost is high because the Big House essentially had to be rebuilt from the inside out, and Esalen's remote location increases construction costs. We extend our deep gratitude to all those involved, particularly: Bay Building and Design, general contractor; Robert Goldspink, architect; Vantress Design Associates, interior design; Tom Brenner, Esalen's manager of maintenance and construction; and Candida Condor, Cynthia Bianchetta, Ned Callahan, and Anita Donovan, who compose Esalen's design team.

We are now scheduling groups, to start in the fall of 1991. Each group creates its own program, drawing from the full array of Esalen workshop leaders. For example, a management team from one large company is planning a week which will include movement and meditation in the early morning followed by structured risk-taking and team-building in the Big Sur wilderness, massage in the afternoon, and group process and discussion each evening. Breakfast and dinner will be served in the Big House every day so the group can stay together during the week.

We expect to schedule twelve five-day groups such as this each year, leaving the Big House available for regular catalog programming three-quarters of the time. Anyone wishing to schedule a group or discuss possible formats should contact Pat LeWine, program coordinator, (408) 667-3038.

■ INVITATIONAL CONFERENCES

In its continuing commitment to the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Currently scheduled programs and their conveners are listed here.

April 28–May 3
Toward a Marriage of Ecology and Economics

Cosponsored by Esalen Institute & the Land Institute (Salina, Kansas)

Coordinated by Wes Jackson

This will be a gathering of ecologists, economists, and others who are looking for parallels between nature's economy and a possible human economy which features "cycling" rather than merely extraction.

June 2–7
The Phenomenology of the Body

Convened by Don Hanlon Johnson & Elizabeth Behnke

A group of academic philosophers trained in phenomenological reflection will gather with somatic practitioners to think through the presuppositions underlying the contemporary resurgence of interest in the body. Particular emphasis will be placed on how these presuppositions affect the practice of body therapies.

June 9–14
History, Religion, and Evolution of Consciousness

Convened by Robert McDermott

This seminar will focus on the history and variety of religious experience in relation to the evolution of consciousness. While many of the participants will speak from the perspective of either transpersonal psychology or spiritual-scientific (anthroposophical) epistemology, this seminar is intended to encompass a variety of points of view.

June 16–21
The Future of Reality

Convened by Howard Rheingold

Key thinkers, scientists, and engineers from around the world who are creating "virtual reality" technology will discuss the wider ethical, spiritual, and social dimensions of what they're doing and the implications of this technology.

June 23–28
A Soviet/American Literary Conference

Cosponsored by the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program and the Russian/American Institute

Convened by Viktor Yerofeev & David Bathea

Leading Soviet and American scholars of literature from Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Middlebury, Wisconsin, Moscow State University, and Leningrad University will discuss contemporary books on the subjects of religion and culture, history and culture, language and culture, and literature and culture.

July 14–19
The New Older Woman

Convened by Patricia Faul, Ilene Tuttle, Peggy Downs & Virginia Mudd

By the year 2000, for the first time in history older people will outnumber the young. Most will be women—more active, better educated—with longer life-expectancies than ever before and possessing singularly independent means and minds. Twelve older women who have made significant contributions in their fields will come together to discuss options for this new older woman and develop a framework for future dialogue.

■ WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 45-46. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

With the completion of the Big House renovation in June, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance; groups may stay up to seven days. For more information contact Pat LeWine, (408) 667-3038.

Finally, there are other events which enrich life at Esalen. There are frequent forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, choirs, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. And, there is a community event schedule that is offered; please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Work Study Program

The Work Study Program is an intensive work-oriented program for individuals who want to make a directed, personal commitment to self-exploration and growth and a contribution to the Esalen community. The Meeting Room (1990)

Weekend of May 3–5

Weekend Massage Intensive

Char Pias Brenner & Dean Marson

Massage is a practical approach to stress relief and greater sensory awareness. This weekend workshop will provide instruction in basic methods used in giving a massage, with additional work on quality of touch, breath awareness, centering, and sensitive rapport between partners.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 42-43. $350

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

The Armstrongs write: "As a result of our experience with workshop participants over the past twenty-six years, we know that everyone is intuitive; it's part of humankind's standard equipment.

"Our goal in this workshop is for each participant to experience their own innate intuitive ability, to use it at will, which happens when an individual allows the creative part of the Divine Self to emerge. This emergence will be facilitated through exercises and meditation, with a minimum of discussion, designed to aid participants in recognizing their particular style of perception and trusting the intuitive input they receive. Anne will use her intuitive abilities developed over the past thirty years to guide participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

"Although the primary focus of the workshop will be intuition development, spiritual, ethical, and Divine aspects of the intuitive/psychic process will also be addressed. We believe that intuition development should be the outgrowth of a healthy spiritual practice since it is a gateway to Divine Wisdom. Basic objectives will be to demystify the intuitive/psychic process and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives—personal, professional, and spiritual. There will be time for personal psychic scans and practice on selected cases." $350

The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning. $350

Music and Dance of Haiti

Blanche Brown & John Scovel

Blanche Brown has taught jazz dance, Afro-Haitian dance, and traditional Haitian dance for the past eighteen years. She integrates the dance, music, and culture of the Haitian people in her work, teaching traditional dance steps as well as the background and spirituality of these dances. She is the artistic director of the performing ensemble Roots of Haiti, which strives within the performance to educate its audience to the heritage, versatility, and nuances of Haitian culture brought about by the amalgamation of the many nations of African slaves.

John Scovel has studied and played traditional drums for fourteen years. He combines his knowledge of Haitian and African cultures with his performing experience in demonstrating the relationship between the dance and the drum. In Haitian dance, the drum rhythms that correspond to each movement not only inspire the dancer but provide the very structure for the dance patterns.

In this weekend workshop, the leaders will create rhythms and energies to enthuse and inspire the participant. $350

Week of May 5–10

A Week with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $675

Courage, Risk, and Self-Acceptance

Phyllis Shankman

Although it is understood that growth and change require courage and the willingness to risk, many of us find ourselves unable or unwilling to make a move until we feel certain of the outcome. And while we hesitate, we often miss out on enjoyable or important opportunities. Courage requires a blend of self-acceptance, heart, boldness of spirit, a sense of humor, and the willingness to trust oneself and the goodwill of others.

This workshop offers participants a supportive environment in which to experience themselves as courageous and able to successfully take risks. Group activities will include gestalt, discussion, massage, meditation, art imagery exercises, dance, and play. $675

Dianne Lawrence

Participants in this workshop will choose a site on the Esalen property and create a performance for it. Previous acting experience is not necessary, only the desire to communicate something genuine to an audience.

The class will be limited to six people. In addition to working with the group, each person will receive individual attention and direction. They will present their performances on the last afternoon in front of an audience that will be guided from site to site. Each performance will take 10-15 minutes.

Risk-taking and trust can stimulate self-discovery and expression. Performance can be exciting and magical as subconscious impulses make synchronistic connections with the environment. Everyone has something to share, and there is nothing quite like an audience's enthusiastic response when this is done with a combination of honesty and imagination. This workshop provides the opportunity to begin with little else but oneself and make something interesting and meaningful happen. $675

Yoga: A Week of Learning and Rejuvenation

Ganga White & Tracey Rich

Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and which combines grace and flow with postures, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the art of enlightened living.

Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies. Through Jnana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.

Participants of all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at: White Lotus, 2500 San Marcos Pass, Santa Barbara, CA 93105; (805) 964-1944. $675

Socratic Midwifery: Uncovering Beliefs that Block Human Excellence

Pierre Grimes

Pierre Grimes will discuss the Socratic art of philosophical midwifery and show how it addresses a new class of human problems: the pathologos. A pathologos is a false belief about oneself and one's reality, and although its presence is unsuspected, it is unquestioningly accepted as true. It exerts a pervasive influence upon our lives and is irreconcilable with the attainment of our highest goals. It produces the sense of being bound by our past and renders us unable to secure our profoundest ideals. Philosophic midwifery provides a method for discovering the origin, maintenance, and dissolution of the pathologos which functions behind and through our problems, and offers a new way of understanding the function of the mind.

This workshop will offer participants insights into the nature of their own pathologos and an understanding of how it is passed on by each generation. It will explore family dynamics and how to cultivate excellence in the family.

Philosophical midwifery is unlike the interpretive systems of psychology. Even though a mode of Socratic dialectic has been adapted by psychologists for clinical practice (called Dialectical Rational Psychotherapy), its more profound use is for those who seek to achieve the most significant goal of human excellence: to know thyself.

Selections from Pierre Grime's book, Philosophical Midwifery as a Mode of Rational Psychotherapy and its Validation, will be available to participants, as will his computer program, To Artemis: The Challenge to Know Thyself.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 42-43. $675

Weekend of May 10–12

Introduction to Gestalt Practice

Christine Stewart Price & Gestalt Staff

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear—
And when used—is inexhaustible.
—Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form—nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental—evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is *intra*personal rather than *inter*personal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Recommended reading: Fritz Perls, Gestalt Therapy Verbatim (Real People Press); John Heider, The Tao of Leadership (Humanics); Ram Dass and Paul Gorman, How Can I Help? (Knopf).

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 42-43. $350

Men Together

Robert Hall & Richard Strozzi Heckler

Reclaim your maleness in an atmosphere of trust and support. Join other men in talking, moving, playing, and sitting. Share emotions and feelings that have long been withheld; come closer to yourself and other men.

The seminar leaders, Robert Hall and Richard Strozzi Heckler, have been best friends and professional colleagues for over twenty years. They are both fathers; they are cofounders of the Lomi School; they share the same spiritual practice. Robert is gay, Richard is straight.

Recommended reading: Heckler, In Search of the Warrior Spirit (North Atlantic Books). $350

Creative Writing Brainstorming

Herbert Gold

From feeling to expression to communication, this workshop will carry participants into the possibilities of making literature. Exploring an experience different for everyone, yet shared by all, they will probe for the riches within.

Participants should bring typewriter, word processor, pen, soft pencil, or clay tablets and stylus to the meetings. A situation will be called forth—love, death, ambition, pride, fear, hatred, jealousy—and after preparation in the discussion, participants will write. Then they will read and rewrite each other's work. They may expect to go from truth to lying: from recollection to art.

What may develop is a sense of style and control as a part of the mastery of experience. Participants will practice the freedom of imagination by giving shape to it. $350

Vision Painting for Women

Helen Malcolm-Neeb

Vision painting is a process through which a personal map of the future is crafted. Each aspect of the person's life is addressed from its highest potential. Through meditation, guided visioning, and play, dreams are organized into images. The vision painting is an affirmation of the individual in her professional, spiritual, and personal life.

This is an opportunity for women to affirm the spirit within from a place of play, creativity, and strength. The maps they create will use symbols, pictures, color, and words. Beginners and artists are welcome. Create a vision of your future as you want it to be.

$350 (plus $20 materials fee paid directly to the leader)

Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center

Week of May 12–17

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for: people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based on trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $675

David Darling

This workshop will help soothe and heal the inner self by directing energy into sound-making, rhythmic grooving, chant-shouting, poem- and sculpture-designing, group productions, breath perception, meditation, smiling, clowning, chamber music inspiration, instrument-inventing, and humor.

Participants are asked to bring instruments that they want to learn to play or that they can play now. Percussion instruments will be provided. The voice will be, of course, the center of the entire process: where it is, how it is, what to do with it. $675

Releasing Stress, Returning to Self

Daniel Bianchetta & Cynthia Johnson Bianchetta

Our busy lives seem to take us everywhere but here and now. Frequently, in our human doingness we forget about our human beingness. But if we stop and listen to our inner voice, we can cultivate a relationship to the self that will remind us of our essential nature and return us to the aliveness of the moment.

This week will be spent renewing, relaxing, refreshing, revitalizing, and practicing how to maintain equanimity in the midst of everyday life: under pressure, under stress, in a hurry, or anytime. Participants will use the portable tools of energy awareness, intuition, play, meditation, gentle risk-taking, aikido, and movement to return to the self. They will be encouraged to reacquaint themselves with "the child inside," a place of simplicity, innocence, and vulnerability. It is from this center that knowledge of the self emerges and which can help turn the heart homeward. There is really nowhere else to go.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 42-43. $675

Advanced Hypnosis: Exploring Beyond the Edges of Identity

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

The leaders write: "We are all living in trance—a trance of the senses, a bubble of perception. Different traditions call it by different names. For the Hindus it is Maya, for the Buddhists it is Samsara. Padmasambhava, an Indian tantric hero of early Tibet, said, 'Heaven and hell are the same thing, both creations of mind.'

"The senses condition and create our relationship with the world. Belief in the senses is the jail of the spirit. The world is as it is; it is our relationship to it that creates suffering or bliss. In this seminar for helping professionals, participants will explore how people create reality, and then practice various strategies of intervention. Vedanta and Buddhism will be used as the context for the model of Ericksonian hypnosis.

"Interpersonal work takes place on one of three levels: symptom removal, ego strengthening, and ego transcendence. This seminar will address all three levels in theory and practice, and participants will have the opportunity to work both personally and professionally. Personal unfolding will go hand in hand with the didactic learning; however, method will be considered secondary to the growth of each participant.

"The enneagram of character fixation will be an integral part of the week, and open seat sessions will be available. There will be daily zazen and Taoist yoga stretching."

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 42-43. $675

Weekend of May 17–19

Experiencing Esalen

Experiencing Esalen Staff

This workshop is designed for people who have not previously been to Esalen. Its emphasis is on finding those approaches to self-awareness that work most effectively for the individual participant. These may include: sensory awareness, gestalt practice, group process, guided fantasy, meditation, massage. There is also time to explore the natural magnificence of the Big Sur coast.

Recommended reading: Fritz Perls, Gestalt Therapy Verbatim (Real People Press). $350

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clearly," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continual change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness throughout the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life. $350

Terence McKenna

This seminar will explore the literature of visions and ideas that constitutes the Corpus Hermeticum. Through reading and discussion of the Trismegistic Hymns, participants will discover Hermetic thought to be a bridge of startling literary beauty connecting the world of ancient Greek and Gnostic philosophical thinking to later traditions of alchemical thought and, in our own era, the rebirth of psychedelic shamanism. The Hermetic and alchemical contribution to a millenarian recasting of human dreams and society will be the overarching theme of this weekend.

Recommended reading: Walter Scott, editor, Hermetica (4 vols.); Francis Yates, Giordano Bruno and the Hermetic Tradition. $350

Finding Inspired Work in Mid-Life

Peller Marion

At 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people don't live to be 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them largely because their lives seem effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop, drawing from a conceptual base of adult development theory and models of aging, will explore these issues. Through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, What's my dissatisfaction? Who am I? What's my definition of success?, the leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain a clarity, focus, and direction of one's life contributions. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 42-43. $350

Week of May 19–24

Five-Day Massage Intensive

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy & Rita Thangaraj

This workshop is for those individuals who are just beginning to explore touch as deep communication. The central theme will be primary approaches to full body massage, which the leaders will introduce through demonstration and experiential exchanges. Self-awareness through movement, sound, and breath will be used to enhance the senses. Discussion will offer insights into various approaches to body work and how they address both the physiological and emotional body.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 42-43. $675

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as base camp, the group will explore different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff

In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality. This loss fosters suffering.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one's authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work. $675

Presence: A Fluidity of Being

Elisa Lodge

Elisa Lodge writes: "Presence is a power that arises from a deep sense of self-worth and trust. It reflects a broadened vision and whole-hearted acceptance of the varied facets of being. It is a state of dynamic balance where there is no unnecessary strain of self-defeating awkwardness. One is at home in oneself and at ease with the world.

"During this week, participants can gain a deepened appreciation of the elements in themselves that contribute to this timeless state of fluidity and ease. They will have an opportunity to experiment and explore how their bodies' shapes and forms, emotional histories, and self-images are intimately intertwined. This growing awareness is the basic grounding from which the creative experience of presence can be known. Movement patterns, the ways we walk and breathe, also reveal how we inhibit or allow our personal power. As we become more comfortable with ourselves, we transform not only the way we might carry our head or make contact with another, but our whole way of being in the world.

"This work is based on an approach woven from gestalt, psychosynthesis, Rolf movement, and performance art. Video feedback will be used." $675

Letting Go–Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Beliefs, fears, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate—in the moment—to ourselves, to our work, and to those we love.

The workshop includes periods of intense body work for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dream work, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge. $350

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

We tend to assume that mastery is available only to those born with exceptional abilities. But mastery is not a goal or destination. It is a journey that every one of us can take, provided we have the right map.

This workshop offers clear directions for the journey of mastery in whatever field you may choose. It will include discussion, demonstration, and movement exercises from Leonard Energy Training (LET) which emphasize mastery in daily life. For those familiar with LET, this workshop will present new material. Some of the topics to be addressed:

- Five keys to mastery
- How to avoid being a Dabbler, Obsessive, or Hacker
- Creating a vision
- The secrets of practice
- Staying balanced and centered on the path of mastery
- Avoiding pitfalls
- Playing the edge
- Loving the plateau
- Dealing with conflict
- Negotiating with change
- Staying on the path
- Getting energy from mastery

This workshop involves physical movement, but is not strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming

Stephen LaBerge

Dreams are worlds of wonder where anything imaginable can happen. However, most of the time we sleep through our nightly journeys, unaware of the opportunities available. Only upon awakening do we realize that we have been dreaming.

But we are not bound to forever sleepwalk through our dreams. Lucid dreams are dreams in which we know we are dreaming while we're dreaming. Lucid dreamers are fully conscious that the world they are experiencing in the dream is a mental creation and that they are completely free to act in the dream without constraint by laws of physics or society.

Research has shown that people can develop the skill of lucid dreaming. Workshop participants will practice methods for inducing lucid dreams and explore the possibilities of their uses: creative problem-solving, healing, adventure, self-exploration/integration. A presentation of recent scientific research will demonstrate how dreams profoundly affect our brains and bodies.

The scope of this seminar will extend beyond dreams and dream lucidity to provide an understanding of the nature of our experience of the world and the origins of our perceptions of reality. It will suggest that all perceptions are illusory and that the waking reality we experience is, like dreaming, a mental construction.

Psychology of Spiritual Essence: Introduction to Ridhwan Work

Ridhwan Work School Faculty

Ridhwan, translated from Arabic, means contentment. The Ridhwan Work School is dedicated to the development of the human essence. It uses primarily the Diamond Approach, a modern, psychological method used as a spiritual practice, to guide students to a precise understanding of their personal experience. By understanding one's discontent, longing, emptiness, and life situations, it becomes possible to realize the innate aspects of love, awareness, will, and joy. Such precision offers psychological clarity and ultimately leads to spiritual presence.

This workshop will use conceptual presentations, interpersonal exercises, meditation, and personal emotional work to activate the essential aspects of presence and resolve the psychological barriers against them. It is for individuals who have done a lot of emotional and growth work, and speaks to the longing of the heart for what will truly fulfill it. In such a short time, participants may only get a taste of this essence, but they can go a long way in terms of awakening their sleeping potential. Private sessions will be available for an additional fee.

Opening the Feelings

Dale Cummings & Gena Louise Sorensen

Participants will employ Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants. Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexuality intensify and merge. $675

Acting is Doing

Stephen Book

Remove the restrictions, both inner and outer, which suppress the spontaneity of any human being, and his/her natural spontaneity will show itself as artistic creativeness. In this workshop, complicated theater techniques are transformed into simple game forms which produce spontaneous behavior through playing. True playing is spontaneous and requires focus—the absorption in what one is doing, to the exclusion of other thoughts.

This experiential workshop, which is designed for the layperson, emphasizes playing and focusing. Participants will heighten and focus energy, increase communication skills, extend powers of observation and concentration, and improvise imagined realities. $675

Maggie Seeley & Mark Lipton

Differences in personal preference create excitement, attraction, and synergy. They can also be the source of great tension and misunderstanding between friends, lovers, colleagues, and family members. Understanding differences can transform these relationships. The Myers-Briggs Type Indicator, based on Carl Jung's observations of personality and behavior, is a simple, accurate indicator of personal preference in the areas of:

- Focus of attention (extraversion/introversion)
- Information collection (sensing/intuition)
- Processing of data (thinking/feeling)
- Decision-making (judgment/perception)

Workshop participants will use the Myers-Briggs to become more aware of their own needs and preferences, thereby gaining a fuller appreciation of themselves. Their focus will then shift to relationships with others. The course will mix theory, practice, type-watching, and field work. By mid-week, participants will choose an area of concentration with the MBTI, such as counseling, management, relationships, teaching, marketing, spiritual development. $675

Self-Expression through American Sign Language

Lorraine Peters

American Sign Language, or ASL, is most often thought of in terms of communication for deaf people. Rich with facial expression, pantomime, gestures, and specific signs made with the hands and fingers, it embodies the spirit and cultural uniqueness of the deaf. But ASL can also be a vehicle for the hearing to explore subtle forms of non-verbal communication. It offers them an alternative means of self-expression as they step out from behind the mask of words and reveal themselves through facial expression and body movement.

This workshop invites participants to tune in to their emotions and become aware of the gestures and postures that convey them. While specific ASL signs will be taught, participants will be encouraged to express their individuality by creating new signs of their own. Music, movement, and other experiential activities will be used in an atmosphere of humor and play.

This weekend is for those who want to become more emotionally expressive, for those in theater or dance, or for those who just want to begin learning American Sign Language. Previous sign language skills are not necessary.

Reviewing and Revisioning Your Life

Sam Keen

Periodically, everyone needs to review and revision their lives. Every decade of the life cycle brings new tasks, goals, pleasures, and horizons. When the trauma of divorce, illness, tragedy, or sudden good fortune strikes, or when dissatisfaction, boredom, or depression sets in, it is time to take stock of the past and look for a new vision of the future. This seminar will guide participants in this exploration through questions such as:

- Where are you in your life cycle?
- Thus far what have you accomplished, experienced?
- What's old, stale, worn-out, boring?
- What's new, interesting, exciting, appealing?
- What decisions do you need to make?
- How are you haunted by your past?
- What do you fear?
- What wounds still fester?
- What destructive patterns do you repeat?
- What debts of gratitude have you not repaid?
- What hasn't happened yet?
- What promises and potentials are still unfulfilled?
- What are your dreams, values, visions?

To help in this review and revision, participants are asked to assemble objects that might be useful to a biographer: photos from different times, diaries from over the years, newspaper clippings of personal accomplishments, objects of special importance, remembered songs. Bring a blank book and colored pencils. $350

Group Process: The Key

Will & Ailish Schutz

Focus will be on the principles of group process for group leaders and for people who want personal experience in a group. Discussion will view the events in this group as a paradigm for understanding individuals, relationships, and social events such as: business dilemmas, child rearing practices, world revolutions, and the sweeping question of how we make the transition from authoritarianism to democracy.

A Week with David Schiffman

To make effective, creative choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set—the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressures of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

In this week, participants will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and bouyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Susan Harper & Steven Harper

Nature is a primary teacher of movement, creativity, and awareness. Being outdoors in the richness and beauty of nature awakens our outer senses. Continuum movement takes us inward, heightening our awareness of our inner senses. These five days will combine both practices, integrating the subtle inner explorations that Continuum movement inspires with the activity of day-hiking in the magnificent Big Sur backcountry.

The day-hikes will introduce participants to basic and increasingly-refined awareness practices to enhance their sensitivity to all that wilderness and being out-of-doors offer. In doing so, they not only will have contact with the natural world, they will have the opportunity to reawaken those elements of wilderness within.

In the indoor sessions, participants will explore movements which express and embody what they have taken in during their walks, invigorating their ability to feel what they see in nature and to feel their own inner nature. Engaging with this sensual environment, they will play with movement, breath, sound, dreams, and ritual.

This is a time for contact with nature and wilderness, inside and out. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance. $675

Poetry as Food for a Full Life

Brother David Steindl-Rast

Nature and people at Esalen help poetry come alive. So many have found this to be true that Brother David is offering a new selection of poems in the same workshop format and setting as last year.

Poems are high-energy food for life's journey. Some people thrive on this fare; for them, this weekend will provide the delights of a festive meal. Others have been estranged from poetry ever since high school days; in this workshop they may discover rooms of their own house which they have never entered before.

Why does school spoil for many young people the taste for poetry? Why does Sunday School turn so many away from religion? These two phenomena are closely related. Yet, it is never too late to discover the divine poet child within us, a child more alive than we ever dreamed we could be. $350

Christine Stewart Price & Joyce Lyke

This workshop is open only to people who have previously participated in a Gestalt Practice workshop and who would like to further explore this form in theory as well as through personal experience. It is especially appropriate for those in the helping professions, such as counselors, body workers, and teachers, who are interested in integrating this approach into their current practice. The format will include open seat sessions with the leaders, structured exercises where participants work with each other, didactic presentation, and discussion. Persons without previous experience in gestalt are referred to the Gestalt Practice workshop scheduled for May 10-12, or they may write a letter of application to Christine Stewart Price, c/o Esalen Institute.

Childhood Sexual Abuse: A Healing

Jessica Moore Britt & Scott Layton

To guard against the hurts, fears, and confusion that sexual invasion of a child's physical and psychic boundaries can create, the child often abandons the place of conflict—the body. This withdrawal, though protective in nature, slowly begins to separate the child from her/his essential nature. This may be reflected in tension patterns, numbness, and oversensitivity and may further the child's sense of alienation from the world and self.

During these seven days, participants will move gently toward reintegrating their bodies and feelings with self. They will use gestalt practice, Reichian breath work, movement, touch, and meditation to re-enter their private world of memories and feelings. They may gain a deeper understanding that the learned idea of self as bad, based on the sexual abuse, is not the essential truth of who they are. The focus will be on allowing the hurt, negative feelings and doubts to be acknowledged, felt, and used as energetic seeds for reawakening a positive sense of self. Through the supportive group atmosphere, participants may discover that it is safe once again to embody beauty, life, and love.

Film and the Quest for Wholeness

Francis Lu & Brother David Steindl-Rast

Film has become the leading medium for exploring the hero's journey and the meaning of life. A good film can help us enter the various phases of our quest for wholeness: integrating our shadow; accepting the animus or anima; letting our true self become manifest; discovering the transcendent meaning of immediate experience. Many have been helped by finding the right film at the right time.

Should this help be left to chance? Like reading a novel, viewing a film is an art. Practicing this art can heighten our enjoyment and deepen our insight.

Francis Lu and Brother David consider enjoyment and insight the twofold goal of this workshop: in the incomparable setting of Esalen, a film festival and more than that. $675

Weekend of June 14–16

Introduction to Rudolf Steiner

Robert McDermott

This workshop will introduce the life and work of Rudolf Steiner, the early twentieth century spiritual scientist and founder of the Waldorf School Movement. Robert McDermott, author of The Essential Steiner, will discuss and expand on selections from his book grouped under five headings: knowledge, nature, and spirit; spiritual anthropology; historical vision; esoteric Christianity; society and education.

Although the content of the discussion will depend on the interests of the participants, emphasis will probably fall on Steiner's theory of supersensible perception, including its methodology and application in the sciences, arts, and human development (particularly in relation to child development and education).

No previous knowledge of the subject matter is required, but the value of the workshop will be enhanced by prior reading of McDermott's The Essential Steiner (Harper & Row, 1984). $350

Healing, Meditation, and Dzogchen

Sogyal Rinpoche

In the stillness and presence of meditation, we discover a pure awareness beyond the ordinary thinking mind and catch a glimpse of our true nature, something long lost to the busyness and turmoil of our lives. The core of meditation practice is the releasing of heart and mind in deep ease and relaxation, dissolving tensions, and connecting with a tremendous source of healing within. Health is a state where all aspects of body and mind are in balance. Through meditation practice, the mind's natural freedom begins to shine through whatever arises in everyday life, bringing us confidence and skillfulness in our action.

At the heart of the Buddha's teachings lie the ancient meditation practices of Dzogchen, taught by Sogyal Rinpoche, heir to the 2,500 years of wisdom of Buddha. Rinpoche blends teaching with meditation, exploring the expansive Dzogchen view and showing how it can be integrated into everyday living. This weekend will be a valuable introduction for beginners and of special interest to those who have attended Rinpoche's previous workshops and wish to deepen their practice.

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive

Ayala Pines

When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. Unfortunately, more often than not, with the dampening effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, and it is not caused by major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfactions, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find their own romantic schemata and to rekindle the romantic images they shared at the beginning of their relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive in their relationships and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods to improve their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop will be of value to anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility—painlessly and immediately.

A Week with Laura DeNuccio and John Dudley

Learning communities are being built everywhere.

The whole world is a learning community! Where is the True Human Being?—Rumi

We live in a time when many people are called to a higher consciousness that transcends merely material concerns. Yet, paradoxically, this calling, without a grounding in nature and the body, may only lead to partial realization. This workshop seeks to heal the split between vision and the world.

Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can increase their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Tools for this self-discovery include movement, music, breath, and various meditations to enliven, balance, and transform energy blocks in the body.

This workshop will be a time of nourishment. Participants will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one's inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What's meaningful and significant to you? What's truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth.

While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group can experiment with co-creating community, an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore the ever-unfolding adventure of spirit.

Golf in the Kingdom . . . an exploration of the inner game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart.—Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It may be experienced not simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

In these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two of the days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

The Body is Spirit

Robert Hall

There is no difference between the bioenergetic streaming of daily body life and the divine spirit current or life force. We experience both as an ongoing felt body sense. The human ego operates under the false assumption that it is somehow separate from that sense. So we spend our lives in constant negotiation and seeking: the so-called human condition. From this position, alienation is inevitable.

This workshop is designed to explore the possibility that we are that felt body sense, that spirit current, and we are constantly, by nature, in relationship to everyone and everything that exists. Hopefully, we'll laugh a lot, too. There will be time for gestalt, individual body work, meditation, and getting to know each other well in a short time. $675

Helen Palmer

The enneagram is an ancient psychological typology that describes nine personality types and their interrelationships. Each type is defined by a chief mental and emotional preoccupation to which attention habitually returns. The types correlate well with the current categories of psychological practice, but can open us to the fact that the repeating preoccupations of heart and mind that we in the West tend to dismiss as merely neurotic can also be used as access points into states of awareness like empathy, omniscience, and love.

Beginning with a review of the nine types, this workshop will focus on advanced material that can best be understood through oral teaching methods. These include learning to recognize type by listening to the differences in people's stories, by learning to ask key questions, and by paying attention to one's own internal impressions when in the presence of the different types.

This program is for those who are already familiar with the nine personality types and who wish to broaden their understanding of the system. It is intended for anyone who is interested in: recognizing ways in which the nine types relate to each other in intimate partnership and in work-related settings; determining strategies for working with the types; developing competency with the patterns of attention that support each type; gaining an understanding of the higher human abilities that can develop from working with the issues of type. This intensive can be applied as one of the requirements for the Enneagram Professional Training Program.

Please note: Enrollment in this workshop presupposes previous work with the enneagram. The emphasis will be on inner material, but not personal process work. It will be a large group, with a maximum enrollment of 40.

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you—singing. $350

Healing the Healer: A Workshop for Helping Professionals

Peter Finkelstein

Working in the field of health care brings the practitioner into contact with sorrow and death. And although health care professionals accumulate great emotional burdens, many do not pay enough attention to staying whole, integrated, and non-depressed while doing this work. Often, in fact, institutional arrangements foster the opposite: isolation, dehumanization, withdrawal. Hence, it remains for the practitioner to find a personal approach in which to process sorrow, frustration, and fear, both wisely and well.

The central exercises in this workshop will be the telling of stories from the world of health care. Each participant will tell of an event from their practice, one that deeply moved them, with the focus on the telling, that is, telling the story well, fully inhabiting it in all its dimensions. Group members will then discuss the story: what it reveals about the health care profession and what it reveals about the teller. Through such telling we can reveal and heal those sometimes invisible wounds that interfere with our own growth and ability to continue helping others. Guided imagery, dream interpretation, didactic material, and group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Special attention will be given to creating a setting of trust and to understanding the properties of such settings.

Image and Insight: The Integration of Art and Physics

Leonard Shlain

The origin of the word "physics" means nature. Both artists and physicists are engaged in an ongoing attempt to describe nature's reality. The artist uses chiefly image and metaphor; the physicist, number and equation. This seminar will explore the connections between the conceptual ideas inherent in revolutionary art movements and the visionary breakthroughs that have occurred in physics.

Throughout history, but particularly in the modern era, the artist sees the world in a new way. Later, the physicist discovers a new way to think about the world. When these two opposing viewpoints are superimposed on each other, their images and insights are seen to have an uncanny similarity. In this seminar, Leonard Shlain will strive to demonstrate that they are but two different aspects of the same reality.

The changing view of three basic constructs—space, time, and light—in various periods of art, science, and culture will be the basis for a slide show and discussion that explore the reciprocal nature between cubism and a new concept of space, futurism and a new concept of time, and fauvism as a new concept of light. From there, attention will turn to a theory of consciousness which posits the split brain model in the individual as the source of the art/science division in the general culture. Stressing the need to combine the two hemispheric viewpoints, this seminar will examine the benefits that accrue when art is seen in terms of its precognitive ability, and when the imagery of modern physics is understood.

There will be no equations and one need not have a background in either art or physics to enjoy and participate in this workshop. The only prerequisites are a sense of wonder, an open mind, and an innate curiosity.

Zen Practice

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy writes: "We can use the mind to penetrate thought, to the place behind thought, where all thought originates. Zazen is a form of sitting meditation. Meditation forms the heart, soul, blood, and backbone of Buddhist perspective. It is austere and direct. We strip awareness to the finite weavings of mind and breath—the two elements most basic to existence. From this place, the Large Mind can be explored.

"During these five days, sitting practice will be enhanced by Hatha Yoga sessions, movement, and stretching. The week will include dialogue, teaching stories, a brief historical perspective of Zen Buddhism, and a day of silence to quiet the nervous system. However, the major portion of time will be directed toward establishing equilibrium in the core practice. Participants are asked to wear loose, layered clothing." $675

Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

In the moment before a new idea unfolds, our attention becomes so fully focused that time seems to disappear. Perhaps, without quite realizing it, we forget where we are and what's around us. These spontaneous states are the stuff out of which hypnotic experience unfolds and through which unconscious possibilities take form.

In this workshop, participants will investigate the hypnotic approaches developed by Milton Erickson and the systemic principles generated from Gregory Bateson's research in communication. They will explore how unconscious processes can be mobilized to creatively disrupt limiting life patterns, to organize innovative behaviors outside the range of normal conscious controls, and to more fully optimize their current living and work situations. Structured trance experiments and discussion will support the week's work.

This workshop may be of special interest to those in the helping professions as well as managers who want to expand their frames of reference and extend their understanding of Ericksonian hypnosis and communication skills. $675

Language of the Drums: African Percussion, Chanting, and Dance

Babatunde Olatunji with Ijalu Akanbe, Yao Tamakloe & Gordy Ryan

Nigerian musician Babatunde Olatunji has been bridging the gap between American and African culture for thirty years. In this workshop he will show how drum sounds and rhythms communicate, stimulate, and pace the activities of traditional African life. He will teach the consonants of the Yoruba language, reproducing its sounds on drums and through chants, body percussion, and dance.

This workshop is for dancers, percussionists, musicians, and anyone who wants to speak the language of the drums. Drummers can experience the dance and dancers can experience the drums. In celebration of Fourth of July week, participants will give a Wednesday night performance to the Esalen community. Bring a drum if you have one.

Please note: This has always been a popular workshop, with lots of people drumming and dancing in a small area. The energy runs high; be prepared for a crowded, exuberant atmosphere.

Olatunji will extend his stay through July 7. Please see his July 5-7 workshop description.

Painting via Creative Dreams

Rachel Heller

Rachel Heller, an Israeli artist, has developed a method that links the creative process in painting with the creative aspect of dreams. The workshop begins with one participant relating a dream. The other members of the group paint their version of the dream—using water-based acrylics, crayons, and pastels—through their own inner processes and feelings. The leader facilitates a dialogue between participants so that the creative process of the dreamer is linked to the creative process of the painters; this is done in part by enlarging, projecting, and connecting the dream to events of the previous day. The result is a single large-scale painting by the dreamer and a series of small paintings by the other participants. Both artistic strengths and individual creative processes come forth in this interplay.

Participants are asked to record a recent dream and the events of the preceding day to be used as raw material in the class. Five dreams will be chosen for the week; one will be presented each day. Prior painting experience is not necessary. Materials are provided; please note materials fee below.

$675 (plus $70 materials fee paid directly to the leader)

Personal Trance: Hypnotic Skills for the Everyday World

Norman Katz & Marc Lehrer

To become a master of personal trance requires a skillful interplay between the conscious and unconscious aspects of the self. Developing focused attention, relaxation skills, and the use of suggestion in everyday life is integral to this process. This seminar teaches how to use common shifts of consciousness to help with personal problems, habit patterns, sports and physical movement, creativity, and pain reduction, and to reinforce positive changes in these areas.

Participants will use structured inductions, humor, play, music, and storytelling to shift from one trance state to another, to recognize how others influence one's trance, and to reframe situations for optimum solutions and well-being. They will practice hypnotic skill-training, visualization, self-induction, regression, and communication methods in the Ericksonian tradition. $350

Finding the Source of Power Within

Viatcheslav Loutchkov & Brother David Steindl-Rast

There are moments when we feel clear about our ideals and find strength to stand up for them. But at times we get confused and feel pressured, badgered, or cajoled by others. In the family, at the office, among peers, the hidden question is often: Who wields the power?

Our dissatisfaction with organized religion and our political uneasiness can often be traced to the same cause: an authority crisis. Surely a most significant slogan of the late twentieth century has been "Question Authority."

There are many different ways of questioning authority. Some hold great promise, others hide dangers. Careful discernment is needed. But if we do this necessary homework, we may find that clarity and strength need not be restricted to rare moments of our life. We can tap a power within ourselves that gives us guidance for knowing and acting, and that is authority at its best.

Viatcheslav Loutchkov has firsthand experience of changes in Kremlin power policies; Brother David knows their Vatican counterparts. But the foremost concern of these two psychologists is not with official policies, but with human beings—with everyone's search for that inner clarity and strength which assures freedom regardless of circumstances.

These two resource persons will conduct this weekend in dialogue with participants and with each other. $350

Changing the World While Changing Ourselves

George Lakey

This is an experiential workshop for people who want to nurture their own growth while tackling pressing issues such as the environment, homelessness, peace, and racial conflict. Participants will address the following questions and create a specific action plan to assist them back home:

- How can we analyze grim trends without becoming discouraged?
- How can we develop smart strategies, bold actions, grass roots coalitions, and at the same time come from our hearts?
- How can our personal growth agendas serve social change, and vice versa?

The group will draw from the needs and resources of the participants and the leader's thirty years of experience in grass roots movements. The week's activities will include guided meditation, strategy games, music and poetry, group sharing, scenario writing, discussion, and a mini social-action project. $675

The Unfolding Moment: The Experience of Inner Freedom

Stephen Schoen

Our lives are folded in. We have created for ourselves a space intended for safety but hampered by confinement. This workshop offers a place for safe unfolding, respectful of the limits we are used to, but which encourages attention to those unconfined experiences which are always with us and to which we can develop a steadier access. Martin Buber's I-Thou, Lao Tzu's wu-wei or yielding, Gregory Bateson's contextual being, and Krishnamurti's unconditioned awareness illuminate this change from the limited to the limitless. Their ideas will light our way. Our actual path toward inner freedom will be shaped by our own experiencing.

Achieving Sustained High Performance

Jerry & Kathleen Fletcher

Most people have had the experience of having something they were doing "take off" and go surprisingly well, much better than expected. Yet most people assume such times are lucky accidents, that it is not possible to create or sustain such performance deliberately or without stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout.

The results from more than ten years of research and testing by the workshop presenters demonstrate that these times of exceptional performance are not accidental. Each individual has a pattern of actions that produces his or her best results. Once people learn their personal high performance patterns, they can carry out activities in a way that fits them and produce much better results for the same effort over sustained periods of time.

This seminar takes participants through a process in which they identify their individual high performance patterns and learn to apply them to their life and work. Developed through years of work with successful managers, executives, professionals, and work teams, it offers an approach to high performance that can be sustained. It is a clear alternative to the stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout that accompanies constantly forcing oneself to peak periods of high output in order to achieve high performance. $675

Fritz Smith

Zero Balancing is a simple method for aligning body structure with body energy. Western science has shown that energy and matter are fundamentally coupled; advances in psychology have shown that the body and mind are also interconnected. Zero Balancing is born out of these perceptions, with roots in both Eastern and Western concepts of body function and structure. It is based on the experience that the balance of energy and structure within the body has a direct effect on the physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual health of an individual. The structural/energetic interface of the body is beneath conscious awareness; when imbalances occur at this level, the body tends to compensate around them rather than resolve them directly. These imbalances often lead to loss of vitality, chronic body pain, and lessened potential for vibrant health. Zero Balancing assists in overcoming these imbalanced patterns through touch.

In this workshop, anatomy, physiology, and skills of touch will be reviewed. Eastern concepts of chi energy, its movement in the body and the chakra system, will be discussed. The Zero Balancing methods will be presented, including those for evaluating and balancing the structural/energetic interface of the body. The workshop will be both didactic and experiential, with the main emphasis on new body work skills, and is open to all people in the healing arts. It is approved for C.E. credit for acupuncturists (and nurses—see below), and as Z.B. I or II in the Zero Balancing certification program.

Self-Acceptance: The Freedom to Be

David Schiffman

Each of us has unique capacities to feel and express tenderness and strength, anger and affection, autonomy and needfulness, as well as compassion, humor, and wisdom. The degree to which we allow the fullness and vibrance of each of these qualities determines how alive and gratified we are.

In this workshop, participants will focus on how they diminish or affirm these essential qualities as they are expressed through their bodies, sexuality, creativity, relationship to power, friendships, and expectations. In an atmosphere of tenderness and support, participants will clarify the nature of who they are and how they can best take care of themselves, both at Esalen and on returning home. The workshop will be grounded in gestalt, group process, guided fantasy, massage, and bioenergetics. $350

Diane Egli

For the adult who would like to play a musical instrument, but never had lessons as a child, or who used to play, but hasn't since childhood, this workshop could be just the opportunity to learn to play the violin—and have fun doing it. This will be a time for participants to increase their awareness of how it feels to learn a new skill—the challenge, the excitement, the frustration, and the success of accomplishment. Included in the workshop will be various activities to enhance violin playing, such as movement, music, and rhythm exercises. Participants are asked to bring a tape recorder and tapes.

The Discipline of Harmony: Warrior Virtues Without War

Richard Strozzi Heckler

This seminar will examine the notions of aggression, initiation rites, courage, and risk-taking in the context of the warrior ideal. Does the discipline of harmony mean the taming of aggression? To live in peace do we also need to accept and understand violence? Is it possible to distinguish the warrior from war? Can the warrior virtues of courage, commitment, clarity, generosity, service, and skillful action be invoked without the catalyst of hostile fire?

These questions will be the starting point for a workshop conducted in the warrior spirit of "life at stake." Exercises taken from aikido, along with introspection, sharing, and guided meditations, will allow participants to experience the possibilities of embodying warrior virtues without war.

Recommended reading: Richard Strozzi Heckler, In Search of the Warrior Spirit (North Atlantic), The Anatomy of Change (Shambhala), and, editor, Aikido and the New Warrior (North Atlantic); J. Glenn Gray, The Warriors (Harper & Row). $350

Humor and Irreverence: Along the Path to Sanity

Paul Carter & Paula Shaw

A seeker's work is never done. Climbing the mountain of self-discovery—resurveying personal boundaries, cracking co-dependency, moving through multi-colored chakras, skirting karmic chasms, traversing transpersonal dimensions, and hiking the hierarchy of self—can be arduous. Is there no respite from the search? Can we tell any jokes along the way?

Every mountaineer needs time to recharge. Sitting around the campfire with others, making light of the day's difficulties, can generate new energy and allow the explorer to continue with renewed vigor and purpose. It is essential to the journey.

Paul Carter and Paula Shaw have designed a weekend that focuses on the lighter side of enlightenment. Their premise: Reverence and irreverence are two sides of the same coin; both are intrinsic to the path. Their objective: To help participants develop more of the irreverent and a sense of humor as tools for navigating the abyss in a mad world. $350

Trauma, Shame, and Exile

Jeffrey Jay

Trauma is age-old, and the responses to trauma are embedded in our society and psychology. In 1979, the diagnosis "post-traumatic stress disorder," PTSD, suddenly gave trauma a new status as a medical condition. Since then the professional and media interest in this phenomenon has been intense. As a result, PTSD may supplant narcissism as the disease of the 1990s. The diagnosis, however, has had little impact on our understanding or treatment of victims. The lasting effects of trauma continue to be treated as a disorder of the individual even though trauma is a violent disruption of the individual's connection with others. The current psychological approach to trauma strips the victim of the moral and political aspects of the experience, limiting the potential for therapy. Subsequently, both therapist and victim acquiesce to life with enduring distress.

Workshop participants will use a developmental and affect theory of shame to understand how trauma is experienced by victims and how shame is used by the community to suppress the effects of the trauma. They will examine how trauma victims are given an intolerable choice between solace and integrity, neither of which can be sacrificed. They will draw on research, the works of Elie Wiesel, and the Book of Job to understand the struggle of the trauma victim and the response of others. This is an intermediary level workshop designed to help participants think about their assumptions and methods in treatment of trauma.

Structural Anatomy and Massage

David Streeter

This course offers a fresh, simplified approach to the study of muscles—their location, function, and problems with pain—demystifying the sometimes intimidating terminology of anatomy and providing a key for understanding complex reference material. Brief lectures will focus the student each step of the way, along with hands-on palpation and individual instruction. Cross-friction massage, trigger point work, and Esalen massage will be the means of touch. This workshop is designed for those individuals with a serious interest in massage practice.

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will be to enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder of meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and movement are one." $675

David Schiffman

Many men today have sought to honor and embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result of this emphasis, the right to celebrate and honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man's sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own natures which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood, and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and goodwill, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the "wild man" within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

A variety of experiential processes will illuminate these and similar issues. Traditional initiation rituals and purification ceremonies using drumming, chanting, and a sweat lodge will be incorporated in this journey as well. $675

Sexual Abuse Survivors: Body/Mind/Spirit Recovery

Carolyn Braddock

Please note: This workshop is for professionals and others who work with sexual abuse victims/survivors.

Immeasurable numbers of children count the regular exploitation of their bodies as part of their formative experience. Trusted adults assault, neglect, and sexually abuse them, leaving physical and emotional scars. Emphasizing that bodies remember (unconscious), feel (conscious), release, and center in the recovery process, this workshop adds new dimensions to traditional strategies in dealing with those who have experienced sexual abuse.

The primary focus will be to explore the process of empowering the therapist and client working together, from both cognitive and, particularly, body-oriented approaches. Participants will discuss the victim/survivor's body/mind/spiritual belief system and physical and behavioral manifestations, all of which increase understanding of the varying reactions and means of survival. This understanding holds the key to the short- and long-term effects of the abuse in the victim's body, mind, and spirit. It also provides a solid base for developing predictive tools and guidance in the intervention process.

The leader will present specific intervention strategies and will detail patterns of child abuse and neglect, family dynamics, belief systems of the victim/survivor, and body reactions. Much of the week will be experiential. Participants will be actively involved in intervention demonstrations, discussions of ethical issues, and case presentations. The focus will be on individual and group process with some time devoted to legal issues, including court testimony. Breath work, sound, movement, gestalt, body work, role-playing, and creative cognitive work will all be used.

A Workshop for Couples: Independence and Intimacy

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, "There is room for both of us." Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs.

In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken expectations they project onto each other, heal past hurts that create distance, and learn new ways of communicating. They will have a supportive environment where they can experience themselves as courageous and able to take risks. Experiential processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation. $350

The Teachings of don Juan and Process-Oriented Psychology

Amy & Arnold Mindell

The Mindells write: "In this workshop we want to meet at the border between psychology and spiritual traditions, using Castaneda's don Juan as our starting point. Don Juan lends us an outline, a theory of what happens as we develop our capacity for awareness over time: moving from 'hunter' to 'warrior' to 'seer.' A central element to his theory of individuation and attaining self-knowledge is to interact with the environment as a spiritual power.

"Allies, however, exist not only in the night or in the wilderness, but appear in the form of our erstwhile friends, comrades, and enemies, challenging us either to stand congruently for who we are or disappear. The city, too, embodies the powers of the night and is an awesome place to discover our totality.

"Either we wrestle the ally to the ground or become possessed by it, ending up as an 'average man,' don Juan's term for phantomhood. In these few days, participants will use process-oriented methods such as body work, meditation, dream work, relationship and group work to develop awareness of what they do, the signals they normally disavow, and how they go unconscious. These methods will be shown to lead to what don Juan calls 'not doing,' awareness of the 'second attention,' developing 'the double,' and going on 'the death walk.'"

Recovery for Adult Children and Co-Dependents

Julie Bowden

This week-long journey will be a healing of the "child within" in an atmosphere of safety and respect. We are freed to be more fully in relationship with ourselves and others. People in all stages of recovery are welcome, as are treatment providers. $675

The Body and Zen

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is twofold: 1) to use body work methods and principles for releasing tension, trauma, and toxins from connective tissue; and 2) to circulate the vital energy in an aligned body. The group will draw from Rolfing® (structure), Feldenkrais® (function), and Zen (energy), to obtain these goals.

This is a hands-on workshop. Participants will give and receive body work and will learn methods to recognize, work with, and relieve some types of chronic muscle pain. The class will be limited in size (two people per table). Participants are asked to bring a swimsuit, two-piece for women. Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive body work outside of class.

Recommended reading: William Leigh, Bodytherapy: From Rolf to Feldenkrais to Tanouye Roshi (University of Hawaii Press).

Rx: Theater

Paula Shaw

Our ability to perform and play freely, natural to us as children, often diminishes as we get older. Perhaps we were suppressed by parents and teachers or ridiculed by siblings and classmates, but whatever the reason, by adulthood many of us cease being creative, imaginative, or expressive, and life stops being much fun.

A dose of theater medicine to the rescue! Actors use theater games to increase their awareness and to sharpen the performing instrument. Theater games keep players in the present moment and encourage spontaneity, playfulness, and creativity. Non-actors benefit from this work as well; even the shy or timid can learn the games and play. The experience helps people take risks such as presenting oneself in front of others and performing freely while taking great pleasure in it.

This workshop is a safe place for participants to rediscover their playful child-self and bring out the hitherto hidden person inside. Come with a one-to-two-minute memorized piece—a monologue, speech, poem, passage, or song. $675

Elizabeth Stratton

Psychic healing bridges the physical and the spiritual. Touching as a healing act has been practiced through recorded history by practitioners of the sacred as well as the secular: healers, shamans, priests, doctors, and mothers. In the past ten years, physics and modern medicine have come to an acknowledgment of the radically relational nature of our universe. Nothing and no one functions in a void.

Human emotions affect the functioning of the body, and illness is often an outgrowth of this mind-body link. Semi-dissociative states that are induced by prayer, meditation, and trance have been found to provide a fertile ground for healing to take place. It has been discovered that "multiple personalities" exhibit different states of health in each personality. The placebo effect has become one of the most respected and well-studied issues in healing today.

A psychic healer is one who can help connect the physical, emotional, mental, and spiritual levels of another person's being with healing intention through the use of touch. This workshop will explore, both didactically and experientially, the sacred and secular uses of touch, modern theories of disease formation and healing mechanisms, the use of psychic sight in healing, forgiveness as transformational cleansing, and the channeling of healing energy through the laying on of hands.

Body Rejuvenation

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is to start to rejuvenate the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body. Transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain. You will then have changed the despondent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat one.

The recipe for how to begin to rejuvenate a body in one session will be demonstrated to the group, and then experienced and performed by each participant.

This seminar is recommended for everyone. The older you are, the more stuff you have to work with. Class size is limited (two students per table). Bring a swimsuit, two-piece for women. Please note: The leaders request that participants not receive body work outside of class.

Participation in this workshop will fulfill one of the requirements for acceptance into the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Training Program. Maximum enrollment: 30.

Seeing with New Eyes: Developing Psychic Sight Through Compassion™

Elizabeth Stratton

As newborns we see the world "as it is." As we grow, we are taught by parents, education, and the media to see the world through pre-accepted belief systems. Our natural psychic clarity dims, and we can no longer see the truth of who or what is right in front of us. Reclaiming and developing our natural psychic sight necessitates stripping away these veils of illusion and seeing the world and people in it through the eyes of compassion.

This training in psychic development teaches how to see with clarity and compassion. Participants will be shown how to reopen and trust their natural gifts of clairvoyance, clairsentience, clairaudience, and telepathy. Specially designed exercises will help them to: communicate with someone mind-to-mind at a distance; see into a person's childhood, including the accompanying trauma, loss, or pain that creates who they are today; see and interpret symbols, images, colors and auras; use inner sight to scan the physical body for signs of stress and disease; tap into the unconscious for healing purposes.

Designed for everyone who would like to see life and others with more clarity and compassion, these two days are of special value to health professionals who would like to see beyond the labels and directly into the hearts of the people in their care.

Energy, Resources, Environment, Development, and Security

Amory Lovins

Energy policy is well along in a revolution which the leader's 1976 Foreign Affairs article helped to launch. That paper redefined the problem as not simply where to get more energy, of any kind, from any source, at any price, but rather how to find just the amount, type, scale, and source that would do each desired task at least cost. This end-use/least-cost approach has proven fruitful in examining a wide range of other issues too, ranging from efficient use of water and minerals to the interlinked problems of sustainable economic development (from local to global), redefining security, rethinking agriculture, and protecting the earth.

Understanding the links between these subjects often makes it possible to solve many problems at once. Efficient energy use, for example, can simultaneously help the poor, displace insecure (or all) sources of oil, abate global warming and acid rain, stem nuclear proliferation, save wildlands, cleanse air and water, create wealth, and preserve the interests of our descendants.

This seminar will begin with energy—chiefly its efficient use and renewable supply—both as factual background and as a conceptual launching pad for related issues. It will then branch out in the directions of most interest to participants, emphasizing interconnections and a vision across boundaries between various disciplines. Modest acquaintance with numbers and with technical and economic fundamentals will be helpful, though not essential, as the seminar is equally concerned with social, political, and ethical issues and with practical methods of implementation—drawing on the participants' diverse perspectives and experience. $350

Trance, Dance, and Dreams: Creativity in Everyday Living

Paul Carter

This workshop is about reclaiming one's wholeness, connecting with that inner source of support and creativity that is so essential in these complex times. Trance is learning how to let go and deeply relax. Dreaming is about recovering your dissociated powers and abilities. The dance is to embody—to make physically real—your dreams and creativity.

Using movement, drawing, and guided meditations, participants will have the opportunity to relax, to quiet the body and mind, to remember their dreams and access the place where dreams come from, to feel more pleasure, to make peace with their whole self, and gain a revitalizing sense of empowerment. Through these methods for exploring their interior and exterior worlds, they may discover a new creativity in solving problems, in relating, in sexuality, in movement, drawing, writing, work, and play. A special emphasis will be placed on how to apply these learnings to day-to-day living. Participants are asked to bring an 18" X 24" drawing pad and pastels. $675

Writing and the Act of Creation

George Leonard

Participants will be encouraged to break through ego-barriers and cultural conditioning that inhibit expression. In so doing, they will have a chance to experience the creativity that is inherent in all of life. There will be little in the way of theoretical discussion and no critiques of past works. Simple movement exercises will serve to reduce stress, free the mind, and focus the will. Participants will have the opportunity to write furiously in the here and now and to get immediate feedback. Before the weekend has passed, they in all probability will have completed a short article or fictional work and will have experienced some of the joys and heartaches that accompany publication. Bring pencils, pens, or portable typewriters—and plenty of paper.

Therapeutic Touch

Janet Quinn

Therapeutic Touch (TT) is an approach to healing which can be learned by anyone with the intent to help. It is a derivative of the laying on of hands, but need not be practiced within a religious framework. It is a tool for actualizing the innate healing capacities of both recipient and provider. TT has been taught to over 20,000 nurses nationally and abroad, as well as to lay people with an interest in healing.

The practitioner of TT embarks on a journey to empower the healer she/he already is and, in the process, to be healed. The work of remembering how to care, how to connect in unconditional love, and how to heal is seen as the only hope for personal, community, and planetary survival.

This workshop will explore the scientific, theoretical, and clinical foundations of TT. It will blend didactic and experiential learning into a balanced, grounded approach to this new version of an ancient healing art.

Spicy Questions and Fresh-Baked Ideas

Sam Keen

Sam Keen writes: "I am most creative in those moments when my mind and spirit are struggling with questions, wrestling with problems too complex to be solved by any simple method. I invite you to a free-form exploration, without an agenda. Bring your burning questions, existential dilemmas, love-riddles and quandaries of heart and spirit, and we will think, feel, and invent together. Who knows what solutions we may discover. Some of the topics I've been pondering recently include:

- How can we live a spirited life in a world dominated by a secular-technological-economic vision of reality?
- What are the distinguishing marks of authentic spirituality?
- To what or whom may I surrender without losing my soul?
- How do I move toward old age and death without illusion but with hope?
- How do I prepare for the coming economic chaos, population density, and ecological degradation?
- How must our psyche and life-style change to create a sustainable and peaceful society?
- What has to happen for men and women to be friends and lovers?" $350

For Myself or for Others: A Reconciliation of Opposites

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

Which touches you more, Rilke's life or Mother Teresa's? Who is nearer your ideal, Leonardo da Vinci or St. Francis of Assisi? Would you rather be creative in paint, sounds, or words—or feed the homeless? Meditate silently on a pillow in the holy hush of morning or roll up your sleeves and get down to doing good works?

In all ages, some have pursued self-realization through understanding their deep selves and finding their own authentic expression. Others have sought the good life in sincerely carrying out commitments to family, community, and humanity. In our era we often choose "both of the above"—and suffer the confusion of reconciling individual creative attainment with social conscience.

This is a serious question. No one wants to be a selfish idiot nor a duped conformist. Truth and beauty hang in the balance. Fortunately, philosophers and psychologists, including Kierkegaard and the existentialists, can offer us some important help. And we can judge for ourselves.

Every way of life contains a view of what is crucial to do and be, and how to succeed and fail at it. In this weekend we will consider in personal terms the apparent opposites of living for oneself and giving of oneself. What are my own values? Where to find harmony between myself and others? How can these conflicting wishes be reconciled without self-deception or cowardice?

Come with comfortable clothes and an open mind. Sessions will be contemplative, interactive, and intensely self-confrontative. Only you can know your own best path. There may be a way to avoid both cynical hedonism and the bourgeois mentality. Perhaps you have been thirsting for it. $350

David Whyte

This five-day workshop will look at the more intimate and fiery aspects of personal artistry, in particular the relationship between the written word and the rhythms of speech and breath. Participants will work with the radical inner and outer journeys, moving to the place of their own passions and creativity. Through the great poets and their poetry, through myth, story, music, silence, and the willingness to look at their lives afresh, they will perhaps discover that center and the wisdom that springs from it. It will be a time to trust bodily experiences as possible doors to a fuller and more creative life. $675

Movement, Touch, and the Healing Process

Patrick Douce

This workshop will approach the concept of a free, effortless body through Moshe Feldenkrais's work in movement and touch. Balinese and other Indonesian systems of working with the human body's energy field will broaden the Feldenkrais work.

Participants will be introduced to the complexity and simplicity of the spinal column. They will use soft, conscious movement to increase their sensitivity for safe, hands-on explorations. Moving away from the notion of a straight, stiff, rod-like back, they will find that posture and overall flexibility of the spine improves.

This program is designed for both beginners and professionals interested in movement and touch. Individuals with chronic tension or stress, and those with lower back, neck, shoulder, or hip pain, may find alternatives through learning more about the human body's possibilities. $675

David Silverstein & Joyce Lyke

The leaders write: "Most of us go through life ignoring, judging, or rejecting the content of our inner or unconscious life rather than paying attention to the information and messages we are giving ourselves. In our haste to be doing, we have forgotten our Being, and we have surrendered to the conditioning that limits a fuller experience of who we are.

"By attending to whatever is emerging in the moment, with interest and curiosity, we can begin to follow the thread of our inner life, detach ourselves from our conditioned responses, and perhaps discover that which is most essential, the fabric of our Being.

"The purpose of this workshop is to bring us closer to ourselves. We will combine meditation, breath exercises, sound, movement, and personal work in this week of inquiry. Through various awareness practices we will work and play with what emerges without coercion or judgment." $675

The Application of Altered States

Ronald Wong Jue

This workshop is for psychologists and health professionals who are interested in integrating transpersonal dimensions and strategies into their clinical practice. Participants will explore: how to move into a state of consciousness that allows the client a deepened awareness of his or her dynamics; the functionality of trance and the clinical application of altered states of consciousness in working with repressed memories; accessing spiritual resources of the client.

Utilizing David Bohm's theory of explicate and implicate order and Karl Pribram's holonomic theory to explain the phenomenology of trance, participants will delve into subjects ranging from myths and dream metaphors to shamanic journeys. The integration of this material into ordinary consciousness will be addressed. The final, experiential portion of the workshop will focus on the healing of the inner child and parental introjects. These components of the psyche and their healing are important considerations in working with co-dependency, incest, rape, and addiction. Resource materials will be provided.

Three Ms: Math, Music, Myth

Ralph Abraham, Nancy Kaye Lunney & David Shire

This will be a weekend of mental and musical play. We will discuss the reemergence of Orphic themes in math (Chaos, Gaia, Eros) and in music (Orpheus and Euridice) from the Renaissance to the present. We will explore the emotional feeling of these themes through singing them, using songs from musical theater and songs we improvise ourselves. We will discuss the math, sing the music, and search for the interconnections. A mythic experience to clear your mind and find your voice. $350

Movement from the Martial Arts

Yoshi Sakuyama & David Streeter

This weekend workshop will offer participants a wonderful opportunity to absorb the spirit of Shorinji Kempo, a Japanese martial art that is rooted in Zen Buddhism. Yoshi Sakuyama, a sixth-dan master from Japan, will introduce a basic exercise system that is the foundation of all Shorinji Kempo strategies.

These powerful yet simple katas or dance-like movements amplify vital intrinsic energies that flow from the center of the body. The energy itself is called ki or chi in China, and prana in India. This ki power can be released through specific exercises to strengthen one's every expression. Easy to understand and fun to practice, this teaching can be applied to everyday life. $350

On Relationships: Embracing the Challenge

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared—by their family backgrounds or society—to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $350

Healing the Healer's Family: Lovers, Parents, and Children

Ofer Zur

Psychotherapists are trained in the cognitive, emotional, and behavioral realms. Psychiatrists are knowledgeable about child development. Counselors facilitate dysfunctional families and intimate relationships. Psychologists are experts at diagnosis, interpretation, and conflict resolution. Workshop leaders help people grow. Why then, do so many of these professionals have troubles in their personal relationships? Why do so many of their children want to grow up to be . . . patients?

This workshop will explore the impact of therapists' training and knowledge on their intimate relationships and children. Is it an asset or a liability to have a psychologist for a lover? Are counselors injured people using their occupations to heal their own psychic wounds? Must those who are close to them inherit this psychic legacy? Do care-givers' skills facilitate intimacy and growth, or hinder it? What is it like to share a partner or parent with anonymous, demanding, often disturbed patients, countless students, or workshop participants?

This experiential and didactic workshop is designed for counselors, psychologists, psychiatrists, workshop leaders, and other caregivers, their partners and their grown children. It is both for individuals and those who wish to attend with family members.

Living Dance

Anna Halprin & Allan Stinson

Dance, in early times, was the mother of all art forms and a way for people to connect with the natural world, integrate as a community, and affirm personal and tribal values. Ancient peoples expressed the most important experiences of life not with external materials, but with their own bodies. They danced to make sense of the mysteries of their existence—to celebrate victory, mourn loss, bring rain, initiate the young. Today, in an everyday world set apart from nature, people still need to tap into the deep sources of their bodies, moving and dancing to renew, inspire, teach, create, heal.

Through an approach Anna Halprin calls the Life/Art Process, participants will create dances from their own lives, deepening their life experience through expanded art expression. This workshop will range from structured practice to spontaneous, dramatic, and zany group interactions. Visualizations, music, and outdoor environments will be incorporated.

Men and women with diverse backgrounds and a sense of humor are welcome. Potential students for the Tamalpa Trainings may find this a valuable orientation. For information on recommended reading and videotapes, contact Tamalpa Institute, P.O. Box 794, Kentfield, CA 94914. $675

Steven Vazquez

This workshop is about the nuances involved when illness, injury, or pain become resolved beyond the conventional expectations of medical science. Information from people who beat the odds of recovery from "terminal" illness, "incurable" diseases, or difficult injuries will be reviewed. The role of belief, attitudes, and relationships in affecting the body will be experientially explored.

This confluent somatic approach synthesizes medical research, cross-cultural concepts, ancient spiritual practices, and modern psychology. It combines methods drawn from Ericksonian hypnosis, Focusing, and family systems theory with hands-on work to reduce physical symptoms. Abstract concepts like state-dependent memory, psychoneuroimmunology, and chakra systems are broken down into practical applications.

Workshop material will be experiential and didactic. Processes for tracking unconscious personal myths that underlie medical conditions will be demonstrated. Complex medical jargon, psychological processes, and esoteric energy methods will be simplified into functional uses that can affect health recovery in conventional psychological and medical settings.

How Hungry Am I and For What: A Workshop for ACAs

Mariah Fenton Gladis

The road to recovery for adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive parents (ACAs) is challenging and can be deeply rewarding. It requires determination, lifelong commitment, and positive experiences. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health. Group members will work toward transforming their personal histories from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom, focusing on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of chronic trauma.
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries.
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation toward stability and abundance.
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

The workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals working with ACAs.

Fritz Smith

In this advanced Zero Balancing weekend, participants will refine and expand their Zero Balancing skills, examine emotional and psychological content held in different tissues and energy fields of the body, and apply this knowledge to Zero Balancing sessions with each other. Life Cycles and Change: Lessons from the Kabbalah

Edward Hoffman

"Everything happens in cycles" is a key Kabbalistic teaching. For millennia, its mystical adepts have dealt extensively with the subtleties of inner growth and the journey toward greater joy and wholeness. In particular, Kabbalists have offered practical wisdom to help individuals cope with the inevitable cycles and changes in everyday life: beginnings, transitions, and endings.

In this workshop, Edward Hoffman will draw from early Hasidic and Kabbalistic teachings and experiential methods. The central theme will be facing change and addressing it properly to ensure well-being and growth. Participants will discuss how Kabbalists have viewed the issue of spiritual stagnation—which can adversely affect many aspects of our lives—and how to overcome it. Hasidic teaching stories and classic mystical works, such as the Zohar, will form the foundation of the workshop. Although no previous background in Kabbalistic study is necessary, participants are encouraged to read the leader's book listed below prior to arrival.

Healing the Wounded Heart: The Art of Re-bonding

George Kohlrieser

From cradle to grave, life involves a changing script of "affectional bonds." These bonds are different from dependency and are essential for growth, health, and happiness. Attachment theory is a way to conceptualize the tendency of humans (and other mammals) to make strong affectional bonds with particular others, a way to explain many forms of physical, emotional, and spiritual distress, including emotional detachment, depression, and burnout. Life energy is connected to the quality and depth of emotional bonding.

This experiential workshop will focus on the patterns of forming, maintaining, breaking, and renewing affectional bonds. Methods include guided affective imagery, emotional release, group process, and bonding work to understand, create, and celebrate positive emotional attachments.

Applying the Enneagram to Health Care Practice

Marlene Cresci Cohen, France Doyle & Irene Terestman

The enneagram is a system that identifies personality types, patterns of attention, and styles of communication which illuminate issues of self-preservation. A useful adjunct to Western concepts of personality, the enneagram can assist the health care practitioner in identifying self-obstructive behavior and improving communication in the delivery of care.

This seminar will introduce health professionals to perspectives drawn from the enneagram which can increase their effectiveness in patient care. It is suitable for physicians, nurses, psychologists, social workers, health care teams, and academic and clinical educators in these fields. It is designed for those who have some working knowledge of the enneagram through previous training or reading.

Panels of exemplars of the nine types represented in the enneagram will be used to help participants identify communication styles and appropriate interventions for patients with different attentional styles. Transference issues as well as the health care provider's reactions will be examined. Continuing medical education for physicians is available through the instructors.

Owning the Shadow

Paul Rebillot & Melissa Kay

We have met the enemy and they is us.—Pogo, Walt Kelly

Paul Rebillot writes: "In my work I have come to realize that one of the most important and frequently avoided themes in people's lives is the ability to own the part of themselves they don't like, the part Jung called the shadow. As a result, people become projectors of their own disowned energy. In this workshop, participants will seek to discover within themselves the bad guy they have been projecting onto and hating in others. Hopefully, by facing and communicating with this negative self, they can discover in their shadow not the enemy, but the friend and challenger to growth of the heart and consciousness." $350

Chinese Herbs

Master Share K. Lew

This seminar introduces internal and external usage of Chinese herbs. This informational workshop is designed for the general public and may be especially beneficial for runners or other athletes prone to injuries. $350

Play, Spontaneity, and Performance Art

Nina Wise

This is a workshop for participants to enliven their relationship to play; to rekindle spontaneity in relationships; to recognize the sacred in the mundane; to make rituals, songs, and dances out of everyday experiences; to find humor in matters of the heart; to understand that improvisation is a way of life.

Sessions will include sitting meditation, chanting, a thorough physical warm-up, opening the voice, and exercises designed to integrate sound and movement. Participants will also have opportunities for developing technical performance skills, but the focus of the week will be improvisational expression of impulses, feelings, and ideas as they arise moment to moment.

This workshop is open to students of all levels, beginner as well as professional. $350

Creative Bonding: Changing Destructive Detachment

George Kohlrieser

Recent medical and psychological research validates the idea that "no man is an island" and that bonding behavior to people, pets, places, things, and goals is central to physical, psychological, and spiritual well-being. Disruption in the bonding-grieving cycle can lead to destructive detachment, victimization, and chronic loneliness which can shorten one's life and limit the quality of genuine aliveness.

Through presentations, guided imagery, emotional release, and group process, participants may explore, reinforce, or establish new and more effective ways to keep bonding alive.

Taoism and the Shen

Master Share K. Lew

Traditional Taoist concepts of health, longevity, and harmony with nature will be introduced by Master Lew, a temple-trained Taoist priest from southern China. The core of the workshop will be instruction in "the Shen," a set of twelve non-strenuous exercises (six standing, six sitting), whose primary purpose is self-healing. These exercises also develop concentration, increase visual and auditory acuity, and enhance sensitivity to oneself and others. Master Lew will discuss the use of everyday foods and Chinese herbs in healing and tell stories from his life in the monastery.

Master Lew, now 72, first began to teach Taoist internal cultivation to non-Chinese in 1970. His monastery style, Tao Ahn Pai, dates back 1300 years to Lui Tung Pin, an historical personage of the Tang Dynasty and one of the Eight Immortals of Taoism. $675

The Subtle Self in Motion

Judy Blackstone

This workshop offers subtle, concentrated work to help participants truly inhabit their bodies. Mind-breath-body exercises will be used to awaken consciousness of the inner depths of the body, to attune to the emotional underpinnings of bodily tensions, and to release the bound energy of old pain.

The personal themes which emerge from this work will be explored verbally in a supportive group setting and in a free-movement class for the expression of non-verbal experience. There will be daily meditation practice as well as sound and visualization exercises for penetrating to the core of the body-mind, to a level of unified awareness. Through this unbroken contact with the self, participants may discover the joy, health, and spontaneity of their essential nature. This workshop will not be physically taxing; the emphasis will be on introspective work. $675

The Hero's Journey

Paul Rebillot & Melissa Kay

Paul Rebillot writes: "Again and again in my work with people I have seen the suffering and confusion caused by our society's lack of significant rites of passage. Without shamans or ritual masters to guide them, modern women and men must find their own lonely and usually traumatic paths from one stage of life to another—whether it be a child's discovery that there is no Santa Claus, an adolescent's awkward approach to puberty, an adult's marriage or ending of one, or a change of career. Every such change requires a movement from one level of being to another.

"Seeing this need, I created a rite of passage universal enough to allow people to discover the pattern of change, whatever that change might be. That pattern is exemplified in the myth of the hero. The new stage of life that is to be reached calls forth a heroic action on the part of the person taking the journey. At the same time, as soon as a new goal begins to emerge, all of the resistance to that goal emerges as well. I call these two forces 'the hero' and 'the demon.' In order for the new state of being to be realized, these two forces must discover how to communicate with each other and how to work together. The old forms must fall away so that the new form can emerge.

"Our purpose is to give people a chance to experience a rite of passage so that they can go into the changes in their lives with a sense of joy and greater context. Our hope is that through this process people will awaken to their own creative genius and enter into the drama of their lives with imagination and delight." $675

The Rebirth of Nature: New Science and the Revival of Animism

Rupert Sheldrake

Our civilization is currently based on a split attitude toward Nature. On weekdays, for most people, Nature is mechanistic and inanimate, the Earth just a repository of natural resources to be exploited for human ends.

JOYCE LYKE

From the Pacific Coast Highway bridge overlook (1985)

But on weekends and holidays, a different attitude prevails as millions "get back to Nature." In this romantic side of our being, Nature is alive and known through direct experience.

In this workshop, participants will examine the historical roots of this split and how recent developments in science are transcending the mechanistic theory of Nature. The universe is no longer a machine running down; the cosmos is more like a developing organism with an inherent memory, as is our planet, Gaia. This will be a weekend to explore consequences and implications of the revival of animism, for the greening of poli tics and economics, and for the resacralizing of Nature. $350

Heartbeat is a shamanic journey into shadow country, into the land of forgotten feelings. It is a journey to reclaim the power of loving—yourself, others, and the planet we inhabit. The work is about the heart—your heart. Come and dance to its beat. $675

Living Meditations

Judyth Weaver

In our busy lives we do so much—but how do we do it? Are we fully aware of our actions and the consequences of what we do? Are our actions as appropriate and response-able as they could be? Could our lives be easier or more energetically economical? What are we doing to/with ourselves, and how does that affect us and others, our health, our relationships, work, longevity, our well-being?

This workshop encourages participants to "tune in" and become more aware on many levels of how they live. The work is experiential; through awareness of breath, self, and each other, and by focusing on everyday activities such as walking, sitting, standing, touching, and the processing of such as desirable, participants develop a fuller sense of mindfulness. This direct study of one's experience provides a practice ground for change and can suggest how to go about it. Such awareness of personal needs and desires can increase one's chances for becoming a fuller, more realized, happier, and healthier human being.

An Intimate Community: Caring and Conflict

Joel Dweck Isaacs & Anne Clark Isaacs

The leaders write: "Our goal in this workshop is to help each person touch their deepest place of longing to be whole. Starting from this inner place, we will strive for group interactions of the same quality. Together, participants and leaders alike, the risks we take in knowing and revealing ourselves create an intimate community.

"Feelings provide self-knowledge, depth, and pleasure, especially when they flow freely. Relating to others is most gratifying and growthful when these feelings are expressed openly and directly. We will work to realign the point of balance where the hope for contact and love is often countered by the fear of being engulfed or abandoned. We will explore ways to expand our options beyond isolation or giving up oneself to be close."

The leaders have worked together for over a decade, sharing a commitment to relationship and community. Their training in numerous disciplines allows them to tailor each workshop to the needs and desires of the participants. They use Reichian emotional release, group process, play, nurturing, confrontation, and healing energy, and have an appreciation of the spiritual nature of self and relationship. When asked to characterize intimate relationship, one of them exclaimed, "It's heaven and hell!" This workshop aims toward easier access to heaven and shorter times in hell. $675

Jill Purce

This is a workshop of practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the Self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psychophysical effects of breathing, chanting, mantric and sonic meditations, learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance, to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other methods. $350

Self-Acceptance Training: Advanced

Richard Olney & Leonard Bearne

This workshop is basically experiential, but time will also be given to theoretical and didactic considerations of interest to professional therapists. Please refer to September 22-27 for complete workshop description.

Please note: Due to the time given to the didactic material in this advanced workshop, not everyone will have a chance to work personally with the leaders. $675

The Art of Receiving

Gabriele Hilberg

This culture makes it difficult to receive gracefully. Many of us learn early in life to equate receiving with weakness, helplessness, and dependency. One source of difficulty originates from a deep-seated belief that we do not deserve the love, attention, praise, or affection that is offered. Another stems from a fear of being obligated by the other person's expectations. Our willingness to receive brings greater honesty to our desire to give to others. The openness to receiving allows us to fully experience our relationship with another person, opens our hearts to the love and compassion of others and, in times of crisis, enables us to reach out for help.

Participants in this workshop will examine the beliefs and expectations that created their internal blockages and will learn new ways of receiving wisely, gracefully, and with dignity. $675

The Life Energy Process℠

Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process workshop is a spiritually-oriented approach to body work and life-style which allows individuals direct contact with the spiritual self through energy vibrations. This method is facilitated by specific intensive and subtle movements, which participants may find open them to their own healing abilities, allowing them to release unfinished emotions, radiational and chemical toxins, and psychological disturbances. From that point of greater clarity, they may move to the next step in their personal development. Participants continue this energy work physically and verbally through process inquiry and dialogue with the leader as they examine the superficial trace problems of their everyday lives and explore their deeper energy disturbances through energy patterning.

Energetic forms of massage, dance, and theater may be included in this process. Some of the work will be individual, some will be hands-on with partners. The workshop may be of particular interest to professionals and laypersons alike who are excited by the integration of Eastern and Western methods with the new physics for personal, social, and organizational evolution.

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting—to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants are given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

The Subtle Art of Meditation

David Streeter

For many people meditation seems a bit far-fetched, strenuous, difficult to learn, and perhaps impossible to incorporate into their busy schedules and hectic lives. But the seemingly rare ability to experience deep, tranquil, and clear states of consciousness is very much within reach. In this workshop, through the use of simple yet profound methods, participants will explore the same inner terrain the ascetic yogi or the stoic Zen monk explores. Daily sessions will offer nourishment, inner peace, and opportunity for gentle emotional release.

The list of beneficial effects of meditation is long and impressive, but meditation is much more than a means to an end; it can be a delightful end in of itself. The purpose of this workshop will be to inspire the student to explore his or her rich interior life, to discover that crystal clear still-point that is described so well in every spiritual tradition.

A Food Experience

Jane Miletich

Eating habits reflect the mental and emotional states of this culture. Eating delicious, healthful food in a beautiful setting with others who are interested in living healthier, happier lives encourages clearer mental, spiritual, and emotional patterns. This workshop is for people who are interested in making changes in how and what they eat. Participants will be introduced to various methods of preparing food and alternative diets, including: a balanced, cooked macrobiotic diet; a raw/living foods/wheatgrass diet; and a juice bar with organic vegetables and fruits.

The program will be individualized to participants' needs. Those needing direction will be introduced to the basic principles of Ayurveda (a science of self-healing) and food combining. Those interested in helping with meal preparation may do so. The kitchen provided has been specifically designed for preparing these foods. Exercise, yoga, and massage will also be part of the week.

This workshop is modeled after Esalen's biannual cleansing program. During the eight years that this program has existed, hundreds of community participants have felt the beneficial results of eating simple, whole foods. The additional $50 produce fee provides for the wide variety of organically grown fruits, vegetables, seeds, nuts, grains, and condiments that will be freshly prepared.

The Medicine Wheel Way

Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

This workshop will draw on the Native American Medicine Wheel, ceremonies, and teachings as resources for personal growth. Just as Western psychological theory provides a framework for describing human stages of development, so does the Medicine Wheel offer a framework for self-individuation. Both systems embody steps for healing. A primary difference, however, is that the Medicine Wheel way of living views humans as sacred beings and maintains that each individual must find their own balance of spirit, body, emotion, and mind.

The Medicine Wheel way has guided many peoples through their journeys of self-discovery. It illuminates the relationship of all things, each direction on the wheel having its particular meaning and pointing to aspects needed for integration. With this tool, information can be brought forth from the memory so that essential elements for balance are not ignored. Ceremonies and rituals mark the passage of seasons and significant events of individual and group life, and connect the individual to the great mystery of life.

This experiential workshop will use these ancient teachings, providing a supportive means for participants to continue their process of self-development and to deepen their relationship with the natural world. Activities will include learning the Medicine Wheel, finding totem animals as guides, assessing one's current situation or season in life, and gathering one's resources for the next cycle of change. Gestalt, chanting, drumming, and rituals will be used in a climate of trust and acceptance.

Reversing and Preventing Heart Disease: A Model for Personal Transformation

Dean Ornish

This workshop will teach how to reduce cholesterol and blood pressure and how to begin reversing coronary heart disease. For the past fourteen years, physician Dean Ornish has conducted three research studies demonstrating, for the first time, that a comprehensive life-style program (yoga, meditation, imagery, diet, smoking cessation, exercise, and group psychotherapy) can produce extraordinary improvements without medications. This workshop will include lectures that review the research data and explain why life-style affects the heart and will provide experiential training in the life-style program.

Illness can serve as a catalyst for personal transformation and growth, motivating a person to ask, "Why did I get sick? What are the causes?" What we eat, how we respond to stress, and other aspects of life-style are powerful determinants of health and disease. It is also known that feelings of isolation can lead to psychological stress and ultimately to illness, whereas feelings of intimacy can lead to healing.

Because the technology for measuring coronary heart disease is so advanced, heart disease is an excellent model for measuring the power of life-style changes to help heal—and prevent—heart disease.

Finding My Place: A Workshop for Men

Jerry Johnson

"After twenty years of women's liberation, men are the new continent." Coming from Nancy Friday, an American feminist writer, this is a provocative statement. However, many American men are asking, "If true, what does this mean to me?"

The 1990s will surely be a decade of male growth. The media has begun to confirm that old patterns and definitions of masculinity are no longer valid. Films show male friendship and bonding without war. Magazines explain new roles for men in parenting and other realms that were previously the exclusive domain of women.

This workshop will help awaken participants to often repressed parts of their masculinity which can form the basis for new self-identity and relationship. It combines universal male themes, ancient spiritual rituals, and experiential exercises to help men create a new mode of feeling. Themes will include:

- How does my absent father continue to shape my self-image?
- Do I have an inner guide to masculinity?
- How do I move beyond competition and fear in relating to other men?
- Is there a way to respond to contradictory messages from women about being sensitive and/or strong?

This workshop is for men who want to grow beyond old, traditional definitions of being a man but who don't know where to begin, for men who are dissatisfied with being cut off from meaningful relationships with other men and who want to learn how to relate as brothers. $350

The Nature of Movement: Aikido and Wilderness

Steven Harper & Wendy Palmer

In this week-long workshop, participants will work indoors with energy awareness and principles derived from aikido, and outdoors on short day-hikes into Big Sur's backcountry to explore the movement that nature inspires. Both aikido and hiking are moving meditations which, when done well, require the individual to be in harmony with the natural world. There will be an opportunity to take what is learned on the aikido mat out into the natural world and bring what is learned from nature onto the aikido mat. Participants can then begin to integrate what they learn from aikido and from nature into their lives.

All evenings and most meals will be at Esalen. Participants need not have previous experience in aikido or hiking. $675

Freeing the Runner Within

Joan Ullyot

Human beings are natural running animals. But civilization and technology combine to alienate us from this instinctive side of ourselves. Non-runners lament that they don't know how to run, while competitors puzzle over choosing the right training. This course is designed to take runners of all levels inward, to find and express the runner within, to free themselves to run easily and joyously, longer and faster.

In addition to group runs, discussions of training principles, and practice of methods such as hill-bounding, this workshop will include mental training exercises developed recently by sports psychologists. These include relaxation and guided imagery, affirmations, breathing and body awareness, race visualizations, and associative focusing.

The inner confidence and athletic energies released by these methods can be harnessed to run a personal best in a fall marathon or simply to experience the beauty of a daily jog. Limited to 20 participants, to allow for work on individual goals. $675

Self-Acceptance Training: Basic

Richard Olney & Mari Krieger

This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. It is defined as "the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgment, self-criticism, or self-evaluation." The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual's relationship with the universe.

Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cognitive examination of the individual's "pretends" and illusions that obstruct self-acceptance. Limited to 25 people. $675

The Challenge of Surrender: Advanced Enneagram Study

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

When all the knots that strangle the heart are loosened, the mortal becomes immortal.—Katha Upanishad

The enneagram of character fixation gives us a structure of the knots that strangle the heart. It is a wisdom mirror for recognizing the ego. Recognition of the ego's desires and attachments is essential for its dissolution. Making one's fixation work better or discovering what it does well misses the essential task of healing the heart of suffering.

Workshop participants will explore how character fixation is an imitation of soul. In a setting of Vedanta and Buddhist cosmology and psychology, they will work with their passions and attachments as obscurations to the soul's awakening. Group exercises, open seat, trance, truth-telling, role playing, and movement will be used to unmask the fixation and move toward soul awakening.

West African Culture through Music and Dance

Yao Tamakloe

Along with his wife Anindo Abukutsa, from Kenya, and his instructor from Ghana, Nana C.K. Metaphors We Live By

George Lakoff

Metaphor is the means by which we understand what we experience. As we grow up, we acquire hundreds of standardized but largely unconscious metaphors that are built into our language. We think, act, and even dream using these metaphors. We have metaphors for comprehending everything from time and causation to emotions, morality, love, and even the nature of life and death.

Our unconscious capacity for metaphor is awesome in power. It is liberating in that it permits both abstract thought and the workings of our imagination; it can be stultifying when it limits our possibilities. As long as it remains inaccessible to consciousness, we can neither appreciate its magnificence nor see where it confines us.

This workshop has several goals: first, to help participants become conscious of the metaphors that govern their thoughts and actions; second, to reveal how these everyday metaphors are manifest in poetry and myth, and how they vary in other cultures; third, to develop skills in using metaphor to make new sense of their lives.

Cardiac Fitness: East and West

Kenn & Vicki Chase

Heart disease remains the major cause of death and disability in the United States. It, like most chronic disease, is a product of life-style and, in many cases, is preventable. Changing life-style habits is not easy to do. It requires commitment, patience, determination, and education. The purpose of this workshop is to assist each individual in identifying coronary risk factors and those factors necessary for initiating and maintaining a healthy heart life-style. Participants will explore the application of Eastern mind/body practices, such as t'ai chi, chi kung, and yoga relaxation, to the traditional cardiac fitness setting. The basic warm-up, work-out, and cool-down phases of cardiac fitness will be introduced as well as methods for calming the mind and promoting stress management.

Mid-Life Crisis as Spiritual Emergence

Karen Turner

Participants will view mid-life transition in the framework of spiritual emergence and renewal, a time when the old systems the individual has used as foundations seem stripped away, leaving chaos and challenging long-held beliefs. It is a time of soul-searching; of confronting both inflated and deflated self-concepts; of surrendering to deeper, more expanded states of awareness; of learning to trust inner guidance as absolute authority in one's life.

This workshop will be a rite of passage for both men and women going through this transition. Together they will have the opportunity to discover each participant's unique self, and how each is in relationship to self, each other, the world, and spirit. Tools for self-exploration and awareness gathered from psychology, mysticism, and shamanism will be presented, with time for discussion and sharing. $675

Sacred Song of the Body

Susan Osborn & David Densmore

Susan Osborn writes: "Singing can be a practice, just as meditation or walking or dance can be. It can be a way to practice making a creative choice. Rather than identifying the energy that runs through our bodies as physical, mental, emotional, or spiritual, singing is a way to catalyze that energy and make something true and beautiful with it.

"I have learned that a truly beautiful sound is not produced through technique, but through deep listening and honesty. Singing is the language of the body and, as such, when we truly hear ourselves or another sing, we have access to the great body of knowledge and experience that each of us carries within us. When we sing together in an environment of respect and deep listening, an experience of communion is available—an honoring of our differences and our oneness. This class is an invitation to witness each other and yourself in a respectful and creative environment of song." $675

Harriet Goslins & Mark Bender

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain/muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk of injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with aftereffects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back, to improve their posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provider approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

The Shadow of Love

Ayala Pines

Whatever is the essence of the love that binds two people will be the essence of the shadow this love will cast when threatened. Jealousy, envy, anger, fear, and other powerful emotions are all part of the shadow of love. In most cases, they are not a result of individual pathology, but of a certain dynamic in the relationship. They are useful signals that partners can interpret and take advantage of to improve themselves and the relationship.

The structured exercises, discussion, guided fantasy, and role-playing in this workshop are designed to help participants identify the threat triggered by the shadow of love and how to protect their relationships in positive and constructive ways. This workshop is for anyone who seeks better understanding of love and the emotions in its shadow, especially romantic jealousy. It may also be of interest to counselors who work with couples or individuals on issues related to jealousy. $350

Luc Brebion

To take part, at all deeply, in the experience of art requires a quality of concentration, a stillness of mind, and an openness to receive which is different from the awareness we use in ordinary life. Immersed in contemplation, we can have the rare privilege of being in the presence of the artist and of letting him or her show us how to reach for what is essential within.

Luc Brebion, a native of France, has combed the museums of Europe in search of artistic treasures. In this year's Aesthetic Self workshop, he will again use a multi-media approach and an experiential method to help participants penetrate works of art and become absorbed by them. As they are led through an unhurried appreciation of paintings, music, and literature, they will have the opportunity to perceive the particular substance that real art can offer if sustained attention is applied. Learning to develop their ability to contemplate, they will find themselves, perhaps for the first time, in close rapport with such artists as Joachim Patinir, Jan van Eyck, Johann Sebastian Bach, Cesar Vallejo, and David Rosenmann-Taub. $350

New Competences for an Age of Uncertainty

Donald Michael

Because we live with unprecedented levels of complexity and uncertainty, an abiding crucial challenge for each of us is learning how to be better learners. The old answers and questions are increasingly ineffective. Yet, conventional definitions of competence encourage each of us, and organizations, too, to avoid learning by denying or disguising uncertainty so that we appear to know what we are doing. The result is ever more stress, anxiety, and inadequate personal and organizational performance.

This seminar will introduce a set of interlocking skills or "new competences" necessary for making humane and effective decisions when uncertainty can provide the occasion for learning—in work places and in interpersonal and family situations. These skills include: acknowledging and specifying high levels of uncertainty, error embracing, being future-responsive, boundary spanning, interpersonal communication, and self-knowledge.

The approach will be both cognitive and experiential. Participants will have the opportunity to become more comfortable with the vulnerability that accompanies facing their uncertainties; to question the need to act over-cautiously out of fear of making a mistake; and to reexamine the incentives for those defensive posturings that make it so hard to act responsibly and compassionately. As a previous participant said, "This seminar is for those who are ready to move beyond the personal and want to effect change in public and private organizations."

Trigger Point and Esalen Massage: Advanced Workshop

Arthur Munyer
& Esalen Massage Practitioners

The human body is a rich source of information and intelligence. Trigger point, the movement of myofascial tissue through soft, deep contact with pressure points, and Esalen massage are methods of working with the body that can help the practitioner communicate with stressed, blocked, and chronically troubled areas. This workshop will combine these modalities, along with joint release, movement, and studies in anatomy. It will also address concerns of burnout, depression, creativity, and peer support for those who have chosen a demanding profession. It is especially suggested for body workers, physicians, physical therapists, chiropractors, and other health care practitioners who want to expand their hands-on skills.

Mending Bodymind and Soul

Joan & Myrin Borysenko

The sense of unworthiness, the feeling of "I'm not enough," is a deep wound that impedes both physical healing and psychospiritual growth. To the extent that we identify with shame and fear-driven false selves, we forget the radiance of our own true natures. This week will be a healthy balance of dismantling false selves, retrieving lost parts of our authenticity from the shadow, and practicing remembrance of the true self. Processes will include inner wisdom exercises, dream work, meditation, song, dance, journal and poetry writing, spiritual autobiography, healing and prayer circles. A magical alchemy occurs through sharing our stories in a circle of trust, where healing and self-acceptance are natural outgrowths of understanding and connectedness.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 42-43. $675

The Enneagram: Basic Workshop

Helen Palmer

The enneagram is an ancient psychological typology that views personality traits as the outer indication of particular aspects of higher awareness. The system describes nine different personality types and their interrelationships. It is unusually helpful in understanding oneself and the thoughts and feelings of those with whom we live and work, but the real power of the system lies in the fact that our ordinary psychological habits present a strategic access point to a continuum of experience that directs us back to essence.

This workshop presents the enneagram material in the oral way, by seeing and hearing panels of representatives of the nine types on video and on small panels drawn from the class. The panel method, coupled with practice in the internal placements of attention that characterize each of the types, will introduce participants to their own type, and demonstrates the radically different perspectives held by each of the nine. $675

Chakra Psychology

Nancy Rosanoff

The chakra system is generally known to be an ancient Hindu concept of spiritual energy centers located along the spine, which are awakened or energized as individuals progress spiritually. This course gives participants a modern understanding of how to use the chakras as guides in their quest for psychological and spiritual development.

Awakening the chakras allows people to observe the interaction between the body, mind, and spirit. The chakras can thus become tools to balance daily life within the context of a greater spiritual reality, with such practical applications as: enhancing self-understanding, improving loving relationships, changing unwanted behavior patterns, and unblocking creative energy.

In these five days, participants will work with their chakra spirit guides, yoga stretches, chants, meditation, breathing and awareness exercises, drawing, and writing to explore their chakras and themselves, open blockages, and heal past pains.

Keeping a Good Relationship Alive

Gerald Smith

This workshop will focus on a major dilemma in keeping a good relationship alive. That is: how to be close and vulnerable as partners yet separate and free to grow as individuals. This dilemma is never resolved because each partner continues to change, but it can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship.

Much of participants' time during this weekend will be with their partners separate from other couples. Verbal, non-verbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection will be used, as will skills at resolving differences in ways that do not produce "scar tissue." And, since playing is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be experiences to kindle the imagination and the willingness to play together. Limited to 12 couples.

Journey to the Heart

Joseph Chilton Pearce

For the last three decades, Joseph Chilton Pearce has been synthesizing scientific brain research in physics, biology, and psychology in an effort to understand and map nature's plan for the development of human intelligence. He writes:

"The intelligence of the heart is the only force that can pull our fragments of self together; it is the nurturing power so many of us missed right from the beginning of life, that unconditional love which alone would have assured us of the evolutionary progress nature intended. That progress is nothing but the progression of love toward its own source, and that source is the heart."

In this seminar, Pearce will share his findings on the three-part human brain and how each part has its own language, its own development cycle, its own purpose. He will talk about the difference between intellect and intelligence, the ego's inability to self-analyze, and the physiological connection between the heart and the brain that prevents our triune brain from being continually at war with itself.

Discourse, discussion, contemplation, and meditation will offer seminarians a glimpse of their own developmental cycle—where it was rich, where lacking—and acceptance of their own perfection, and tools for enriching the inner journey to their hearts. $350

Council of All Beings

John Seed

The Council of All Beings is a series of rituals created by John Seed and Joanna Macy to help individuals feel their connection with nature in their hearts and bodies. By rediscovering our interconnectedness with all beings, we see that the pain of the earth is our own pain and that the fate of the earth is our own fate. The Council of All Beings empowers people to act on behalf of the earth and gives clarity and direction for the work ahead.

Participants in this workshop will have the opportunity to review the human evolutionary journey, to shed their solely human identification, to feel great empathy for the myriad species and habitats of the Earth. Through personal sharing, meditation, and ritual, they will explore the depths of their concern and love for the planet in this time of crisis. As many individuals involved in this work have discovered, alignment with a larger identity clarifies, dignifies, and heals one's personal conflicts. In the same fashion, it clarifies and orders patterns of consumption, needs for intimacy and support, priorities for action. This gathering provides tools for putting this into practice in daily life.

This work draws upon current scientific findings to sharpen people's understanding of the ecological crises that threaten our planet. It draws on systems theory and the Gaia hypothesis to provide a solid, rational-conceptual foundation for the deep ecology movement and combines them with spiritual traditions thousands of years old that attune individuals to the Earth. $350

Polarity Massage Intensive

Deborah Anne Medow
& Esalen Massage Practitioners

Polarity massage is a system for balancing the currents of life force which naturally flow through the body. It is a holistic approach to healing whereby the practitioner and recipient work with thoughts and attitudes, nutritional needs, polarity yoga exercises, and the polarity massage session itself.

Participants in this five-day workshop will be instructed in basic concepts of the polarity system as applied to the human energy field through the medium of massage. Emphasis will be on theory, polarity points and counterpoints, energy balancing methods, nutrition, and polarity yoga. Three-hour class sessions will be held in the mornings and afternoons. Evenings will be for practice and occasional group meetings.

This workshop is designed both for the interested layperson and the professional body work practitioner, and serves as a good review for anyone who has previously taken a polarity workshop.

Pilgrimage

Joyce Frazee

Lama Govinda writes in The Way of the White Clouds that pilgrimage is "an inner movement or development directed toward a yet unknown distant aim . . . from which springs the readiness to accept people and new environments as part of our destiny and the confidence in the ultimate significance of all that happens and is in harmony with the depth of our being . . ."

Participants in this workshop will use gestalt practice, dream work, drawing, meditation, and group process as a way of pilgrimage toward the "yet unknown distant aim."

Balancing Values and Work: From Inner Purpose to Outer Action

Sue McKibbin & Patricia Moore

Lack of alignment between one's inner values and purpose and one's work in the world can result in frustration, hopelessness, boredom, and cynicism. But when people shift from outer- to inner-directedness and bridge purpose and action, they find that meaning, empowerment, and well-being can emerge.

Workshop participants will go within to explore this realm of their lives through processes ranging from meditation and journey work to questionnaires and self-assessment instruments. Each person will have the opportunity to balance their inner guidance with individual and group exercises related to their particular work situation. Five themes will be explored:

- Purpose, values, and vision
- Personal transition processes
- Balancing individual and organizational polarities
- Practical tools for the inner journey
- Sources for personal transformation and organizational paradigm shifts

The workshop is designed so participants can return to their daily lives with resources for continuing the process of exploration and discovery necessary to link inner purpose with outer action.

Self-Defense and Empowerment

Mary Tesoro, Tom Elliott, Mary Speidell & Paul Speidell

How much does the threat of potential assault or the pain of past assault restrict your life? This workshop is for women and men who desire to own their bodies fully and to claim their right to move both peacefully and powerfully through their lives.

The art of self-protection will be explored as a path to self-esteem, personal courage, and healing. Leonard Energy Training, which operates from the assumption that human capacity lies largely untapped, will be interwoven with techniques from the non-aggressive martial art of aikido to help participants form a solid base of balance, grace, and power. Techniques from the Model Mugging Self-Defense and Empowerment Program will be offered as effective, street-proven self-protection training.

This workshop will take place in an emotionally supportive environment, with emphasis on personal choice and positive growth for each individual, and aim toward the enhancement of each participant's ability to love and trust themselves and others. No prior experience or training is necessary. For more information contact Mary Tesoro, Box 986, San Luis Obispo, CA 93406; (805) 995-1224.

Secrets to Tell, Secrets to Keep

Karen Paine-Gernée & Terry Hunt

Secret acts. Secret thoughts. Secret births. Secret deaths. Secret relationships. Secrets we keep from others. Secrets we keep from ourselves. As children many of us were harmed by things we could not tell, that could not be told. Recovery depends on confronting the truths in our lives and making peace with what is.

Alcoholic, abusive, or other dysfunctional families are ruled by the denial that something is wrong in the family system. As a result, children take on problems and emotional pain of the family and suffer them as their own fault. The assumption is that Mom and Dad knew what they were doing. In fact, they didn't. By exposing the family secrets, these children who are now adults can stop taking responsibility for what went wrong and free themselves from the need to believe that "my childhood wasn't so bad" and "it didn't really affect me." It is possible to heal.

Everyone has secrets. When is it safe to share them? When is it not? Nowhere do our secrets cause greater difficulty than in our intimate or sexual lives. How do we get close when we are so ashamed of secrets buried deep inside? In these five days, participants will create a community to work through the shame and isolation that some secrets cause. Together they will explore how to: grow with the secrets they each must bear, develop healthy personal boundaries, and cultivate a life-affirming balance between personal privacy and self-disclosure.

Tao and the Timewave

Terence McKenna

Terence McKenna will share the details of a revisioning of the I Ching and the world, which combines an approach to the I Ching with the playful, effervescent clarity of the Tao. Taoist approaches to time will provide the general theme, and McKenna will explain his own model of time, "Timewave Zero." Individuals with a deep interest in the dynamics of the I Ching are especially invited.

Reunion

David Schiffman

This is a workshop for seasoned people who are already familiar with and appreciate the basics of self-exploration, inner work, myth, and sacred ritual. Its aim is to create a mood of safety and support for further study. It is a time for individuals to renew their connection to the resources that can guide and protect them. Gathering together in a spirit of trust and good will, participants will explore ways to:

- Reconnect with and honor what they feel most deeply
- Express feelings with simplicity, clarity, and integrity
- Celebrate playfulness and spontaneity
- Release disappointments, reversals, and emotional losses
- Mark their hopes and dreams and renew their spirits through myth and rituals
- Deepen their understanding and appreciation of their own rhythm and true nature
- Explore imaginative ways to live freely and fully

In an eclectic framework, the workshop will combine innovative elements of guided meditation, sound work, ritual, dance, and music with traditional psychological practices. $675

Action Theater: Really Pretending

Ruth Zaporah

When we were children, we frequently created our reality through pretending. We played freely in a spontaneous world. But in our adult world, we are often left with only a memory of this freedom. The Action Theater process rekindles this spirit of play, of being open to change and present to life.

Action Theater is a system of exercises and games that integrates mind, body, and spirit and leads toward free and spontaneous experience. Sessions begin with simple movement improvisations; participants come into, feel, and stretch their bodies. From this orientation they play within forms that increase awareness of movement and vocal verbal expression. Range of emotion expands; images, characters, and situations emerge from the territories of awareness, memory, and the imagination.

Each Action Theater event serves as a mirror. In the realm of awareness, there is little distinction between the theater and the street. Who we are, how aware we are, how we process our perceptions and reactions is the same everywhere. In the studio, we improvise within forms relevant to movement and theater, but the lessons affect our daily lives.

This workshop accommodates the novice, the explorer, and the practiced. $675

Brita Ostrom & Attila Vaas

This workshop is for partners who want to learn basic skills for giving each other a massage. Individual concerns will be addressed so participants can continue their practice at home. $350

Practical Intuition: Introduction

Laura Day

We are all psychics. Every time we draw a conclusion, we work with intuition as well as linear and emotional processes. Identifying how our intuitive faculty works enables us to use it selectively for effective decision-making. A predominantly linear process may be preferable when clear, empirical information is available. When little data is at hand or if the question relates to how current choices might affect future results, an intuitive process may be more efficient.

Practical Intuition, an experiential workshop, introduces intuitive methods for gaining empirical information. Participants will give and receive several present- and future intuitive readings a day, focusing on predicting and retrieving verifiable data. Different intuitive styles, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, and telepathy, will be taught, along with exercises for continued training at home.

Participants are requested to bring a few photographs of themselves and people they know well, their personal and business questions, and a willingness to work as if they already knew how to do something that they in fact already know how to do. $350

Mindfulness, Meditation, and Healing

Jon Kabat-Zinn

Meditation is not for the fainthearted or those seeking escape from their problems. It involves a willingness to face, in Zorba the Greek's words, the "full catastrophe" of the world and of one's own life and body, and use this very energy to grow in strength and wisdom. In this workshop, Jon Kabat-Zinn will describe his stress reduction program at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center and present his research showing how people with chronic medical problems use Buddhist mindfulness meditation practices to reduce their symptoms and heal their bodies, minds, and lives.

Participants will explore how to develop or deepen a personal meditation practice and how to use mindfulness meditation to face and transcend stress, pain, and illness in their own lives. Topics will include specific health-related problems, including pain, anxiety and panic, headaches, gastrointestinal problems, high blood pressure, heart disease, and sleep disturbances. Extended periods of meditation practice will be interspersed with the discussions.

Come prepared to work with your own version of the full catastrophe, whether it manifests primarily in your personal or professional life, or both. This workshop is appropriate for both health professionals and lay people.

T'ai Chi Ch'uan: An East/West Approach

Kenn Chase

This seminar will present a demonstration form of t'ai chi ch'uan, a shortened version derived from the classical Yang style, which contains 54 balanced, fluid, and graceful postures. Also included will be mind/body alignment methods, chi kung Taoist breathing methods, and hours of practice and refinement of the traditional t'ai chi movements. Practiced five to ten minutes daily, this gentle martial art can calm the mind and aid the student in achieving a centered perspective for daily living in a busy world.

May 19–June 14
Certification in Clinical Hypnosis

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian hypnosis, neurolinguistics, and the enneagram of character fixation. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the M.F.C.C. and complies with the California state requirements for hypnosis certification.

While the use of hypnosis in habit control and symptom removal will be covered, the primary focus will be on hypnosis as a tool for developing spiritual awareness. Starting with the presupposition that we already live in trance and that the goal is waking up, the roots of personality structure and the filters of perception in the creation and transformation of reality will be carefully explored. Participants will have the opportunity to experience the power of trance to transform their lives, which will create a model for working with clients.

The structure of rapport, pacing and leading, and various hypnotic patterns of induction will be demonstrated and practiced along with a variety of clinical interventions, including reframing, change history, metaphors, and storytelling. There will be videotapes of Erickson and other well-known leaders in the field of hypnosis. Participants will have daily practice with each other and the opportunity to be videotaped doing a hypnotic induction. Daily zazen, Taoist yoga, and movement led by Antoinette Varner will also be a part of this program.

Upon completion of this course, participants who want to be certified must demonstrate a high level of professionalism as well as proficiency in technical skills to the satisfaction of the instructors before certification will be granted. After certification by the Institute for Advanced Hypnosis (testing and certification fee, $300) additional certifications are available from the American Council of Hypnotist Examiners ($125) and the Society of NeuroLinguistic Programming ($200).

Required reading: J. Haley, Uncommon Therapy (Norton); Grinder and Bandler, Trance-Formations; Frogs into Princes; and Reframing (all, Real People Press); H. ■ WILDERNESS PROGRAMS

Esalen Wilderness Programs Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered. To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, we require a deposit of $200. The balance of the fee is due 14 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited. (Please note: The Salmon River trip has a different cancellation and refund policy. See workshop description for details.)

May 10–18
Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center

Steven Harper & Guest Leader

Nature can provide opportunities to stretch one's limits and explore one's inner wilderness. By living in a natural environment it is possible to expand one's sense of self and depth of being.

The group will spend a day and a night at Esalen, leaving the next morning to hike through the Ventana wilderness. Participants will travel "light," with instruction in minimum impact camping, ecology, geography, and the cultural history of the area.

Wilderness will be a mirror and primary teacher as the group lives simply and in direct contact with nature. Participants will explore their inner world of dreams, feelings, and sensations as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice and group process. Taking inspiration from natural and native purification practices, they will create a time of cleansing and contemplation, culminating in a 24-hour period alone. The group will hike on to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center, deep in a rugged wilderness valley with natural hot springs, for their last night together. There, meditation instruction will be available for those who wish it.

Backpacking experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

August 3–10
A Gentle Trip in the High Sierra

Maurica Anderson & Lee Ehman

During this seven-day workshop in wildflower season, participants will hike six miles to camp by a waterfall near a lake (10,000') in the John Muir Wilderness area on the western side of the High Sierra. The area is off the main trails and is surrounded by other lakes, grassy meadows, wildflowers, and cold streams fed by the surrounding snow fields. Our water will be supplied by a pure and icy spring.

CYNTHIA JOHNSON BIANCHETTA

MULES WILL CARRY IN ALL OF THE PERSONAL GEAR AND FOOD, so participants need carry only lunch, rain gear, and water on the hike in. The food will be exceptionally good—fresh or frozen meats, fruits, and vegetables. The group will camp by the waterfall for six nights, taking short day-hikes, and working with meditation, massage, psychodrama, gestalt, and gentle encounter. There will be some strenuous but optional side hikes, swimming, a sauna, and some time for doing nothing. Participants will be encouraged to concentrate on the sights and sounds and smells of the high country, on getting to know the mountains, one another, and themselves.

Mountaineering experience is not necessary (although a good sense of humor is), and most people are in good enough shape to make it in, but participants should be capable of hiking uphill at altitudes up to 11,000'.

For a detailed information sheet, contact Maurica Anderson, 1112 Curtis Street, Albany, CA 94706; (415) 526-5814. Participants will meet in the Sierra on August 3. The fee includes food, wine, permits, and pack mules in and out. $675

September 2–7
Path of the River: A Salmon River Journey

Steven Harper & Nichols Expeditions

Idaho's lower gorge of the Salmon River is both beautiful and rugged, soft and demanding, yet always rewarding for those who are open to its dramatic variety. A trip down the Salmon offers clear water, tall green forests, white sand beaches, and challenging rapids. The river is a teacher and primary metaphor. The group will draw from aikido, dance, energy awareness, and meditation to enhance their experience of this majestic wilderness area.

Travel will be in inflatable rafts powered by six to eight people with paddles. Instruction will be offered in basic aspects of river life such as paddling and minimum-impact river camping. There will be time to discuss the area's natural and cultural history, to hike, to sit quietly and reflect.

River experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity and to participate fully. The workshop begins the morning of September 2nd in Whitebird, Idaho; there will be a pre-trip meeting the evening of September 1st. Nichols Expeditions will supply all the necessary river rafting gear, guides, and meals. Details and a personal equipment list will be sent upon registration. Space is limited.

Due to Esalen's special arrangement with Nichols Expeditions, the following cancellation policy is in effect for this workshop: A $200 nonrefundable deposit per person will confirm your reservation. Balance is due August 1. If you cancel prior to August 1, your nonrefundable deposit, less a $50 registration fee, may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. No refunds are available after August 1. $750

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program. It is advantageous for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study Coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program.

Two programs are planned for each month. Programs scheduled thus far for 1991-92 include:

May 5–June 2
Dianne Lawrence will use painting, writing, and theater games that establish a working relationship with one's creative force.

Marilyn Harris Kriegel will lead a program on relationship: to self and others, to the familiar and unknown. Tools will include psychosynthesis, gestalt, garden and cookbooks.

June 2–30
In this non-certification program, participants will learn to give and receive a full body massage. Kathleen O'Shaughnessy and David Streeter will incorporate tools of yoga, movement, sound, breath, and ancient meditation practices to help expand sensory abilities.

Jackie Rosin and Kay Brownfield offer a month of psychosynthesis to explore the nature of essence. Meditation, guided imagery, music, movement, art, and individual process work will be some of the modalities used. Professionals are invited.

June 30–July 28
Jeanne Achterberg and Frank Laulis will focus on the healing power of the imagination. Components of healing ritual, sounds and symbols of various cultures, and healing rites which combine ancient wisdom with modern knowledge will be explored.

Karuna Licht and Cynthia Johnson Bianchetta will facilitate the spirit of creativity as a healing journey of self-discovery and self-expression through various artistic processes, meditation, and ritual.

July 28–August 25
Design your own program, alone and with other participants, using your intuition, intelligence, and imagination. Find surprising resources; harvest and recycle your energies. Facilitated by Janet Lederman.

Mary (Devarani) Goldenson's program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, Radix®, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

August 25–September 22
Phyllis Shankman offers a month of in-depth group process/gestalt work using the creative arts, as well as meditation, massage, and movement for self-exploration and healing.

Julian Silverman's program will draw from A Course in Miracles to explore the ideas of being responsible for one's life and personal power.

■ Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

ESALEN NOTES

GROUP RESERVATIONS FOR THE BIG HOUSE

As featured in the May-October 1991 catalog, we are now scheduling workshops in our newly renovated Big House. This facility is available to groups of individuals who work together and would like to design their own Esalen program, drawing on our leaders and other resources. Ten bedrooms accommodating up to twenty individuals, ten bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, and living room make it possible to house group members together, thereby enhancing the retreat environment.

To schedule a group or discuss possible formats, please contact Candida Condor, program coordinator, (408) 667-3052.

CYNTHIA JOHNSON BIANCHETTA

NEW PROGRAM ON HUMAN POTENTIAL AND ECOLOGICAL DESIGN

The Farallones Institute has been creating models of ecologically stable, resource-conserving environments for twenty years. Its Integral Urban House in Berkeley and Rural Center in Occidental have pioneered models demonstrating new concepts in solar design, water conservation, waste recycling, and energy production. Esalen Institue, in cooperation with the Farallones Institute, is offering a series of programs that explore the coevolution of personal and planetary health, culture, consciousness, and design. The first two workshops, listed in this catalog, are scheduled for November 8-10 and January 31-February 2. Please turn to Esalen Seminars for more information.

FRIENDS OF ESALEN QUARTERLY NEWSLETTER

The Friends of Esalen Newsletter is for and about the extended Esalen community. Published quarterly, it covers current events that we can't keep up with in the Catalog. Deborah Miller, coordinator of the Friends of Esalen, is its editor.

Through membership contributions, Friends of Esalen support the scholarship fund, the newsletter, and other projects. In return, they receive the Esalen Catalog three times a year and the quarterly newsletter, and are invited to workshops designed specifically for them (see Esalen Seminars, December 1-6). If they wish, they are included in a directory. Currently there are Friends in twenty-two countries. The aim of the Friends of Esalen is to reach out to the expanding Esalen worldwide network. If you would like to join us, please complete and return the membership form on page 43.

UPCOMING ESALEN CATALOGS

The Esalen Catalog has celebrated milestones since the Institute's founding and has pointed to emerging issues of interest. In upcoming catalogs we will feature the work of Robert Bellah and his forthcoming book, The Good Society, and the work of Frederick Spiegelberg, professor emeritus of comparative religion at Stanford University and fondly regarded as the godfather of Esalen Institute. These two individuals, among others, continue to shape ideas and probe new possibilities for the decade ahead (and beyond).

INSTITUTE OF TRANSPERSONAL PSYCHOLOGY OFFERS EXTERNAL MASTER'S DEGREES

Work students now have the opportunity to integrate their work study experience at Esalen with the external degree program of the Institute of Transpersonal Psychology. The external degree format enables students to study at any location. Work students will be able to continue the dynamics of personal growth fostered at Esalen while earning master's degrees in transpersonal studies or in transpersonal psychology.

Inquiries and applications should be made directly to ITP. Contact:

■ INVITATIONAL CONFERENCES

In its continuing commitment to the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Currently scheduled programs and their conveners are listed here.

November 3–8
The Psychology Project of the Soviet-American Exchange Center

This conference will bring together twenty leading Soviet and American psychologists to discuss two of the psychology project's upcoming publications: 1) a Russian/English English/Russian encyclopedic dictionary, and 2) a book of reviews that looks at the history and future of several fields in Soviet psychology, projecting the effects of changes taking place in the society as a whole.

CYNTHIA JOHNSON BIANCHETTA

December 13–15
Esalen Community Invitational Conference

Each year at this time Esalen offers a local interest group the opportunity to come to Esalen for five days. Conferences to date have brought together emergency medical technicians; various ecology groups in the Big Sur area; and people from San Louis Obispo to Monterey who work with AIDS patients. These conferences give people with special interests the opportunity to meet each other and form their own support groups. The focus of this year's conference will be decided at a later date.

December 15–20
Ecological Transformation

Coordinated by the Esalen Ecology Group

This conference will bring together environmentalists and activists to explore the confluence of ecological, cultural, and personal transformation, with focus on a local project.

January 5–10
Somatic Therapy and People of Color

Convened by Clyde Ford & Don Hanlon Johnson

This invitational conference will cover a number of topics of concern to people of color in the somatics field: 1) the somatic reality of oppression; 2) somatic psychology and people of color; 3) discrimination in the somatics field; 4) attracting people of color to somatics; 5) the contribution of non-white traditions to somatics.

February 2–7
Soviet-American Leadership Conference

Cosponsored by the Soviet-American Exchange Center & the Foundation for Social Innovations

Moderated by Gennady Alferenko, Founder/Chairman of the Foundation for Social Innovations, USSR & Slava Loutchkov, Vice President of the Soviet-American Exchange Center and Director of the Center's Psychology Project

This conference will bring together young Soviet and American political leaders from various ethnic groups and political affiliations. It will examine possibilities for change in human values as the Soviet Union undergoes its transition from an authoritarian system to civil society.

WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 42-43. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

With the completion of the Big House renovation in June, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Candida Condor, (408) 667-3052.

Finally, there are other events which enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. And, there is a community event schedule that is offered; please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Golf in the Kingdom... an exploration of the inner game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart.—Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It may be experienced not simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

In these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two of the days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Recommended reading: Michael Murphy, Golf in the Kingdom (Dell); Timothy Gallwey, The Inner Game of Golf (Random House).

Heartbeat

Gabrielle Roth

Heartbeat is a shamanic journey into shadow country, into the land of forgotten feelings. It is a journey to reclaim the power of loving—yourself, others, and the planet we inhabit. Rooted in Gabrielle Roth's cathartic form of dance, this workshop is an introduction to her method of exploring and transforming the core emotions. The work is about feelings—your feelings. The work is about the heart—your heart. Come and dance to its beat. $675

Living Meditations

Judyth Weaver

In our busy lives we do so much—but how do we do it? Are we fully aware of our actions and the consequences of what we do? Are our actions as appropriate and responseable as they could be? Could our lives be easier or more energetically economical? What are we doing to/with ourselves, and how does that affect us and others, our health, our relationships, work, longevity, our well-being?

This workshop encourages participants to "tune in" and become more aware on many levels of how they live. The work is experiential; through awareness of breath, self, and each other, and by focusing on everyday activities such as walking, sitting, standing, touching, and the processing of such as desirable, participants develop a fuller sense of mindfulness. This direct study of one's experience provides a practice ground for change and can suggest how to go about it. Such awareness of personal needs and desires can increase one's chances for becoming a fuller, more realized, happier, and healthier human being.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 40-41. $675

An Intimate Community: Caring and Conflict

Joel Dweck Isaacs & Anne Clark Isaacs

The leaders write: "Our goal in this workshop is to help each person touch their deepest place of longing to be whole. Starting from this inner place, we will strive for group interactions of the same quality. Together, participants and leaders alike, the risks we take in knowing and revealing ourselves create an intimate community.

"Feelings provide self-knowledge, depth, and pleasure, especially when they flow freely. Relating to others is most gratifying and growthful when these feelings are expressed openly and directly. We will work to realign the point of balance where the hope for contact and love is often countered by the fear of being engulfed or abandoned. We will explore ways to expand our options beyond isolation or giving up oneself to be close."

The leaders have worked together for over a decade, sharing a commitment to relationship and community. Their training in numerous disciplines allows them to tailor each workshop to the needs and desires of the participants. They use Reichian emotional release, group process, play, nurturing, confrontation, and healing energy, and have an appreciation of the spiritual nature of self and relationship. When asked to characterize intimate relationship, one of them exclaimed, "It's heaven and hell!" This workshop aims toward easier access to heaven and shorter times in hell. $675

September 2–7

Path of the River: A Salmon River Journey

Steven Harper & Nichols Expeditions

For workshop description see Wilderness Programs, page 39. $750

Weekend of September 6–8

Inner Sound and Voice

Jill Purce

This is a workshop of practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the Self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psycho-physical effects of breathing, chanting, mantric and sonic meditations, learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance, to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures, including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other methods. $350

Week of September 8–13

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as base camp, the group will explore different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

Self-Acceptance Training: Advanced

Richard Olney & Leonard Bearne

This workshop is basically experiential, but time will also be given to theoretical and didactic considerations of interest to professional therapists. Please refer to September 22-27 for complete workshop description.

Please note: Due to the time given to the didactic material in this advanced workshop, not everyone will have a chance to work personally with the leaders. $675

The Art of Receiving

Gabriele Hilberg

This culture makes it difficult to receive gracefully. Many of us learn early in life to equate receiving with weakness, helplessness, and dependency. One source of difficulty originates from a deep-seated belief that we do not deserve the love, attention, praise, or affection that is offered. Another stems from a fear of being obligated by the other person's expectations. Our willingness to receive brings greater honesty to our desire to give to others. The openness to receiving allows us to fully experience our relationship with another person, opens our hearts to the love and compassion of others and, in times of crisis, enables us to reach out for help.

Participants in this workshop will examine the beliefs and expectations that created their internal blockages and will learn new ways of receiving wisely, gracefully, and with dignity. $675

The Life Energy Process℠

Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process workshop is a spiritually-oriented approach to body work and lifestyle which allows individuals direct contact with the spiritual self through energy vibrations. This method is facilitated by specific intensive and subtle movements, which participants may find open them to their own healing abilities, allowing them to release unfinished emotions, radiational and chemical toxins, and psychological disturbances. From that point of greater clarity, they may move to the next step in their personal development. Participants continue this energy work physically and verbally through process inquiry and dialogue with the leader as they examine the superficial trace problems of their everyday lives and explore their deeper energy disturbances through energy patterning.

Energetic forms of massage, dance, and theater may be included in this process. Some of the work will be individual, some will be hands-on with partners. The workshop may be of particular interest to professionals and laypersons alike who are excited by the integration of Eastern and Western methods with the new physics for personal, social, and organizational evolution.

Recommended reading: Stephano Sabetti, The Wholeness Principle; Manifestations of Energy; and Shinkido Massage (available from Life Energy Media, 14755 Ventura Blvd., Ste. 1908, Sherman Oaks, CA 91403; 213-874-7100). $675

September 8–15

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting—to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants are given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

For further information about this workshop, contact: The Painting Experience Studio, 2101 20th Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94116; (415) 564-8515.

$1025 (plus $30 materials fee paid directly to the leaders)

Weekend of September 13–15

A Weekend with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $350

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clearly," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continual change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness throughout the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life. $350

Mastery in Daily Life

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

We tend to assume that mastery is available only to those born with exceptional abilities. But mastery is not a goal or destination. It is a journey that every one of us can take, provided we have the right map.

This workshop offers clear directions for the journey of mastery in whatever field you may choose. It will include discussion, demonstration, and movement exercises from Leonard Energy Training (LET) which emphasize mastery in daily life. For those familiar with LET, this workshop will present new material. Some of the topics to be addressed:

- Five keys to mastery
- How to avoid being a Dabbler, Obsessive, or Hacker
- Creating a vision
- The secrets of practice
- Staying balanced and centered on the path of mastery
- Avoiding pitfalls
- Playing the edge
- Loving the plateau
- Dealing with conflict
- Negotiating with change
- Staying on the path
- Getting energy from mastery

This workshop involves physical movement, but is not strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Gestalt Practice

Christine Stewart Price

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear—
And when used—is inexhaustible. —Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form—nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental—evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is *intra*personal rather than *inter*personal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Presence: A Fluidity of Being

Elisa Lodge

Elisa Lodge writes: "Presence is a power that arises from a deep sense of self-worth and trust. It reflects a broadened vision and whole-hearted acceptance of the varied facets of being. It is a state of dynamic balance where there is no unnecessary strain of self-defeating awkwardness. One is at home in oneself and at ease with the world.

"During this week, participants can gain a deepened appreciation of the elements in themselves that contribute to this timeless state of fluidity and ease. They will have an opportunity to experiment and explore how their bodies' shapes and forms, emotional histories, and self-images are intimately intertwined. This growing awareness is the basic grounding from which the creative experience of presence can be known. Movement patterns, the ways we walk and breathe, also reveal how we inhibit or allow our personal power. As we become more comfortable with ourselves, we transform not only the way we might carry our head or make contact with another, but our whole way of being in the world.

"This work is based on an approach woven from gestalt, psychosynthesis, Rolf movement, and performance art. Video feedback will be used." $675

The Subtle Art of Meditation

David Streeter

For many people meditation seems a bit far-fetched, strenuous, difficult to learn, and perhaps impossible to incorporate into their busy schedules and hectic lives. But the seemingly rare ability to experience deep, tranquil, and clear states of consciousness is very much within reach. In this workshop, through the use of simple yet profound methods, participants will explore the same inner terrain the ascetic yogi or the stoic Zen monk explores. Daily sessions will offer nourishment, inner peace, and opportunity for gentle emotional release.

The list of beneficial effects of meditation is long and impressive, but meditation is much more than a means to an end; it can be a delightful end in of itself. The purpose of this workshop will be to inspire the student to explore his or her rich interior life, to discover that crystal clear still-point that is described so well in every spiritual tradition.

A Food Experience

Jane Miletich

Eating habits reflect the mental and emotional states of this culture. Eating delicious, healthful food in a beautiful setting with others who are interested in living healthier, happier lives encourages clearer mental, spiritual, and emotional patterns. This workshop is for people who are interested in making changes in how and what they eat. Participants will be introduced to various methods of preparing food and alternative diets, including: a balanced, cooked macrobiotic diet; a raw/living foods/wheatgrass diet; and a juice bar with organic vegetables and fruits.

The program will be individualized to participants' needs. Those needing direction will be introduced to the basic principles of Ayurveda (a science of self-healing) and food combining. Those interested in helping with meal preparation may do so. The kitchen provided has been specifically designed for preparing these foods. Exercise, yoga, and massage will also be part of the week.

This workshop is modeled after Esalen's biannual cleansing program. During the eight years that this program has existed, hundreds of community participants have felt the beneficial results of eating simple, whole foods. The additional $50 produce fee provides for the wide variety of organically grown fruits, vegetables, seeds, nuts, grains, and condiments that will be freshly prepared.

The Medicine Wheel Way

Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

This workshop will draw on the Native American Medicine Wheel, ceremonies, and teachings as resources for personal growth. Just as Western psychological theory provides a framework for describing human stages of development, so does the Medicine Wheel offer a framework for self-individuation. Both systems embody steps for healing. A primary difference, however, is that the Medicine Wheel way of living views humans as sacred beings and maintains that each individual must find their own balance of spirit, body, emotion, and mind.

The Medicine Wheel way has guided many peoples through their journeys of self-discovery. It illuminates the relationship of all things, each direction on the wheel having its particular meaning and pointing to aspects needed for integration. With this tool, information can be brought forth from the memory so that essential elements for balance are not ignored. Ceremonies and rituals mark the passage of seasons and significant events of individual and group life, and connect the individual to the great mystery of life.

This experiential workshop will use these ancient teachings, providing a supportive means for participants to continue their process of self-development and to deepen their relationship with the natural world. Activities will include learning the Medicine Wheel, finding totem animals as guides, assessing one's current situation or season in life, and gathering one's resources for the next cycle of change. Gestalt, chanting, drumming, and rituals will be used in a climate of trust and acceptance.

Weekend of September 20–22

Letting Go – Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Beliefs, fears, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate—in the moment—to ourselves, to our work, and to those we love.

The workshop includes periods of intense body work for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dream work, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge. This workshop will have no more than 30 participants. $350

The Subtle Self in Motion

Judy Blackstone

This workshop offers subtle, concentrated work to help participants truly inhabit their bodies. Mind-breath-body exercises will be used to awaken consciousness of the inner depths of the body, to attune to the emotional underpinnings of bodily tensions, and to release the bound energy of old pain.

The personal themes which emerge from this work will be explored verbally in a supportive group setting and in a free-movement class for the expression of non-verbal experience. There will be daily meditation practice as well as sound and visualization exercises for penetrating to the core of the body-mind, to a level of unified awareness. Through this unbroken contact with the self, participants may discover the joy, health, and spontaneity of their essential nature. This workshop will not be physically taxing; the emphasis will be on introspective work. $350

Dean Ornish

This workshop will teach how to reduce cholesterol and blood pressure and how to begin reversing coronary heart disease. For the past fourteen years, physician Dean Ornish has conducted three research studies demonstrating, for the first time, that a comprehensive life-style program (yoga, meditation, imagery, diet, smoking cessation, exercise, and group psychotherapy) can produce extraordinary improvements without medications. This workshop will include lectures that review the research data and explain why life-style affects the heart and will provide experiential training in the life-style program.

Illness can serve as a catalyst for personal transformation and growth, motivating a person to ask, "Why did I get sick? What are the causes?" What we eat, how we respond to stress, and other aspects of life-style are powerful determinants of health and disease. It is also known that feelings of isolation can lead to psychological stress and ultimately to illness, whereas feelings of intimacy can lead to healing.

Because the technology for measuring coronary heart disease is so advanced, heart disease is an excellent model for measuring the power of life-style changes to help heal—and prevent—heart disease.

Finding My Place: A Workshop for Men

Jerry Johnson

"After twenty years of women's liberation, men are the new continent." Coming from Nancy Friday, an American feminist writer, this is a provocative statement. However, many American men are asking, "If true, what does this mean to me?"

The 1990s will surely be a decade of male growth. The media has begun to confirm that old patterns and definitions of masculinity are no longer valid. Films show male friendship and bonding without war. Magazines explain new roles for men in parenting and other realms that were previously the exclusive domain of women.

This workshop will help awaken participants to often repressed parts of their masculinity which can form the basis for new self-identity and relationship. It combines universal male themes, ancient spiritual rituals, and experiential exercises to help men create a new mode of feeling. Themes will include:

- How does my absent father continue to shape my self-image?
- Do I have an inner guide to masculinity?
- How do I move beyond competition and fear in relating to other men?
- Is there a way to respond to contradictory messages from women about being sensitive and/or strong?

This workshop is for men who want to grow beyond old, traditional definitions of being a man but who don't know where to begin, for men who are dissatisfied with being cut off from meaningful relationships with other men and who want to learn how to relate as brothers. $350

A Week with Laura DeNuccio

Learning communities are being built everywhere. The whole world is a learning community! Where is the True Human Being?
—Rumi

We live in a time when many people are called to a higher consciousness that transcends merely material concerns. Yet, paradoxically, this calling, without a grounding in nature and the body, may only lead to partial realization. This workshop seeks to heal the split between vision and the world.

Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can increase their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Tools for this self-discovery include movement, music, breath, and various meditations to enliven, balance, and transform energy blocks in the body.

This workshop will be a time of nourishment. Participants will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one's inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What's meaningful and significant to you? What's truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth.

While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group can experiment with co-creating community, an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore the ever-unfolding adventure of spirit.

The Nature of Movement: Aikido and Wilderness

Steven Harper & Wendy Palmer

In this week-long workshop, participants will work indoors with energy awareness and principles derived from aikido, and outdoors on short day-hikes into Big Sur's backcountry to explore the movement that nature inspires. Both aikido and hiking are moving meditations which, when done well, require the individual to be in harmony with the natural world. There will be an opportunity to take what is learned on the aikido mat out into the natural world and bring what is learned from nature onto the aikido mat. Participants can then begin to integrate what they learn from aikido and from nature into their lives.

All evenings and most meals will be at Esalen. Participants need not have previous experience in aikido or hiking. $675

Freeing the Runner Within

Joan Ullyot

Human beings are natural running animals. But civilization and technology combine to alienate us from this instinctive side of ourselves. Non-runners lament that they don't know how to run, while competitors puzzle over choosing the right training. This course is designed to take runners of all levels inward, to find and express the runner within, to free themselves to run easily and joyously, longer and faster.

In addition to group runs, discussions of training principles, and practice of methods such as hill-bounding, this workshop will include mental training exercises developed recently by sports psychologists. These include relaxation and guided imagery, affirmations, breathing and body awareness, race visualizations, and associative focusing. The inner confidence and athletic energies released by these methods can be harnessed to run a personal best in a fall marathon or simply to experience the beauty of a daily jog. Limited to 12 participants, to allow for work on individual goals. $675

Self-Acceptance Training: Basic

Richard Olney & Mari Krieger

This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. It is defined as "the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgment, self-criticism, or self-evaluation." The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual's relationship with the universe.

Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cognitive examination of the individual's "pretends" and illusions that obstruct self-acceptance. Limited to 25 people. $675

Eli Jaxon-Bear

When all the knots that strangle the heart are loosened, the mortal becomes immortal.—Katha Upanishad

The enneagram of character fixation gives us a structure of the knots that strangle the heart. It is a wisdom mirror for recognizing the ego. Recognition of the ego's desires and attachments is essential for its dissolution. Making one's fixation work better or discovering what it does well misses the essential task of healing the heart of suffering.

Workshop participants will explore how character fixation is an imitation of soul. In a setting of Vedanta and Buddhist cosmology and psychology, they will work with their passions and attachments as obscurations to the soul's awakening. Group exercises, open seat, trance, truth-telling, role playing, and movement will be used to unmask the fixation and move toward soul awakening.

Finding Inspired Work in Mid-Life

Peller Marion

At 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people don't live to be 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them largely because their lives seem effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop, drawing from a conceptual base of adult development theory and models of aging, will explore these issues. Through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, What's my dissatisfaction? Who am I? What's my definition of success? the leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain a clarity, focus, and direction of one's life contributions. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

West African Culture through Music and Dance

Yao Tamakloe

Yao Tamakloe is a West African teacher of dance, music, and anthropology. He has danced and taught with Babatunde Olatunji and Katherine Dunham for over ten years. Along with his wife Anindo Abukutsa, from Kenya, and his instructor from Ghana, Nana C.K. Ganyoi, Tamakloe will present the West African world view through dance, song, drumming, and the religion and history that these cultural art forms embody, and relate them to the universality of humankind. $350

Metaphors We Live By

George Lakoff

Metaphor is the means by which we understand what we experience. As we grow up, we acquire hundreds of standardized but largely unconscious metaphors that are built into our language. We think, act, and even dream using these metaphors. We have metaphors for comprehending everything from time and causation to emotions, morality, love, and even the nature of life and death.

Our unconscious capacity for metaphor is awesome in power. It is liberating in that it permits both abstract thought and the workings of our imagination; it can be stultifying when it limits our possibilities. As long as it remains inaccessible to consciousness, we can neither appreciate its magnificence nor see where it confines us.

This workshop has several goals: first, to help participants become conscious of the metaphors that govern their thoughts and actions; second, to reveal how these everyday metaphors are manifest in poetry and myth, and how they vary in other cultures; third, to develop skills in using metaphor to make new sense of their lives.

A Week with David Schiffman

To make effective, creative choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set—the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressures of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

In this week, participants will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and bouyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Kenn & Vicki Chase

Heart disease remains the major cause of death and disability in the United States. It, like most chronic disease, is a product of life-style and, in many cases, is preventable. Changing life-style habits is not easy to do. It requires commitment, patience, determination, and education. The purpose of this workshop is to assist each individual in identifying coronary risk factors and those factors necessary for initiating and maintaining a healthy heart life-style. Participants will explore the application of Eastern mind/body practices, such as t'ai chi, chi kung, and yoga relaxation, to the traditional cardiac fitness setting. The basic warm-up, work-out, and cool-down phases of cardiac fitness will be introduced as well as methods for calming the mind and promoting stress management.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 40-41. $675

Mid-Life Crisis as Spiritual Emergence

Karen Turner

Participants will view mid-life transition in the framework of spiritual emergence and renewal, a time when the old systems the individual has used as foundations seem stripped away, leaving chaos and challenging long-held beliefs. It is a time of soul-searching; of confronting both inflated and deflated self-concepts; of surrendering to deeper, more expanded states of awareness; of learning to trust inner guidance as absolute authority in one's life.

This workshop will be a rite of passage for both men and women going through this transition. Together they will have the opportunity to discover each participant's unique self, and how each is in relationship to self, each other, the world, and spirit. Tools for self-exploration and awareness gathered from psychology, mysticism, and shamanism will be presented, with time for discussion and sharing. $675

Sacred Song of the Body

Susan Osborn & David Densmore

Susan Osborn writes: "Singing can be a practice, just as meditation or walking or dance can be. It can be a way to practice making a creative choice. Rather than identifying the energy that runs through our bodies as physical, mental, emotional, or spiritual, singing is a way to catalyze that energy and make something true and beautiful with it.

"I have learned that a truly beautiful sound is not produced through technique, but through deep listening and honesty. Singing is the language of the body and, as such, when we truly hear ourselves or another sing, we have access to the great body of knowledge and experience that each of us carries within us. When we sing together in an environment of respect and deep listening, an experience of communion is available—an honoring of our differences and our oneness. This class is an invitation to witness each other and yourself in a respectful and creative environment of song." $675

Cortical Reeducation® and The Feldenkrais® Method

Harriet Goslins & Mark Bender

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain/muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk of injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with aftereffects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back, to improve their posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provider approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

A Weekend with David Schiffman

The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning. $350

The Shadow of Love

Ayala Pines

Whatever is the essence of the love that binds two people will be the essence of the shadow this love will cast when threatened. Jealousy, envy, anger, fear, and other powerful emotions are all part of the shadow of love. In most cases, they are not a result of individual pathology, but of a certain dynamic in the relationship. They are useful signals that partners can interpret and take advantage of to improve themselves and the relationship.

The structured exercises, discussion, guided fantasy, and role-playing in this workshop are designed to help participants identify the threat triggered by the shadow of love and how to protect their relationships in positive and constructive ways. This workshop is for anyone who seeks better understanding of love and the emotions in its shadow, especially romantic jealousy. It may also be of interest to counselors who work with couples or individuals on issues related to jealousy. $350

Luc Brebion

To take part, at all deeply, in the experience of art requires a quality of concentration, a stillness of mind, and an openness to receive which is different from the awareness we use in ordinary life. Immersed in contemplation, we can have the rare privilege of being in the presence of the artist and of letting him or her show us how to reach for what is essential within.

Luc Brebion, a native of France, has combed the museums of Europe in search of artistic treasures. In this year's Aesthetic Self workshop, he will again use a multi-media approach and an experiential method to help participants penetrate works of art and become absorbed by them. As they are led through an unhurried appreciation of paintings, music, and literature, they will have the opportunity to perceive the particular substance that real art can offer if sustained attention is applied. Learning to develop their ability to contemplate, they will find themselves, perhaps for the first time, in close rapport with such artists as Joachim Patinir, Jan van Eyck, Johann Sebastian Bach, Cesar Vallejo, and David Rosenmann-Taub. $350

New Competences for an Age of Uncertainty

Donald Michael

Because we live with unprecedented levels of complexity and uncertainty, an abiding crucial challenge for each of us is learning how to be better learners. The old answers and questions are increasingly ineffective. Yet, conventional definitions of competence encourage each of us, and organizations, too, to avoid learning by denying or disguising uncertainty so that we appear to know what we are doing. The result is ever more stress, anxiety, and inadequate personal and organizational performance.

This seminar will introduce a set of interlocking skills or "new competences" necessary for making humane and effective decisions when uncertainty can provide the occasion for learning—in work places and in interpersonal and family situations. These skills include: acknowledging and specifying high levels of uncertainty, error embracing, being future-responsive, boundary spanning, interpersonal communication, and self-knowledge.

The approach will be both cognitive and experiential. Participants will have the opportunity to become more comfortable with the vulnerability that accompanies facing their uncertainties; to question the need to act over-cautiously out of fear of making a mistake; and to reexamine the incentives for those defensive posturings that make it so hard to act responsibly and compassionately. As a previous participant said, "This seminar is for those who are ready to move beyond the personal and want to effect change in public and private organizations." $350

Arthur Munyer & Esalen Massage Practitioners

The human body is a rich source of information and intelligence. Trigger point, the movement of myofascial tissue through soft, deep contact with pressure points, and Esalen massage are methods of working with the body that can help the practitioner communicate with stressed, blocked, and chronically troubled areas. This workshop will combine these modalities, along with joint release, movement, and studies in anatomy. It will also address concerns of burnout, depression, creativity, and peer support for those who have chosen a demanding profession. It is especially suggested for body workers, physicians, physical therapists, chiropractors, and other health care practitioners who want to expand their hands-on skills.

Mending Bodymind and Soul

Joan & Myrin Borysenko

The sense of unworthiness, the feeling of "I'm not enough," is a deep wound that impedes both physical healing and psychospiritual growth. To the extent that we identify with shame and fear-driven false selves, we forget the radiance of our own true natures. This week will be a healthy balance of dismantling false selves, retrieving lost parts of our authenticity from the shadow, and practicing remembrance of the true self. Processes will include inner wisdom exercises, dream work, meditation, song, dance, journal and poetry writing, spiritual autobiography, healing and prayer circles. A magical alchemy occurs through sharing our stories in a circle of trust, where healing and self-acceptance are natural outgrowths of understanding and connectedness.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 40-41. $675

The Enneagram: Basic Workshop

Helen Palmer

The enneagram is an ancient psychological typology that views personality traits as the outer indication of particular aspects of higher awareness. The system describes nine different personality types and their interrelationships. It is unusually helpful in understanding oneself and the thoughts and feelings of those with whom we live and work, but the real power of the system lies in the fact that our ordinary psychological habits present a strategic access point to a continuum of experience that directs us back to essence.

This workshop presents the enneagram material in the oral way, by seeing and hearing panels of representatives of the nine types on video and on small panels drawn from the class. The panel method, coupled with practice in the internal placements of attention that characterize each of the types, will introduce participants to their own type, and demonstrates the radically different perspectives held by each of the nine. $675

Chakra Psychology

Nancy Rosanoff

The chakra system is generally known to be an ancient Hindu concept of spiritual energy centers located along the spine, which are awakened or energized as individuals progress spiritually. This course gives participants a modern understanding of how to use the chakras as guides in their quest for psychological and spiritual development.

Awakening the chakras allows people to observe the interaction between the body, mind, and spirit. The chakras can thus become tools to balance daily life within the context of a greater spiritual reality, with such practical applications as: enhancing self-understanding, improving loving relationships, changing unwanted behavior patterns, and unblocking creative energy.

In these five days, participants will work with their chakra spirit guides, yoga stretches, chants, meditation, breathing and awareness exercises, drawing, and writing to explore their chakras and themselves, open blockages, and heal past pains.

Creative Writing Brainstorming

Herbert Gold

From feeling to expression to communication, this workshop will carry participants into the possibilities of making literature. Exploring an experience different for everyone, yet shared by all, they will probe for the riches within.

Participants should bring typewriter, word processor, pen, soft pencil, or clay tablets and stylus to the meetings. A situation will be called forth—love, death, ambition, pride, fear, hatred, jealousy—and after preparation in the discussion, participants will write. Then they will read and rewrite each other's work. They may expect to go from truth to lying: from recollection to art.

What may develop is a sense of style and control as a part of the mastery of experience. Participants will practice the freedom of imagination by giving shape to it.

$350

Keeping a Good Relationship Alive

Gerald Smith

This workshop will focus on a major dilemma in keeping a good relationship alive. That is: how to be close and vulnerable as partners yet separate and free to grow as individuals. This dilemma is never resolved because each partner continues to change, but it can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship.

Much of participants' time during this weekend will be with their partners separate from other couples. Verbal, non-verbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection will be used, as will skills at resolving differences in ways that do not produce "scar tissue." And, since playing is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be experiences to kindle the imagination and the willingness to play together. Limited to 12 couples.

Journey to the Heart

Joseph Chilton Pearce

For the last three decades, Joseph Chilton Pearce has been synthesizing scientific brain research in physics, biology, and psychology in an effort to understand and map nature's plan for the development of human intelligence. He writes:

"The intelligence of the heart is the only force that can pull our fragments of self together; it is the nurturing power so many of us missed right from the beginning of life, that unconditional love which alone would have assured us of the evolutionary progress nature intended. That progress is nothing but the progression of love toward its own source, and that source is the heart."

In this seminar, Pearce will share his findings on the three-part human brain and how each part has its own language, its own development cycle, its own purpose. He will talk about the difference between intellect and intelligence, the ego's inability to self-analyze, and the physiological connection between the heart and the brain that prevents our triune brain from being continually at war with itself.

Discourse, discussion, contemplation, and meditation will offer seminarians a glimpse of their own developmental cycle—where it was rich, where lacking—and acceptance of their own perfection, and tools for enriching the inner journey to their hearts. $350

Council of All Beings

John Seed

The Council of All Beings is a series of rituals created by John Seed and Joanna Macy to help individuals feel their connection with nature in their hearts and bodies. By rediscovering our interconnectedness with all beings, we see that the pain of the earth is our own pain and that the fate of the earth is our own fate. The Council of All Beings empowers people to act on behalf of the earth and gives clarity and direction for the work ahead.

Participants in this workshop will have the opportunity to review the human evolutionary journey, to shed their solely human identification, to feel great empathy for the myriad species and habitats of the Earth. Through personal sharing, meditation, and ritual, they will explore the depths of their concern and love for the planet in this time of crisis. As many individuals involved in this work have discovered, alignment with a larger identity clarifies, dignifies, and heals one's personal conflicts. In the same fashion, it clarifies and orders patterns of consumption, needs for intimacy and support, priorities for action. This gathering provides tools for putting this into practice in daily life.

This work draws upon current scientific findings to sharpen people's understanding of the ecological crises that threaten our planet. It draws on systems theory and the Gaia hypothesis to provide a solid, rational-conceptual foundation for the deep ecology movement and combines them with spiritual traditions thousands of years old that attune individuals to the Earth. $350

Polarity Massage Intensive

Deborah Anne Medow
& Esalen Massage Practitioners

Polarity massage is a system for balancing the currents of life force which naturally flow through the body. It is a holistic approach to healing whereby the practitioner and recipient work with thoughts and attitudes, nutritional needs, polarity yoga exercises, and the polarity massage session itself.

Participants in this five-day workshop will be instructed in basic concepts of the polarity system as applied to the human energy field through the medium of massage. Emphasis will be on theory, polarity points and counterpoints, energy balancing methods, nutrition, and polarity yoga. Three-hour class sessions will be held in the mornings and afternoons. Evenings will be for practice and occasional group meetings.

This workshop is designed both for the interested layperson and the professional body work practitioner, and serves as a good review for anyone who has previously taken a polarity workshop.

Pilgrimage

Joyce Frazee

Lama Govinda writes in The Way of the White Clouds that pilgrimage is "an inner movement or development directed toward a yet unknown distant aim . . . from which springs the readiness to accept people and new environments as part of our destiny and the confidence in the ultimate significance of all that happens and is in harmony with the depth of our being . . ."

Participants in this workshop will use gestalt practice, dream work, drawing, meditation, and group process as a way of pilgrimage toward the "yet unknown distant aim."

Balancing Values and Work: From Inner Purpose to Outer Action

Sue McKibbin & Patricia Moore

Lack of alignment between one's inner values and purpose and one's work in the world can result in frustration, hopelessness, boredom, and cynicism. But when people shift from outer- to inner-directedness and bridge purpose and action, they find that meaning, empowerment, and well-being can emerge.

Workshop participants will go within to explore this realm of their lives through processes ranging from meditation and journey work to questionnaires and self-assessment instruments. Each person will have the opportunity to balance their inner guidance with individual and group exercises related to their particular work situation. Five themes will be explored:

- Purpose, values, and vision
- Personal transition processes
- Balancing individual and organizational polarities
- Practical tools for the inner journey
- Sources for personal transformation and organizational paradigm shifts

The workshop is designed so participants can return to their daily lives with resources for continuing the process of exploration and discovery necessary to link inner purpose with outer action.

Self-Defense and Empowerment

Mary Tesoro, Tom Elliott, Mary Speidell & Paul Speidell

How much does the threat of potential assault or the pain of past assault restrict your life? This workshop is for women and men who desire to own their bodies fully and to claim their right to move both peacefully and powerfully through their lives.

The art of self-protection will be explored as a path to self-esteem, personal courage, and healing. Leonard Energy Training, which operates from the assumption that human capacity lies largely untapped, will be interwoven with techniques from the non-aggressive martial art of aikido to help participants form a solid base of balance, grace, and power. Techniques from the Model Mugging Self-Defense and Empowerment Program will be offered as effective, street-proven self-protection training.

This workshop will take place in an emotionally supportive environment, with emphasis on personal choice and positive growth for each individual, and aim toward the enhancement of each participant's ability to love and trust themselves and others. No prior experience or training is necessary. For more information contact Mary Tesoro, Box 986, San Luis Obispo, CA 93406; (805) 995-1224.

Secrets to Tell, Secrets to Keep

Karen Paine-Gernée & Terry Hunt

Secret acts. Secret thoughts. Secret births. Secret deaths. Secret relationships. Secrets we keep from others. Secrets we keep from ourselves. As children many of us were harmed by things we could not tell, that could not be told. Recovery depends on confronting the truths in our lives and making peace with what is.

Alcoholic, abusive, or other dysfunctional families are ruled by the denial that something is wrong in the family system. As a result, children take on problems and emotional pain of the family and suffer them as their own fault. The assumption is that Mom and Dad knew what they were doing. In fact, they didn't. By exposing the family secrets, these children who are now adults can stop taking responsibility for what went wrong and free themselves from the need to believe that "my childhood wasn't so bad" and "it didn't really affect me." It is possible to heal.

Everyone has secrets. When is it safe to share them? When is it not? Nowhere do our secrets cause greater difficulty than in our intimate or sexual lives. How do we get close when we are so ashamed of secrets buried deep inside? In these five days, participants will create a community to work through the shame and isolation that some secrets cause. Together they will explore how to: grow with the secrets they each must bear, develop healthy personal boundaries, and cultivate a life-affirming balance between personal privacy and self-disclosure.

- Express feelings with simplicity, clarity, and integrity
- Celebrate playfulness and spontaneity
- Release disappointments, reversals, and emotional losses
- Mark their hopes and dreams and renew their spirits through myth and rituals

Action Theater: Really Pretending

Ruth Zaporah

When we were children, we frequently created our reality through pretending. We played freely in a spontaneous world. But in our adult world, we are often left with only a memory of this freedom. The Action Theater process rekindles this spirit of play, of being open to change and present to life.

Action Theater is a system of exercises and games that integrates mind, body, and spirit and leads toward free and spontaneous experience. Sessions begin with simple movement improvisations; participants come into, feel, and stretch their bodies. From this orientation they play within forms that increase awareness of movement and vocal verbal expression. Range of emotion expands; images, characters, and situations emerge from the territories of awareness, memory, and the imagination.

Each Action Theater event serves as a mirror. In the realm of awareness, there is little distinction between the theater and the street. Who we are, how aware we are, how we process our perceptions and reactions is the same everywhere. In the studio, we improvise within forms relevant to movement and theater, but the lessons affect our daily lives.

This workshop accommodates the novice, the explorer, and the practiced. $675

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you—singing. $350

Massage Intensive for Couples

Brita Ostrom & Attila Vaas

This workshop is for partners who want to learn basic skills for giving each other a massage. Individual concerns will be addressed so participants can continue their practice at home. $350

Practical Intuition: Introduction

Laura Day

We are all psychics. Every time we draw a conclusion, we work with intuition as well as linear and emotional processes. Identifying how our intuitive faculty works enables us to use it selectively for effective decision-making. A predominantly linear process may be preferable when clear, empirical information is available. When little data is at hand or if the question relates to how current choices might affect future results, an intuitive process may be more efficient.

Practical Intuition, an experiential workshop, introduces intuitive methods for gaining empirical information. Participants will give and receive several present and future intuitive readings a day, focusing on predicting and retrieving verifiable data. Different intuitive styles, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, and telepathy, will be taught, along with exercises for continued training at home.

Participants are requested to bring a few photographs of themselves and people they know well, their personal and business questions, and a willingness to work as if they already knew how to do something that they in fact already know how to do. $350

Jon Kabat-Zinn

Meditation is not for the fainthearted or those seeking escape from their problems. It involves a willingness to face, in Zorba the Greek's words, the "full catastrophe" of the world and of one's own life and body, and use this very energy to grow in strength and wisdom. In this workshop, Jon Kabat-Zinn will describe his stress reduction program at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center and present his research showing how people with chronic medical problems use Buddhist mindfulness meditation practices to reduce their symptoms and heal their bodies, minds, and lives.

Participants will explore how to develop or deepen a personal meditation practice and how to use mindfulness meditation to face and transcend stress, pain, and illness in their own lives. Topics will include specific health-related problems, including pain, anxiety and panic, headaches, gastrointestinal problems, high blood pressure, heart disease, and sleep disturbances. Extended periods of meditation practice will be interspersed with the discussions.

Come prepared to work with your own version of the full catastrophe, whether it manifests primarily in your personal or professional life, or both. This workshop is appropriate for both health professionals and lay people.

A Weekend with Anne and Jim Armstrong

The Armstrongs believe that a person's greatest teacher is his or her own Divine Self, and that to successfully contact that inner teacher requires development of one's spiritual intuition. Their approach is to first debunk the myth that only some people are psychic by helping individuals discover for themselves that everyone is intuitive. They then reinforce this realization through meditations and exercises that enhance a person's conscious intuitive contact with the Divine Inner Teacher. Their goal is to help participants attain fuller everyday lives—personally, professionally, and spiritually. $350

Soviet Psychology Today: Its Effects on Global Thinking and the Helping Professions

Viatcheslav (Slava) Loutchkov

In 1990, Viatcheslav (Slava) Loutchkov, a Soviet citizen and resident of Moscow, joined the Esalen Soviet-American Exchange Program staff. He is a psychologist working on a study of psychology and perestroika while in the United States. He is a Harriman Fellow and has a MacArthur grant to pursue these studies. With him, the Exchange Program is committed to a long-term study of the interplay between psychological, social, economic, and ideological factors in perestroika.

In this seminar, Soviet films will be shown and discussed in relation to Soviet psychology. There will be discussions of Soviet helping professions and a comparison of Soviet psychological practices with their counterparts in the United States. The seminar will also explore the Stalinist legacy in Soviet psychology and examine those historical patterns that might threaten to persist, and consider psychology's creative contributions to the emerging USSR. $350

Phil Cousineau, David Darling, John Densmore & Eric Lawton

Sacred stories reflect only one aspect of the mythic traditions of the world. Of equal importance and fascination is the non-verbal image, the mandalas or holy images used for deep contemplation. Their origins can be found in nature and the human imagination, and through them we can approach the convergence of myth, dream, and art.

This live performance workshop will blend the oral tradition of storytelling with the silent stories of pictures and the narrative movement of improvisational music. Each session will be highlighted by the telling of tales by Phil Cousineau, author of The Hero's Journey: The Life and Work of Joseph Campbell; a slide show by Eric Lawton, using images from Ireland to India; and the synchronized music of David Darling, master cellist, and John Densmore, the drummer for The Doors. The themes will include myths of origins, myth and the body, myth and art, myth and music, and sacred lands.

There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float.—Conroy

Robert Hall writes: "And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you're willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt/group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you're interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we'll not only make it float, we'll take a ride in it."

Taming Nature, Wilding Man

Sim Van der Ryn & Christopher Alexander

Architecture offers a mirror of man and nature. Modern and post-modern architecture do not speak to the biological essence or the soul of human beings; more often it treats nature as background, seldom actively incorporating ecological processes into design. Join two well-known thinkers and designers for a free-wheeling weekend of dialogue on joining nature and human nature through design. $350

Spiritual Autobiography

Dan Wakefield

Participants will use drawing to evoke memories of former eras of their lives, to look at past experience in a new way, to write about it and share their stories with others. Insights from childhood and adolescence, singular experiences of their lives, and the role of a friend or mentor will provide the material for creation in pictures and words. Such re-experiencing can offer fresh understanding and appreciation of the richness of one's life; connections emerge as the story of crucial turning points is told.

A concluding exercise will show participants how to draw a road map of their journey that can serve as a guide for continuing to write their on-going spiritual autobiography. The "right to reticence" and confidentiality will be honored in the process; the workshop offers acknowledgment and appreciation rather than criticism of writing or experience.

Personal Energy Management

Myron McClellan

We are beings made up of four energies: physical, emotional, mental, and spiritual. When we are healthy, productive, creative, and in touch with our feelings, we are managing our energies effectively. When we are ill, sullen, morose, or lazy, we are not managing energy well. Energy management requires awareness and action. It requires knowledge of the nature of each of the four aspects of being and how each is used for maximum effectiveness and enjoyment. This workshop teaches skills for getting the most out of the body, feelings, mind, and spirit, both in times of ease and in times of stress.

Topics to be covered include: using the body to transmute intense emotions into energy for growth; expressing and releasing feelings; reeducating the brain; using meditation as a grounding experience; using music and movement for physical health and aliveness; establishing harmony among the four bodies in order to create what the heart desires.

The methods used in this course are fun and invigorating and are intended to give the participant tools that can be used on a daily basis to promote aliveness, no matter what physical or emotional circumstance one finds oneself in. Music, movement, toning, games, processes, and discussion are all part of the experience. $350

The Body as History

Lisbeth Marcher & Erik Jarlnaes

The workshop leaders are from Denmark, practitioners of a system of working with the body, of which Lisbeth Marcher is a founder. In this system, by gauging the tonicity of a muscle and knowing when and how it came into play in infant and childhood development, it is possible to "read" a precise psycho-history. Specific issues that are contained in these muscles can be reevoked as well. This system also works with the person's undeveloped resources, those abilities given up on and which often correspond to feelings of resignation. Bringing these resources into play encourages the individual to drop old, unfulfilling modes of protection.

This is an experiential workshop; participants will focus on body movement and energy, using them to bring about expression and integration of developmental stages.

Ocean of Longing: Innocence, Fierceness, and the Vitality of the Soul

David Whyte

Many of us feel constrained rather than emboldened by our own sense of creativity, confining our identity to small islands of possibility while the great sea of our deeper desires lies undiscovered and unexplored. The poets, myth-tellers, and contemplatives tell us that this ocean of longing and fulfillment surrounds us and informs us, but that its realization demands a radical recovery of innocence combined with a particular fierceness of presence to sustain it. We often drop our innocence of vision in order to feel safe. Our fiercer energies are then devoted to defending that sense of safety.

Through poetry, myth, music, and voice work, this weekend workshop will be a time to look at the possibilities of our own powers of innocence and the natural fierceness that springs from following our deepest desires.

Change and Self-Esteem

Phyllis Shankman

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creatively if one is to sustain a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, is the aspect of self which enables one to confront resistance and fear and which increases the willingness to change and take risks.

This workshop includes an in-depth process for finding and allowing self-acceptance and for creatively confronting opportunities for change and growth. Group activities include gestalt process work, discussion, massage, meditation, music, dance, art imagery exercises, and whatever else happens spontaneously.

The Delight of Immediacy

Charlotte Selver & Charles Brooks

Much as we may wish to live in the present, we are often preoccupied with images and ideas of how it ought to be. Instead of responding to the situation at hand with the innumerable nerves, muscles, and interweavings of consciousness which are we, much of us is immobilized by early conditioning, acute emotional problems, or by habit, and much is held back until the inner board of review gives the OK.

But children and sages have a different way of functioning. For them the world flows into their consciousness as the air into their lungs, and their responses are organismic and direct, bypassing the evaluation center which is the educated mind of the adult. It is our lack of immediacy which is usually felt as tedium and which necessitates ever stronger stimuli in the search for joy, or self-disciplines in the search for peace. By giving up these preconceptions and gradually coming to follow our sense of reality, we begin to respond not to what should be but to what is, and the world catches fire for us.

This workshop will explore direct experience which, as it becomes clearer and stronger, tends to burn away the mist of concepts and restrictions which our conditioning has interposed between ourselves and living.

Superesonant Wavenergy: Health Recovery and Maintenance

Irv Dardik

With his theory of "superesonant wavenergy," physician Irving Dardik has suggested a means by which to understand the underlying mechanisms of chronic illness and a program by which to treat it. In this seminar, Dardik will go a step further and discuss how his theory serves as a preventive model for maintaining health and well-being.

Drawing in part on the work of Ilya Prigogine, Dardik suggests that the underlying basis for health lies in a rhythmic pattern of energy expenditure and energy recovery. He speculates that when a person makes large waves of energy expenditure and then energy recovery, the body's immune chemistry and repair processes are activated. What Dardik has recognized is that the physiology of recovery from exercise and the physiology of relaxation (as in meditation) from mental/emotional stress are identical. In both cases, breathing slows, stress hormones diminish, and the heart rate and blood pressure drop.

The key to Dardik's program is in integrating various behavioral modalities—exercise, sleep, diet, biofeedback, body work—according to one's own body rhythms. Participants in this seminar will have the opportunity to apply this theory to a program of health maintenance for themselves. They will see their own heart rate patterns on a monitor while exercising on mini-trampolines and while walking, jogging, and skipping. Discussion will focus on developing optimal timing in one's own rhythmic wave of exercise and recovery. Interested laypersons and health professionals are welcome.

Irv Dardik, a cardiovascular surgeon, was chairman of the US Olympic Committee Sports Medicine Council from 1976-1985. In 1976 he won the Heokton Medal from the AMA for his research in cardiovascular disease. $350

TA KE TI NA: Rhythm Consciousness

Reinhard Flatischler

Drawing from shamanistic traditions, Reinhard Flatischler has developed a system of exercises which allows each person to experience the elements and energies of different rhythms within his or her own body. TA KE TI NA combines rhythmic knowledge of many cultures through vocal rhythms, clapping, elementary steps, and singing. The body is the most important instrument in this method since pulse and breathing are related to musical rhythm. And although the experience of rhythm provided by TA KE TI NA exercises is applicable to all musical instruments, participants in this workshop will play the body as instrument as they learn to bring musical rhythms into harmonious relationship with the rhythms of the heart and soul. $675

Embodiment and Vision

Laura DeNuccio

The perception of wholeness is the consciousness of healing.—Ernest Holmes

Laura DeNuccio writes: "This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

"Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Learning to listen from within can lead back to the ancient wisdom of the Earth—returning us to our sacredness and wholeness. Participants will use breath, sound, and movement as meditations for enlivening the vitality of cells and tissue, for dissolving energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind. The sound meditations have the potential of moving the individual past the limitations of language, creating openings for new thought and inspiration. The emphasis will be on self-care, renewal, and nourishment.

"The group will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one's inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What is meaningful and significant to you? What's truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth. While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group can experiment with co-creating community, an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore this ever-unfolding adventure of spirit."

Reinventing Love

Robert Solomon

Reinventing Love is a personal probe into the most highly valued of all emotions, its promise, its disappointments and dangers: why we sometimes find it difficult to love, to admit our love, to express our love; why love goes wrong, why we choose the wrong partners, why we fail to make it work with the right partner; why love must be invented—and reinvented—by each generation and by every couple; how to come to terms with our own needs and dependencies. $350

Zazen

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy

Zazen is the sitting meditation practice which constitutes the experiential core of Buddhist perspective. When deep engagement with this practice is continued, an ensuing physical equilibrium is gradually mirrored into the emotions and psyche. As the mind trains itself in balance and to pay attention to ever deeper detail in the nuances of breath and posture, so also we gradually see more detail in everyday existence, thus expanding and enriching our experience of it.

In this workshop we will focus on refinement of the sitting practice itself. Hatha yoga, stretch-movement, and a variety of breathing styles will be used as energetic enhancements to the practice. Participants are asked to wear loose, layered clothing.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 40-41. $350

The Power of Voice

Arthur Samuel Joseph

This course introduces a method called Vocal Awareness, which includes vocalizing, sound meditation, movement, song study, and development of the speaking voice as a means for deepening contact with the Self. Participants will work individually and in groups exploring breathing, toning, a cappella and accompanied vocalizing with poetry, sonnets, and songs.

Vocal Awareness is an art form that addresses in precise ways how language affects the brain. It is now well-known in the field of psychoneuroimmunology that endorphins are released by the brain in response to verbal cues and visual imagery. Research also points to a strong correlation between language, breath, and psycho-physical response. Knowing this, developing one's vocal abilities and learning to listen to one's own language becomes a means for self-integration.

The aim of this workshop is to explore the voice as metaphor, to tap into issues of self-expression and self-esteem, and to have fun while developing vocal abilities. It is valuable for lay people and professionals alike, and is open to beginners through advanced. Tape recorders are required. $350

Creating Time: A Rhythm for Health and Longevity

Stephan Rechtschaffen

As we constantly strive to be "on time" in our fast-paced, over-scheduled lives, we lose touch with living in the flow of time. We are a society plagued with time-sickness: caught up in the stress of running to work, home, recreation, or other responsibilities and interests, we don't seem to have time for the important things. Anxious about the future, regretful of the past, we miss the fullness of the moment.

This workshop will help participants understand their own attitudes toward time and how those attitudes affect their life-style, health, and longevity. Methods that move perception away from societal time pressures into the often unexplored territory of freedom-within-time will be introduced, along with meditation, visualization, time evaluation and planning (not scheduling).

From this vantage point participants can: explore how dysrhythmic, hurried schedules affect their relationships, work, and creativity; use their expanded sense of time to define what they really want in their lives and what their real priorities are; and enjoy the simple power and pleasure of being present in each moment.

Authentic Movement

Tina Stromsted

Authentic Movement is a meditative form of dance whose origins were influenced by the depth psychology of C.G. Jung. Through moving and witnessing each other move, participants will explore their own inner dance, finding freedom of expression while healing wounds and uncovering images of the self that may have locked them into painful or dissatisfying ways of living. Body-related issues, unresolved developmental material, preverbal memories, and transpersonal experience may emerge, leading toward integration and wholeness.

CYNTHIA JOHNSON BIANCHETTA

Designed for mental health professionals, artists, and those interested in personal growth, this experiential process assists participants in bridging body and psyche through expressive movement. Offering a structure within which natural movement can bloom and be nurtured, it allows individuals to discover ways to tap the creative unconscious and make soulful self-contact.

Arica: Levels of Consciousness

Emmett & Paule Marx

Arica is a body of knowledge developed by Oscar Ichazo, whose purpose is to provide a modern method for self-realization and the clarification of consciousness. The first training took place in Chile in 1970; from that experience Arica Institute was founded in New York City to provide workshops and self-study materials to people all over the world. Arica is also a school in the transcendental sense of a body of people pursuing a common path. Participants of this workshop will be introduced to:

- Levels of Consciousness: scales and levels of consciousness that individuals and society pass through from birth to the awakened state. Specific stages will be examined. For example: social dogma, where existence is viewed as a matter of social games; or disillusionment, where life is seen with cynicism as meaningless; or no time, the ability to live in the present without pressure from past conditioning. This provides a map of personal evolution that shows us where we are on the journey from an asleep, dichotomous state moving toward a state of unity.
- Basic meditative methods using breath, mantram (sound), yantras (color and form), and visualization.
- Traspaso and The Arc of Love: interpersonal exercises to nourish essential contact.

Introduction to Craniosacral Work

Hugh Milne & Claudia Schaller

This workshop will introduce the theory and practice of craniosacral work, a subtle, careful, and delicate method for treating illness and for promoting health and healing. It is remarkable in its specificity and effectiveness. The gentlest of approaches, if accurate, can be more powerful than the most invasive.

Craniosacral work can be used to help people with a wide variety of symptoms, from cluster headaches to thoracic outlet syndrome to peripheral ischaemia. While very powerful, this is an inherently safe approach if it is studied from both analytical and intuitive models. To this end, the class will devote an equal portion of time to academic study and to practical, hands-on experience. Emphasis will be on visual and tactile diagnosis. In China, this is called "The Art of Listening." Practice of the demonstrated methods will be encouraged from day one so that a high standard of individual experience can be gained as the class unfolds. Feedback among participants on personal issues as touched on by this work will be an important part of the week. This workshop is for health care practitioners who already have a background in body work.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 40-41. $675

Acting and Being

Paula Shaw

Meryl Streep or Bette Midler; Dustin Hoffman or Pee-wee Herman. The same persona and core issues that infuse our acting performance also shape our experience of ourselves and the world around us. We all know the experience of watching an actor who appears disengaged from his performance, leaving us unmoved. And, similarly, we know the experience of feeling disconnected from ourselves and from those with whom we seek to connect.

Bridging the separation between self and experience and self and other, available in acting, makes it possible to reconnect with the source of one's personal power for creativity, communication, and being. This workshop addresses these issues through presentation and theater games, performance and improvisation. It encourages personal outrageousness and playing 100%. It's an opportunity to experience what is meant by stage presence and full self-expression. Life imitating art or vice versa? Acting or being? The rewards are commensurate with the risks. Previous performance experience is not necessary.

Requirement: a one-to-three-minute memorized performance piece of any kind. Maximum enrollment: 25. $675

Christmas Present

Paul Rebillot & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

Birth has been idealized in the Christmas story—the newborn child surrounded by adoring parents, singing angels, and comforting animals, worshipped by the wise and the simple, welcomed into the world and loved for nothing that he does, but for simply being who he is.

Most of us were not welcomed in the same way. Christmas can be a time of healing, a time in which we turn toward the image of the divine child as toward a mirror of our own deepest self. Using gestalt, guided fantasy, theater games, and rituals, in this workshop we will seek to release ourselves from the excess baggage of past regrets and future expectations in order to return to the divine simplicity of our own present being. Out of that simplicity we will prepare for our own Christmas present: giving ourselves our Self for Christmas. $350

Rekindling the Spirit in Work

Howard Schechter

Rekindling the Spirit in Work is about reconnecting with yourself and the work you do. Through creative exercises and sharing with the group, you will gain clarity about your goals in work, the skills required to reach those goals, and awareness of your strengths. The process allows you to confront and dissolve your major blocks to rewarding work and helps you integrate who you are with what you do. This is far more effective than narrowly focused vocational perspectives. The emphasis is on the question, "Who is working?" From an identification with our highest Self, what we do flows out with ease. It is a direct expression in the world of who we are inside.

This workshop is for people who are beginning new careers, in transition, dissatisfied, or simply bored with their work. Participants usually come away with a sense of clarity and purpose and seldom feel the need to make radical shifts in their job or profession. Rather, the subtle inner adjustments of identity, attitude, and perspective create greater job satisfaction and offer direction for taking the next steps in work.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 40-41. $350

Performance Art

Rachel Rosenthal

Rachel Rosenthal offers a workshop that explores performance as a means of accessing one's deeper self and for reconnecting with the earth. It is based on her "Doing by Doing" teachings, a framework that activates the spiritual self through the medium of performance by uniting ritual with spirit and nature with inner knowledge.

Participants will approach the source of their individual creativity and translate this energy into the poetics of action through movement, vocal and instrumental sound, ritualized gesture, and collective improvisation. Through a succession of processes—relaxation, awareness, guided imagery, body and voice work—they will compose short performance pieces as solos, duets, or ensembles to evoke the power and beauty of the earth and to reconnect themselves to the matrix of the planet.

This work explores individual expression as well as group ritual and demonstrates how contemporary urban human beings can still discover community. Participants are encouraged to bring musical instruments, soundmakers, and any object, fabric, mask, or hat that they wish to work with or make available to the group. Found objects will also be used. $350

African Healing Dance: Pathways to Personal Power and Self-Healing

Onye Onyemaechi

Dance, drumming, and chanting are used cross-culturally to promote emotional and physical healing through journeying into expansive states of consciousness. In Africa, traditions and customs naturally integrate healing and spirituality as a way of life, reflecting a coexistence with nature and God.

Onye Onyemaechi, founder/director of the Igbote Center and Igbote Ethnic Ensemble, is a performing artist, spiritual healer, and educator. He utilizes a variety of methods to focus on the individual healing process. In this workshop, he will lead participants into the healing power of dance and prayer, known pathways for journeying to the spirit and regaining personal power.

Wear loose clothing and bring materials for drawing and coloring. Bring drums or percussive instruments if you have them. $675

Return of the Light: Winter Teachings

Paul Rebillot & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

The winter solstice is a time for restful introspection as the earth's outer darkness allows the inner sun of the soul to regenerate and find expression. Traditional cultures the world over have rested, fasted, and feasted during this time of the year in celebration of the turning point, the cyclic return of the light. This is the time when all creatures prepare for the next cycle of growth.

Despondency, disillusionment, and regrets often weigh on people at this time of year, manifesting as depression or flight into frantic cheerfulness. This workshop offers an opportunity to work through past regrets and the unfulfilled ideals, promises, and fairy tales of childhood that lie behind them. Movement toward light is movement toward growth and individuation, and as we move through the time of darkness toward spring, it is important to understand the current season of one's life. What has not been completed? What needs healing? What do we need to say goodbye to? What new steps do we need to take as we cross our current thresholds into a new season?

There are many ways to this self-knowledge. Different people have developed different paths, using a variety of metaphors. The principle way we will use in this workshop is the way of the Medicine Wheel, which teaches us to celebrate our cycles and seasons. Through ritual and gestalt open seat, guided fantasy, music, and play, we will seek our own inner solstice, our own turning point on the Medicine Wheel, and there sow the seeds for spring. $675

Sessions will include sitting meditation, chanting, a thorough physical warm-up, opening the voice, and exercises designed to integrate sound and movement. Participants will also have opportunities for developing technical performance skills, but the focus of the week will be improvisational expression of impulses, feelings, and ideas as they arise moment to moment.

This workshop is open to students of all levels, beginner as well as professional. $350

Biofeedback Assisted Open Focus and Brain Wave Synchrony Training

Les Fehmi & Susan Shor

Brain wave activity is directly correlated with the way one pays attention. Synchrony is associated with "in-to-it," broad-scoped attention and effortless performance; desynchronized brain wave activity is associated with remote, narrow-focused attention and effortful performance. Brain wave synchrony and attention training consequently guide one toward an awareness that is simultaneously narrowed-in on detail, panoramic in scope, and bathed in an effortless sense of the moment.

The Open Focus methods presented in this experiential workshop support the rapid reduction of both conscious and unconscious physical and emotional stress and pain. Rather than ignoring unpleasant experience, participants will practice melting it directly, using attention skills they already possess. This method of dissolving stress and pain generates a sense of well-being and creative energy. Interested workshop participants will receive biofeedback training using an instrument that monitors brain activity from the major lobes of the brain and provides a feedback signal when whole-brain, in-phase synchrony is produced. An Open Focus tape will be provided for home practice.

Leonard Energy Training, a comprehensive system offering tools to meet the problems, pressures, and pain of everyday life situations, will be combined with gestalt to provide a foundation for personal growth and change. Yoga and massage will be interwoven with elements of the martial art of aikido to increase the flow of vital energy through the body, mind, and spirit. $675

Jim Asher & Jane Harrington

This workshop will offer an opportunity to learn and practice gentle yet powerful skills to bring the craniosacral system into balance. The class will combine lectures and slides on functional anatomy of the membrane system and cerebrospinal fluid movement. There will be hands-on demonstrations of a variety of methods for tapping into bone and membrane motion, rhythm, amplitude quality, restriction, and interference. Demonstrations will be followed by supervised practice. Time will also be spent evoking and developing palpatory sensitivity and fine-tuning the quality of touch.

This workshop is for people with a strong interest in developing hands-on skills and for those already practicing body work or counseling. Much of the focus will be on the head, jaw, neck, pelvis, and diaphragm systems. Cranial work can be effective in shifting emotional holding patterns and draining accumulated stresses in the nervous system.

Hypnotic Innovations: Investigations in Living, Using Ericksonian Hypnosis

Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

In the moment before a new idea unfolds, our attention becomes so fully focused that time seems to disappear. Perhaps, without quite realizing it, we forget where we are and what's around us. These spontaneous states are the stuff out of which hypnotic experience unfolds and through which unconscious possibilities take form.

In this workshop, participants will investigate the hypnotic approaches developed by Milton Erickson and the systemic principles generated from Gregory Bateson's research in communication. They will explore how unconscious processes can be mobilized to creatively disrupt limiting life patterns, to organize innovative behaviors outside the range of normal conscious controls, and to more fully optimize their current living and work situations. Structured trance experiments and discussion will support the week's work.

This workshop may be of special interest to those in the helping professions as well as managers who want to expand their frames of reference and extend their understanding of Ericksonian hypnosis and communication skills. $675

Introduction to Focusing

Mary McGuire & Roseann Kasayka

Focusing is a step-by-step process for gaining entry into a physically felt intelligence called body wisdom or bodily knowing. This method originally came out of research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, and they found that success cannot be predicted by the personality of the client nor the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be taught to those who do not have it readily. The focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

Focusing's applications extend far beyond its use in psychotherapy. It enhances other methods of change or growth and is used in education, business, and work with cancer patients. It offers:

- A way of listening to oneself and others
- A means to personal insights
- A resource for spiritual growth
- A path to healing and reconciliation
- A catalyst for healthier relationships
- A method for reducing stress and preventing burn-out
- A means of getting in touch with one's creativity
- A tool for phenomenological research

This workshop will cover the six steps of this method as outlined in Gendlin's Focusing, which participants are strongly encouraged to read before the workshop. Participants will be introduced to a holistic way of paying attention by creating an inner climate of gentleness, friendliness, allowing, receiving, being with, touching, listening, and waiting. This differs from the usual outside climate of forcing, pushing, shoving, and demanding. They will explore how to relate to both positive and negative experiences as they are carried in the body, without the usual response of being overwhelmed by feelings or running away from them. This way of being with oneself allows each experience to unfold in a positive direction, and the person is empowered with an inner strength and direction that allows life energy to flow forward in new ways.

Focusing, Dream Work, and the Helping Relationship

Mary McGuire & Roseann Kasayka

Focusing originally came out of research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, and they found that success cannot be predicted by the personality of the client nor the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be taught to those who do not have it readily. The focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

This workshop is for psychologists, counselors, social workers, nurses, doctors, and others in the helping professions. Focusing is beneficial to these individuals because it augments their understanding of the client's inner process and aids in their own self-awareness as helper. It allows the practitioner to recognize the vulnerable or painful places in the other where new life wants to come through and to facilitate growth in a gentle way that honors the other's experience.

Participants will practice the focusing process called Experiential Listening, a method of listening for the bodily felt sense in what the other is saying and responding from one's own felt sense of the situation. They will also be introduced to Gendlin's integrative approach to dream work. Theories of Freud, Jung, Perls, and others will serve as a source of questions; the answers will come from participants' own dream interpretations and will be explored via this method of awareness of felt experience.

Research has shown focusing to have made a significant difference in the process of therapy clients, the lives of cancer patients, in preventing staff burn-out, and building team spirit among health care professionals. This workshop could be a new beginning. What better way to start the New Year.

Children and Anger: A Gestalt View

Violet Oaklander

The theme of this workshop is the anger of children. Participants will discuss the various ways that young people express anger, the relationship of anger to negative introjects and self-esteem, and how parents, teachers, and therapists can help children express this least tolerated and most misunderstood emotion in healthy, safe, and satisfying ways.

This approach is based on the use of creative, expressive, and projective methods, with gestalt theory and practice as the underlying framework. The thrust of this work is to provide the child with a means for expressing his or her innermost feelings, to foster self-awareness and self-discovery, to enhance self-esteem and, in general, to promote emotional growth. Children thereby learn not only about themselves, but about their relationship to others and the world around them.

The workshop will include discussion, demonstration, examples of children's work and, particularly, direct experience of expressive methods used with children.

The Body and Spirituality

Maggie Hodgson & Don Hanlon Johnson

This is one of several seminars, and the first public offering, in the Esalen Body-Spirituality Project. Invitational seminars to date have brought together leading teachers in the field of somatics with leaders in the field of religion—nuns, priests, rabbis, teachers of meditation, heads of religious healing centers—from the Roman Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, Islamic, Native American, Russian Orthodox, and Buddhist traditions. The emphasis has been on experiential work designed to challenge disease-provoking tensions produced by the dominant social images of the body, and to offer alternative images more conducive to the physical and spiritual health of human beings and our planet. There has been experiential work with body image and personality, sensory awareness, body movement, breath, imagery, and simple forms of touch, as well as discussion exploring the implications of this work for healing, education, social organization and, particularly, for world peace. This seminar continues that work. Some of its themes will be:

- How to utilize a more holistic understanding of the body to formulate theologies which are more supportive of the basic needs of suffering human beings and of the earth;
- The significance of Native ways in challenging Western alienation from the body and the earth, and the sicknesses that derive from that alienation;
- The integration of more sophisticated uses of touch in traditional healing ministries of the religious communities;
- How to use the various body-oriented therapies in the clinics provided by religious groups for suffering communities: addicts, the homeless, political refugees, etc.;
- How to integrate sophisticated contemporary work with the body with traditional methods of meditation and ritual.

Maggie Hodgson has been a trainer and is now executive director of the Nechi Institute on Alcohol and Drug Education for Native peoples in Canada. That center has demonstrated remarkable success in the healing significance of returning to the old ways. Don Hanlon Johnson brings to the seminar the results of his work during the past four years applying somatics techniques in work with religious leaders.

Feeling and Innovation

Dale Cummings & Karel Samsom

Discovering creative solutions in our personal and occupational lives can transform leisure and work and enliven our experience. Webster defines feeling as "the capacity to respond emotionally" and innovation as the "introduction of something new." How these two themes interconnect will be the focus of this workshop.

Participants will use Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, exercises in creativity and innovation, role-playing, and discussion. A period of individual work (the Radix® intensive) in a small group setting will provide a safe environment of emotional support. As negative feelings are worked through, active creativity can emerge.

Through its focus on feelings and creativity, this workshop offers encouragement and practical ideas for reinvigorating personal and organizational experiences and for pursuing innovation and new (ad)ventures in daily life. $675

A Circle of Women

Christine Stewart Price
& Guest Leaders

Each group of people who comes together creates a unique "field." When the members of a group are all women, as in this workshop, the field takes on a distinct quality which encourages exploration of particular feelings and issues. During this workshop, we will explore those feelings as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice (see Gestalt Practice, September 15-20) as well as any other forms of process that serve us in contacting, expressing, and supporting ourselves and each other. Bring rattles, drums, dreams, pictures of your mother and grandmother, or anything else you might want to share. $675

Somatosynthesis

Clyde Ford

Clyde Ford will introduce participants to somatosynthesis, a method which uses touch, body awareness, and movement to address the emotional issues underlying pain, disease, and physical symptoms. It brings together body-based methods with psychological and spiritual approaches to affect the healing process.

This workshop will provide participants with the initial skills for exploring this dynamic relationship between body and mind through touch. It will begin with body-mapping, a method of linking areas of the physical body to underlying psychological and emotional issues, and then take an in-depth look at how touch can be used to address these issues and guide the person toward greater well-being. There will be lectures, demonstrations, discussion, and supervised hands-on exercises. It is designed for students of the healing arts who wish to explore the emotional and psychological aspects of somatics work. Please wear comfortable clothes and bring a notebook to record your experiences.

The Writer's Way: Self-Exploration through Writing

Nancy Bacal

We all have stories and the ability to tell them. But when asked to translate them onto the page, many of us are inhibited by self-judgment. Through a series of exercises designed to bypass blockages, participants will be encouraged to move beyond the controlling arm of the critic and tap their reservoirs of personal experience. These exercises will provide an opportunity to turn the burdens in our lives into stories, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. They are specific enough to excite the imagination yet loose enough for the writer inside to experiment with form and images and remain open to surprise.

This writing workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the would-be writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, walks, meditation as it relates to creative process, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The intention will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, functioning relationship with one's work.

Vision and Embodiment

Laura DeNuccio

This is an educational introduction to vision fitness, integrating inner vision and outer sight. The focus is on discovering 1) how to relax, clear, and reeducate the eye and the self to see, and 2) how one's present reality is distorted or shaped by attitudes, beliefs, and feelings.

Participants will utilize the Bates method of eye relaxation, movement, breath, guided meditation, earth ritual, and the creative use of the Spoken Word. Together they will explore, discover, experience, and expand their vision of possibilities for themselves and the world in which they live.

Endarkenment

Will & Ailish Schutz

Sometimes in our search for enlightenment we become humorless, and our search becomes tedious. Growth demands a respite from intensive struggle.

This workshop can provide a vehicle for the turn downward. We shall explore: how to establish and maintain meaningless relations; what to worry about while meditating; advanced covert blaming and inducing guilt in loved ones; how to become the most sympathetic victim/martyr in your social group; guilt without sex. This approach, similar to Feldenkrais's "live the disasters" and the "homeopathic principle" (Will Schutz, Body Fantasy), can be as valuable for attaining enlightenment as the direct route—and more fun. In addition, participants in this workshop will have opportunities to explore, play with, and celebrate the shadow—that which we usually hide. $350

Psychoneuroimmunology and its Implications

George Solomon & Margaret Kemeny

The rapidly developing field of psychoneuroimmunology (PNI) is concerned with the nature of complex bidirectional interactions between the central nervous system (CNS) and the immune system and their clinical and bioregulatory implications. The CNS mediates stress effects, coping, emotions, and other psychological processes that, via the immune system, affect the onset and course of many diseases.

This didactic but interactive course will describe the immune system, how it works and is regulated. The leaders will discuss human and animal research on the effects of stress and other experiential factors on immunity and on immunologically-resisted and mediated diseases, including bacterial and viral infections, cancer, autoimmune diseases, allergies, and AIDS. The as-yet poorly researched area of the impact of interventions, including psychotherapy, on immunity and disease will be discussed. Implications of PNI for understanding traditional and alternative healing systems and placebo effects will be explored. There will be ample opportunity for questions.

Moving from Love Addiction to Healthy Intimacy

Jed Diamond

Many of us are successful in our professional lives, but struggle in our love lives. Our romantic relationships are a series of disappointments, yet we continue to pursue them. We seek lovers to make us feel whole, yet we lose our sense of self. We cling to partners who are abusive, yet we are afraid to let go. Some of us have become relationship anorexics, starving ourselves for love because we are afraid to risk being hurt again. Many of us have become addicts and don't even know it. We turn to each other out of the same needs that drive some people to alcohol and others to cocaine. Interpersonal addiction, love addiction, is not only the most common addiction, it is the core out of which all other addictions emerge.

This workshop offers a safe and supportive setting in which to explore sexual, romantic, and relationship addictions. Participants will delve into the "black hole," the center of their being where they contact their earliest experiences of abuse and abandonment. There they may also find the "golden thread" which can lead them back to their true selves.

Small group interaction, writing, guided meditation, and movement based on aikido and energy awareness will be used to experience the differences between male and female love addictions, healthy love vs. love addiction, and the seven stages of developing joyous and peaceful intimate partnerships.

Couples' Workshop

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead, they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

Exploring Dimensions of Healing

Elizabeth Stratton

The desire to heal and be healed is a deep need within every human being. Seeing someone we love in pain brings out the instinct to touch that person in a caring and compassionate way. Feeling or being ill ourselves can lead us to explore both spiritual and scientific dimensions of healing that we would otherwise not be open to.

Psychic healing, with its focus on the laying on of hands, understanding the meaning of the illness, and seeing into the heart of the person who is ill, brings a spiritual dimension to healing that can be a valuable adjunct to modern medicine and its high technology.

This five-day workshop will provide both theoretical and practical tools to awaken the healer within. Self-healing methods such as opening the energy centers (chakras), communicating with the body, and guided healing imagery will be explored to assist participants in taking charge of their own health. In addition, participants will begin to learn to work with others in a healing capacity through laying on of hands and psychic scanning.

Alexandrian Traditions: A Weekend with Ralph Abraham

Several of the wonders of the ancient world were created in Alexandria, metropolis of Greeks, Egyptians, Jews, and Christians. Mathematics and philosophy merged in a creative whirlpool of Hermetic, Gnostic, and Kabbalistic wisdom. In this weekend of geometry and metaphysics, we will survey the Alexandrian miracle from Euclid to Hypatia, discussing the significance of this pagan intellectual heritage for our past and our future. We will seek the lost bridge between mathematics and the spirit. $350

Creating a New Life

Elizabeth Stratton

The foundation of recovery from any addiction is spiritual strength—the recognition of the healing power of our relationship with God. It gives the recovery process meaning and the individual a will to live.

Creating a new life during recovery is a challenging process. To let go of the past while recovering from it means to see life through new eyes. Beginning each day anew requires dedication, courage, and compassion for the self that is being reborn. It means telling the truth and seeing life and the self through the eyes of compassionate truth.

This workshop provides an opportunity for those individuals who are in the recovery process to develop the healing skills necessary to create a new life. Experiential work will include: establishing and nurturing a relationship with God; self-forgiveness and forgiving others; telling the truth and releasing fear; turning anger into the will to live; healing the physical body from years of abuse; opening the inner energy system through meditation and imagery; developing psychic strength and protection from other people's negativity and addictive behaviors; and, experiencing bliss through spiritual substance rather than substance abuse.

Co

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

This is a workshop for people helpers. Everyone has seen duets in ballet in which the male dancer follows the prima ballerina, supporting her leaps and turns. Many human dyads are similar. One person is in the foreground while the other, the "co," accepts a background position. The concerns of the focal person come first. They define the relationship either by explicit agreement, as in psychotherapy and medicine, or implicitly, as in many marriages.

The focus acts; the co tracks. The focus makes a movement and the co, like a dance partner, adjusts. What the focus needs, the co provides. The co is receptive, responsive, attentive, enabling, facilitating.

Cos can be found nurturing the young and the frail elderly, ministering to the disturbed, nursing the sick, designing houses for the wealthy, and in many other situations throughout society. Sometimes these co relationships are a vocational choice and a charitable way of life. Sometimes, as with co-dependencies and co-alcoholics, they are dysfunctional and harmful.

We will spend the weekend studying, through group experiential exercises and discussions, when, where, why, and how to co, and the politics of both entering into and refraining from such relationships.

Women's Wisdom: Celebrating Sacred Dimensions of the Feminine

Jean Shinoda Bolen & Jananne Lovett-Keen

By tapping intuitive sources of wisdom, creativity, and spirituality, life takes on deeper meaning. We are nourished by what we feel and know and dream and express. In the outer world, change and transitions are inevitable. What we often miss is time to reflect upon the meaning of events and to take stock of who we are becoming.

This retreat invites women to take time for inner reflection in the nurturing company of other women in an environment of natural beauty. Jean Shinoda Bolen, author of Goddesses in Everywoman, will lead participants inward through myths and meditation to their personal symbols and to the truth in their dreams. Jananne Lovett-Keen, a musician and body worker, will teach participants to care for their bodies and to be attuned to their vulnerabilities, pain, trust, and strengths. Through music, participants will touch sources of inspiration and creativity and be reminded of the profound connection between women's nature and Mother Nature, between music and body knowledge.

These five days will provide women with an opportunity to experience their inner trusting child, the grown woman choicemaker, and the wisewoman aware of the sacred dimension of ordinary life. $675

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

CYNTHIA JOHNSON BIANCHETTA

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for: people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $675

Roots of Design

Sim Van der Ryn

Each of us is a designer. In this workshop, we explore the roots of design within us, including our conscious and unconscious internal programs, our personal and collective histories. We use storytelling, model-making, image-making, and free writing to get at the designer within. From there we can design our personal ecology, physical and temporal space. We begin to move from being unconscious to conscious designers. Recommended for professional designers who have lost their roots and lay people who never realized they had any roots in design. $350

Protoanalysis and the Enneagon: Breaking the Fixation

Jack Downing, Michael Kramer & Paule Marx

This workshop introduces the Arica theory and method of protoanalysis in which ego fixation is revealed by the muscular tensions of the face. Oscar Ichazo, the founder of Arica Institute, will determine each participant's fixation from photographic slides submitted prior to the workshop. Ichazo is the sole originator of the theory of ego fixations.

The fixation is the area of the psyche in which a person is most sensitive. We defend this over-sensitivity with a cluster of reactions which becomes a fixated pattern in childhood. There are nine types of over-preoccupation which veil our perception of reality and shroud our natural, spontaneous, and essential nature. This ego identity is, at its core, ontologically empty and will never allow us to experience the totality of ourselves, which is our birthright as human beings.

Discovering our fixation is a catalyst for internal growth and evolution. Once we break this habitual identification with one point of view, the eight remaining elemental parts of our psyche become enormously enriched. We begin to recognize the defense mechanisms of our fixation as simply processes, comical in their predictability. This work is done with humor; in this way the nine fixations become exaggerated characters in our "theater of the subjective." We can then transcend ordinary states of subjectivity and experience lucid states of self-awareness.

In this seminar, participants will study a number of enneagons that work harmonically with the enneagon of the nine fixations. The workshop will also include enneagon theory, meditation, diakath breathing, essential movement, group work, and theater.

Please note: Three slides of each participant's face must be received one month prior to the workshop, or by January 2, 1992. A letter of explanation about the lighting and photography of the slides is available from Esalen.

Accessing Creative Process

Dianne Laurence

Spontaneity, imagination, trust, and risk-taking are all essential ingredients in the creative life of the individual. They are not parcelled out at birth in limited supply but are parts of our natural makeup and can be exercised and strengthened. This workshop will use theater improv, storytelling, and painting games to this end.

Many people claim that they "just aren't that creative" when the real issue is whether or not they are willing to engage in a relationship with their creative intelligence. This workshop will offer the opportunity for laypeople and artists alike to see where and how they joyfully participate and where and how they resist. It is useful for people who are stuck, who want to find a way of going deeper, or who just want to play in areas they've been curious about. $350

Relationships: Turning Toward Joy

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared—by their family backgrounds or society—to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $350

A Weekend with Terence McKenna

Author, explorer, and philosopher Terence McKenna brings us unique perspectives on the spiritual life and impending transformations of the human world. In this seminar he and participants will examine human attitudes toward the Other, discuss Time and its mysteries, the nature of language, and techniques of ecstasy that have developed in non-Western societies. The role of hallucinogenic plants will be discussed in depth—their role in shamanism and their impact on the general evolution of human cultures and social forms. McKenna will discuss the making of effective choices about spiritual development and the roles that we can play in the unfolding of the post-historical future.

McKenna writes: "This is a chance to experience consciousness as an informational creature loose in an environment of meaning. Our global culture is preparing to depart for the stars; learn what you should pack for the trip. We will discuss what a long, strange trip it has been and is bound to be. We will consider a growing zoo of strange futures, chaotic attractors, and fractal language elves breeding and at play in the phase space of happenstance. We will conduct a real-time search for understanding of the onrushing transformation of our planet, ourselves, and the way we see each other." $350

Moving Toward Open Space and Transformation through Guided Imagery

Catherine de Segonzac Shainberg

In this workshop, participants will explore in rapid succession different aspects of life in an imaginal and sensory mode. Through short inductions, an empty space opens up in which images emerge spontaneously. Visual movement is experienced at the somatic level as well as emotionally and mentally. As the images unfold, they speak for themselves, often in surprising and deeply moving ways. They lead the dreamer toward a broader awareness of themselves and of their rich inner resources. An unfolding image can represent both the diagnosis and healing of a difficult situation. In other instances, the guide might suggest another perspective from which to look at an image which may serve to unblock or change a situation. The act of moving into a new configuration becomes the healing process, the transformation.

The emphasis in this workshop will be on the connection between organic movement and the spontaneous emergence of images. Working quickly with inductions and exercises to elicit an imaginal experience, participants—students of themselves—will have the opportunity to discover the transformative value of being 'taken by surprise' by their own images.

Spiritual Healing: Laying On of Hands

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman

This workshop will present practical methods of using the hands as instruments for physical and spiritual healing. The emphasis will be on intentionality and personal clarity as fundamental tools in any healing art.

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman studied and lived at Esalen for nine years. She currently studies with healers in Brazil and has a private practice in Rio de Janeiro where she applies Brazilian and North American approaches to healing.

The Unfolding Self

Jessica Moore Britt & Joyce Lyke

We live in a world of mystery, wonder, and beauty. But many of us seldom participate in this real world, being aware instead of a world of strife, suffering, and meaninglessness. This situation arises from not realizing and living our full human potential. Childhood conditioning and attachment to that conditioning is one way that our potential gets stuck.

This week is for participants who have been working on themselves and would like to delve further into the relationship between their emotional work and spiritual practice. Using self-remembering exercises, meditation, and individual Reichian/gestalt work, they will inquire into what it means to allow and commit to the unfoldment of the self.

Stepping Into Power

Dawn Callan & Stephanie Mines

This self-defense and awareness program attunes women and men to their innate power and helps them guide that power into decisive action. Integrating movement with thinking, feeling, and sensing, participants will practice simple and effective techniques that embody the basic right of self-protection and support them in breaking through personal barriers (old habits, limiting beliefs, fears, unconscious patterns). This workshop offers an opportunity for healing core issues as well as the polarity and adversarial beliefs between women and men. It culminates in a demonstration of individual empowerment.

This integration of self-defense and self-awareness is designed for individuals committed to achieving new levels of mastery and excellence in their personal and professional lives.

On Being a Man

David Schiffman

Many men today have sought to honor and embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result of this emphasis, the right to celebrate and honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man's sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own natures which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood, and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and goodwill, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the "wild man" within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

A variety of experiential processes will illuminate these and similar issues. Traditional initiation rituals and purification ceremonies using drumming, chanting, and a sweat lodge will be incorporated in this journey as well. $675

Creating Exact Moments of Healing

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, lifelong commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for the necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of chronic trauma;
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries;
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation and toward stability and abundance;
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and body work. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals who work with ACAs. Please bring a mirror and photographs of yourself at all ages.

The Psychotherapist as Shaman: Methods for Madness

Joan Halifax

In many indigenous cultures across the world, the shaman has functioned as healer and therapist in the physical, psychological, intellectual, transpersonal, social, and environmental domains. During this weekend, anthropologist Joan Halifax will look into the traditions of shamanism for those practices and methods possibly relevant for use in contemporary psychotherapy. Included will be the function of art in personal, social, and environmental healing; the role of ritual in individual and community process; the use of entheogens in psychophysical transformation; and the relationship of the natural environment (as reality and metaphor) to the healing process. This program includes experiential practices, teachings, and discussion.

The Open Space: Poetry and Authenticity

Norman Friedman

When is a poem the expression of feeling, and when is it an avoidance? How can we tell the difference, and what difference does it make? We seek that open space where poetry frees us to re-make ourselves, and we return to the world integrating that freedom into our daily lives. For this to take place, what the poet feels must be shaped so as to evoke that feeling in us. Keats said that truth is not truth until it is tested on our pulses. Craft, discipline, and training are the means, but sometimes the enabling letter can kill the life-giving spirit.

We will examine a number of poems, classics of various times and places, to find and experience how we in our time, and others in theirs, confronted the same dilemma. And we will encourage—through readings, mini-lectures and discussion, fantasy and experiment—the re-creation of that open space in this workshop. $350

Self-Exploration through Handwriting Analysis

Vimala Rodgers

Our handwriting is the result of intricate neuro-muscular connections that express on paper both the conscious and unconscious aspects of our established behavior patterns. Each time we move the pen across the page we not only reflect these patterns, we reinforce them. Slant, spacing, margins, pressure, loops, angles, size, letter formations, and zonal relationships: each of these factors is significant and combines with countless other writing patterns to make a clear statement of the attitudes with which we greet and react to life situations.

This weekend will be spent in an active, step-by-step exploration of the components of handwriting as they mirror aspects of the personality. For those participants who wish to consider making specific alterations in personal writing patterns, the workshop will allow time to work on specific strokes (supported by repetitive practice) as a means of instilling new brain/hand patterns. Time will also be given to inner child work.

This workshop is for the person who is engaged in the journey of self-exploration as well as for counselors, teachers, parents, ministers, health care practitioners, and other professionals who deal with self-esteem issues and the well-being of others.

Cross-Cultural Shamanic Practices

Angeles Arrien

Participants of this workshop will be introduced to shamanic tools from diverse cultures in order to access and empower their inner teacher, healer, visionary, and warrior. The universal healing salves of singing, storytelling, dancing, and silence will be engaged to rekindle the spirit and retrieve any soul loss.

Group members will work individually and collectively to: honor ancestor spirits by releasing limiting family patterns; enhance personal and professional power by speaking with "spirit tongue" (truth-telling); and experience shamanic practices that reveal internal mythology, help heal wounds, and adjust imbalances.

This week qualifies as a Foundational Training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien. $675

Sports Massage

David Streeter

This workshop will focus on aspects of sports massage that prove useful in other massage modalities. The curriculum includes: study of anatomy, to understand the rhythmic coordination of muscles working together; cross-fiber or cross-friction massage, simple strokes that promote healthy muscle tissue; and trigger point massage, to locate and relieve sensitive and congested points in muscle bundles and tendons. Trigger point work has proven beneficial in reducing myofascial pain caused by chronic tension.

In these five days, participants will progress through a study of the entire musculoskeletal system via brief lectures, hands-on practice, and one-to-one instruction. This workshop takes a simplified approach to what is usually a complex subject and gives students a better idea of just what lies beneath their hands and how to more effectively communicate with the human body. It is open to all levels.

Life Stories: Healing the Sorrows

Peter Finkelstein

Painful experience is one of life's givens. However, whether we are discussing the inevitable existential concerns of aloneness, freedom, or death, or the personal tragedies of divorce or untimely loss, it is the manner in which we give form to our painful stories that defines our personal development. The mere attention we give to the ongoing creation of our own story can help us broaden our sources of satisfaction, concentrate our energies productively, and recognize life's wisdom in its many forms.

Participants will use group exercises and individual work to help them acknowledge and integrate painful life experiences such as divorce and bereavement. Dream interpretation, hypnosis, didactic material, and attention to group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Blocks to the successful completion of healing will be explored.

The Lover's Journey: A Quest for the Inner Man and Woman

Paul Rebillot & Melissa Kay

The leaders write: "It is difficult to relate to other people fully and clearly as long as we remain unaware of our own inner process. What roles do we play with ourselves and others? Do these enhance or inhibit our ability to make contact? How do we feel about our sexual identity, our shadow, and our inner opposite selves?

"The Lover's Journey is not a couples' workshop; it is a journey into the depths of our individual process to discover how we love. It is based on the concept of the alchemical marriage, the owning and uniting of the masculine and feminine archetypes. We will enact four aspects of ourselves—the negative and positive man and the negative and positive woman—in order to see when we are being authentic with others and when we are not. We will then create a ritual of joining these four aspects together, which must live within us if we are to be whole.

"It is possible to experience the humor as well as the profundity of these images by bringing them into contact with the other members of the group. By playing them out and having fun with them, they become optional rather than obligatory. And, by accepting and embracing these polarities, we open the door to fuller, more satisfying contact with others and with ourselves." $675

Creating Health and Healing

Andrew Weil

Every human body has systems of self-repair and healing. Whatever your genetic inheritance, whatever your past history of illness, you can learn to move toward optimum health and wellness by learning to use the natural resources of your body and mind. How you eat, drink, exercise, think, visualize, work, play, and deal with stress all influence the efficiency of your internal healer. Conventional doctors often "hex" patients by conveying their own pessimism about illness and their own lack of faith in self-healing. Wellness-oriented doctors are able to undo this negative magic by teaching people to believe in and work with their natural healing powers.

In this workshop, participants will make some meals together in the course of learning the latest ideas about diet and health. We will exercise and relax together, learn how to breathe, and discuss simple natural remedies for common ailments. We will also look at the strengths and weaknesses of various systems of treatment. After completing this workshop participants will have much more confidence in their ability to manifest health and wellness in their lives.

Private sessions will be available by arrangement.

Psychological Implications of Symbols: The Tarot

Angeles Arrien & James Wanless

The tarot is an ancient book of wisdom that visually captures possible internal and external experiences that individuals can have. Participants in this weekend workshop will have the opportunity of seeing multiple ways symbols can be practically used as guides and clarifiers for life issues.

This workshop is structured to meet the needs of participants at any level of experience or inexperience they may have with tarot. $350

Healing the Healer: A Workshop for Helping Professionals

Peter Finkelstein

Working in the field of health care brings the practitioner into contact with sorrow and death. And although health care professionals accumulate great emotional burdens, many do not pay enough attention to staying whole, integrated, and non-depressed while doing this work. Often, in fact, institutional arrangements foster the opposite: isolation, dehumanization, withdrawal. Hence, it remains for the practitioner to find a personal approach in which to process sorrow, frustration, and fear, both wisely and well.

The heart of this workshop will be the telling of stories from the world of health care. Each participant will have the opportunity to share an event from their practice, one that deeply moved them, and receive feedback from the group. Through such telling we can reveal and heal those sometimes invisible wounds that interfere with our own growth and ability to continue helping others. Dream interpretation, didactic material, and group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Special attention will be given to creating a setting of trust.

A Modern Shamanic Initiation

Richard Yensen Pérez-Venero & Donna Dryer Pérez-Venero

This workshop explores shamanic tradition as a means for self-healing and spiritual growth. Through music, art imagery, visualization, breath and body work, participants will travel through altered states of consciousness to a source of healing and meaning within themselves. Shamanic cultures call this realm the world of the spirit, where we can find true power and the ability to bring an open heart to our life's path.

Participants will study maps of consciousness drawn from research in psychedelics, from archetypal themes of death and rebirth, and from shamanism. Experiential sessions will combine modern technology, ancient ritual, and specially developed media portrayals of the transformative journey.

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will be to enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder of meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and movement are one." $675

Transitions

Elliot Waker Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg

Disorganization is a natural part of transition and facilitates reorganization. People are almost constantly in a state of transition—whether it be getting married, beginning a new career, becoming a parent, letting go of a relationship, or moving on to the next stage in the life cycle. These changes can be exciting and, at the same time, can evoke a loss of internal balance. The result can be loss of self-esteem, confusion about one's identity, and doubts about one's perceptions. New feelings and ideas are fragile during these periods of transition and require special nurturance.

The goal of this workshop is to gain perspective on the process of making transitions. Through guided fantasies, self-exploration, and didactic presentations, participants may develop ways of enhancing their understanding of themselves and increasing their overall effectiveness.

The Path of Transformation in Psychotherapy and Meditation

Daniel Brown

This workshop is designed for psychotherapists, practitioners of meditation, and those interested in the integration of the worlds of psychotherapy and spirituality. The leader will present an integrated model for the path of transformation, for the development of emotional experience, the sense of self and others, and reality sense. This model of normal, pathological, and optimal human development is drawn from the fields of child development, clinical psychology, and the great Eastern traditions of meditation.

This workshop will show how the path of meditation unfolds and will present a vision of optimal human development. It will also help participants learn to assess and treat different types of problems (clinical symptoms and meditation crises) which occur at various points along the overall developmental continuum. The workshop will address how psychotherapy can be used as a way to attain some of the necessary prerequisites for spiritual development and can assist with the problems that occur for the meditation practitioner and meditation teacher. It will also show how spiritual awareness can inform one's view of psychotherapy. Various experiential exercises and meditation practices will be used along with clinical case material. The workshop will be both experiential and didactic.

Much of the material will be drawn from the leader's experience as a clinician and teacher, and from his eighteen years of practicing meditation, translating meditation texts from Sanskrit and Tibetan sources, and conducting scientific studies on deep meditation states and enlightenment on meditation masters in this country and in South Asia.

Interspecies Touch and Healing

Linda Tellington-Jones

This course will provide hands-on practice of the Tellington Touch, a method which has been used successfully for healing and communicating with an intriguing variety of animals. Tellington Touch releases tension, fear, and pain and enhances cellular function and overall well-being. The benefits to the toucher are as great as to the touched.

Participants will learn how to use this method to treat shock, to release chronic and acute pain, and to alleviate allergies in both humans and animals. Eleven "touches" will be taught, with participants practicing on each other and working with live animals in the Gazebo. $350

Daniel Brown & Marushka Glissen

This workshop is for couples who want to improve their communication skills and increase their understanding of each other. Ways for resolving conflict and practical methods for becoming self-assertive and self-transcending in a partnership will be taught. Some of the work will address how the family of origin and past conditioning contribute to the bonding as well as the conflicts. Time will also be spent on how to find satisfaction, mutual support, relaxation, solitude, and play in day-to-day living as partners. Helping couples discover the wider purpose of being together through a sharing of values, love, and perhaps a spiritual vision will be emphasized. $350

Cosmic Conspiracy: A Game of Enlightenment

Robert Anton Wilson

Robert Anton Wilson writes: "Based on my psychological works and science-fantasy novels, this Game may shake the foundations of your world. When you enter the portals of Chapel Perilous, you will be given a deceptive Cover Story and a Real Identity—which is also fiction and exists only for the duration of the Game (if you're lucky). Thus, every participant is a liar—and you can't be too sure about the leader either. In regular sessions, I will lecture on such concepts as the presentation of the self in everyday life, the social creation of reality, the Game element in behavior, but between sessions you will have to deal with these abstract concepts in very concrete ways as spies, criminals, government agents, and extraterrestrials, as Cosmic Forces of Good and Evil attempt to lure you into their plots and counter-plots.

"Can you find the Maltese Falcon before any other player? Is some clever villain among you using the Game as a front to deal drugs or to brainwash other players? Will you spot the CIA assassin before you're 'killed' and removed from the Game? If you do get 'killed,' what will happen in Rebirthing, before you can enter the Game with a new Ego? As you deal with these increasingly urgent questions, you will also have to decide if this 'Game' is teaching you social psychology, mysticism, agnosticism, paranoia, or if it's 'just a Game' after all.

"Warning: the Attorney General has determined that this Game may be hazardous to your dogma." $350

Certification in Clinical Hypnosis

Eli Jaxon-Bear & Antoinette Varner

This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian hypnosis, neurolinguistics, and the enneagram of character fixation. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the M.F.C.C. and complies with the California state requirements for hypnosis certification.

While the use of hypnosis in habit control and symptom removal will be covered, the primary focus will be on hypnosis as a tool for developing spiritual awareness. Starting with the presupposition that we already live in trance and that the goal is waking up, the roots of personality structure and the filters of perception in the creation and transformation of reality will be carefully explored. Participants will have the opportunity to experience the power of trance to transform their lives, which will create a model for working with clients.

The structure of rapport, pacing and leading, and various hypnotic patterns of induction will be demonstrated and practiced along with a variety of clinical interventions, including reframing, change history, metaphors, and storytelling. There will be videotapes of Erickson and other well-known leaders in the field of hypnosis. Participants will have daily practice with each other and the opportunity to be videotaped doing a hypnotic induction. Daily zazen, Taoist yoga, and movement led by Antoinette Varner will also be a part of this program.

Upon completion of this course, participants who want to be certified must demonstrate a high level of professionalism as well as proficiency in technical skills to the satisfaction of the instructors before certification will be granted. After certification by the Institute for Advanced Hypnosis (testing and certification fee, $300) additional certifications are available from the American Council of Hypnotist Examiners ($125) and the Society of NeuroLinguistic Programming ($200).

Required reading: J. Haley, Uncommon Therapy (Norton); Grinder and Bandler, Trance-Formations; Frogs into Princes; and Reframing (all, Real People Press); H. Esalen offers a California state-approved massage program. Upon completion of a two-month massage work study track or a 130-hour massage practitioner workshop (see November 10-December 8), and after giving 30 additional massages elsewhere, graduates will receive their certificates. This program provides at least 130 hours of instruction, including anatomy, supplemented by study in body-mind disciplines such as yoga, gestalt awareness work, and movement, fulfilling the state requirement.

The Healthspring Project offers outreach, education, and referrals that extend Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent, service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring operates a global referral system, linking visitors to Esalen with body workers, counselors, and teachers from their home areas. There are ongoing programs at Esalen and a traveling workshop service in the U.S. and abroad. Instructors teach self-healing, Esalen body work, yoga, breath and body awareness, dance and centering movement, and meditation. Many instructors have experience in gestalt practice and movement continuum.

The Healthspring Library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, philosophy, yoga, nutrition, and organic gardening which may be borrowed by seminarians for a two-week period while at Esalen. Donations of books or periodicals are greatly appreciated.

Esalen Wilderness Programs Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The standard refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered. To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, we require a deposit of $200. The balance of the fee is due 14 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited. (Please note: The Salmon River trip has a different cancellation and refund policy. See workshop description for details.)

September 2–7
Path of the River:
A Salmon River Journey

Steven Harper & Nichols Expeditions

Idaho's lower gorge of the Salmon River is both beautiful and rugged, soft and demanding, yet always rewarding for those who are open to its dramatic variety. A trip down the Salmon offers clear water, tall green forests, white sand beaches, and challenging rapids. The river is a teacher and primary metaphor. The group will draw from aikido, dance, energy awareness, and meditation to enhance their experience of this majestic wilderness area.

Travel will be in inflatable rafts powered by six to eight people with paddles. Instruction will be offered in basic aspects of river life such as paddling and minimum-impact river camping. There will be time to discuss the area's natural and cultural history, to hike, to sit quietly and reflect.

River experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity and to participate fully. The workshop begins the morning of September 2nd in Whitebird, Idaho; there will be a pre-trip meeting the evening of September 1st. Nichols Expeditions will supply all the necessary river rafting gear, guides, and meals. Details and a personal equipment list will be sent upon registration. Space is limited.

Due to Esalen's special arrangement with Nichols Expeditions, the following cancellation policy is in effect for this workshop: A $200 nonrefundable deposit per person will confirm your reservation. Balance is due August 1. If you cancel prior to August 1, your nonrefundable deposit, less a $50 registration fee, may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. No refunds are available after August 1. $750

■ WORK STUDY PROGRAM

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program.

Two programs are planned for each month. Those scheduled thus far for 1991-92 include:

August 25–September 22
Phyllis Shankman offers a month of in-depth group process/gestalt work using the creative arts, as well as meditation, massage, and movement for self-exploration and healing.

Julian Silverman's program will draw from A Course in Miracles to explore the ideas of being responsible for one's life and personal power.

September 22–October 20
Til Luchau and guest teachers will use body work, movement, yoga, meditation, and sensory awareness practices to explore the nature of somatic experience.

Nancy Bacal will use writing as a vehicle for self-expression, personal exploration, and healing. Meditation will add a spiritual dimension to the process.

October 20–November 17
John Soper's group will focus on ways to improve the quality of life. The work will start with the individual and grow to include the environment.

Jackie Rosin and Kay Brownfield offer a month of psychosynthesis to explore the nature of essence. Meditation, guided imagery, music, movement, art, and individual process work will be some of the modalities used. Professionals are invited.

November 17–December 15
Karuna Licht will lead a monthlong journey using the creative processes of art, ritual, and guided imagery as the language of the heart.

Participants in William Pennell Rock's group will use psychodrama to clarify and reunite their inner feminine and masculine qualities. They will work individually, then come together in a group performance for the Esalen community.

December 15–January 12, 1992
David Schiffman will lead a month for people who are facing major changes in career, relationships, or matters of the spirit and are interested in breaking new ground in areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

Dianne Lawrence and participants will use acting, writing, theater, and painting to create a communal performance that will be presented at month's end.

January 12–February 9
This month with David Streeter will give students the opportunity to incorporate the subtle art of contemplation in a community atmosphere. Yoga, massage, and gentle emotional release—along with silent meditation—will be included in the curriculum.

Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita) will focus on embodiment and vision, utilizing the Bates vision method, movement and breath, meditation, earth ritual, and the creative use of the Spoken Word.

February 9–March 8
Vicki Topp and friends will lead this program of massage, meditation, and integrative body process.

Mary (Devarani) Goldenson's program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, Radix®, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

In as much as the Work Study Program is a complete program in itself, please do not plan to take regularly scheduled catalog workshops during your stay. Professional services, such as massage, are available at staff rates.

Accommodations are shared, with up to four people to a room, usually at South Coast Center, a staff complex located 1½ miles north of Esalen.

A deposit of $350 in U.S. currency is required with your application. The cost of all 28-day Work Study Programs, except the two-month body work program, is $700 the first month, $650 the second month, $600 the third month. Work students may be invited to remain for a second or third month depending on space available and community needs. There are no scholarships available for the Work Study Program.

For more information contact Bette Dingman: (408) 667-3010.

Note: Application is not registration in the program. Registration is made only after approval of application and upon receipt of deposit. The balance of the fee is due on arrival. Of the original deposit, $100 is nonrefundable and may be transferred to other programs within one year of receipt. Please return the application form (see next page) with your deposit to:

■ Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

FEATURE ARTICLE

PAYING ATTENTION

Introducing Abraham Maslow for an Esalen-sponsored lecture at San Francisco's Grace Cathedral on January 6, 1966, George Leonard said: "We believe that if the divine is present in the individual soul, it must be sought and found in institutions as well; for people will not readily achieve salvation without a saving society." Speaking on Esalen's behalf, Leonard emphasized a theme that was prominent in Esalen's seminars during the 1960s, namely, that individual fulfillment requires healthy cultural, religious, governmental, and other social structures. Since 1962, many program leaders at Esalen have explored the connections between personal and social transformation (see page 7).

Unfortunately, however, some of us tend to forget how much we depend upon good institutions. We have been eloquently reminded of that dependence by Robert Bellah, Richard Madsen, William Sullivan, Ann Swidler, and Steven Tipton, first through their book, Habits of the Heart, which examined certain excesses of American individualism, and now The Good Society, from which the following essay is excerpted. I hope you will read The Good Society. No other book of recent years so persuasively makes the case that, as Bellah and his colleagues put it, "concerns that are most deeply personal are closely connected with concerns that are global in scope." — Michael Murphy

An excerpt from The Good Society by Robert N. Bellah, Richard Madsen, William M. Sullivan, Ann Swidler, and Steven M. Tipton (Alfred A. Knopf, 1991).

From the time we were children we were told by our parents and our grammar school teachers to "Pay attention!" In more or less peremptory ways we have been receiving the same message ever since. Even though we may have grown inured to this injunction and shrug it off, there are few things in life more important. For attention is how we use our psychic energy, and how we use our psychic energy determines the kind of self we are cultivating, the kind of person we are learning to be. When we are giving our full attention to something, when we are really attending, we are calling on all our resources of intelligence, feeling, and moral sensitivity. This can happen at work, at play, in interaction with people we care about. At such moments we are not thinking about ourselves because we are completely absorbed in what we are doing. Although such moments are enjoyable, we do not seek them out because of pleasure, but because they are things we really want to do in terms of the larger context of our lives. They "make sense." And, even though they are moments of minimal self-consciousness and their purpose is not to maximize pleasure, it is in such moments that we are most likely to be genuinely happy.

While paying attention, attending, is very natural for human beings, our attention is frequently disturbed. One of the most obvious features of psychotics is that they suffer from "disorders of attention," in which they have no control over the thoughts and sensations that come flooding into their minds and cannot consciously decide to focus their attention on objects of their concern. But all of us suffer, though less drastically, from such disorders of attention. When we are doing something we "have to do," but our minds and our feelings are somewhere else, our attention is alienated. In such situations of disordered or alienated attention, our self-consciousness is apt to be high. We may suffer from anxiety or, today's common complaint, "stress." Working hard at something we care about, giving our full attention to someone we love — these do not cause stress. But studying a subject we're not interested in and worrying about the grade, or doing things at work that we find meaningless but that the boss requires and we must do if we don't want to lose our job, or just being overwhelmed by more than we can cope with to the point where we feel fragmented and exhausted — these cause stress, these are examples of alienated attention. We attend but fitfully — inattentively, so to speak — and therefore we are not cultivating our selves or our relationships with others. Rather we may be building up strong desires to seek distraction when we have free time. T.S. Eliot in a famous line from "Burnt Norton," describing the faces of people in the subway, speaks of them as "distracted from distraction by distraction."

Unfortunately, many of the distractions we hope will "deaden the pain" — alcohol, restless channel-flipping TV watching, compulsive promiscuity — do not really help, for such distractions too are forms of alienated attention that leave us mildly, or sometimes severely, depressed. We have not exercised the potentialities of our selves and our relationships, and so we have not reaffirmed our selves in the larger contexts that give our lives meaning. If, after a stressful day, we can turn our attention to something that is mildly demanding but inherently meaningful — such as reading a good book, repairing the car, talking to someone we love, or even cooking the family meal — we are more apt to find that we are "relaxed."

Attention is, interestingly enough, a religious idea in more than one tradition. Zen Buddhism, for example, enjoins a state of mindfulness, an open attention to whatever is at hand, but Zen practitioners know that is always threatened by distraction. "Each act must be carried out in mindfulness," observes the contemporary Buddhist teacher Thich Nhat Hanh. "Each act is a rite, a ceremony," he writes. "Raising your cup of tea to your mouth is a rite. Does the word 'rite' seem too solemn? I use the word to jolt you into the realization of the life-and-death matter of awareness." Mindfulness is valued because it is a kind of foretaste of religious enlightenment, which in turn is a full waking up from the darkness of illusion and a full recognition of reality as it is.

This idea, common enough in Eastern religions, has analogies in biblical religion as well. God revealed himself to Moses from out of the burning bush as "I am that I am," (Exodus 3.14) and Moses had a hard time getting the children of Israel, distracted by their golden calf, to see the radical truth that had been revealed to him at Sinai. Jesus preached a new reality, a Kingdom of God which he declared was at hand, though most of his hearers could not make it out. Jesus said, "Having eyes do you not see, and having ears do you not hear?" (Mark 8:18), but many were too distracted to see or hear.

K.B. KAPLAN

This is not the place to attempt to develop a full-scale phenomenology of attention, but, as in the religious examples, we mean to use attention normatively, in the sense of "mindfulness," as the Buddhists put it, or openness to the leadings of God, as the Quakers say. On the face of it, it may seem hard to tell the difference between attention and obsession. But as we shall use the term here, attention implies an openness to experience, a willingness to widen the lens of apperception when that is appropriate, and this obsession is incapable of doing.

So far we have considered the issues of attention, of disordered or alienated attention, and of distraction, from the point of view of the individual. Self-control and self-discipline have a lot to do with whether we can engage with life or simply attempt to escape it. But people do not deal with these questions all by themselves, as we have already noted in the area of religion, nor can one alone develop a self able to sustain attention. As we have insisted through this book, we live in and through institutions. The nature of the institutions we both inhabit and transform have much to do with our capacity to sustain attention. We could even say that institutions are socially organized forms of paying attention or attending, although they can also, unfortunately, be socially organized forms of distraction.

Americans place a high valuation on family life. But if the family is only "a haven in a heartless world," a place that provides distraction from the harshness of the rest of our lives, we are certain to be disappointed. For families require a great deal of attention to function successfully. Despite romantic fantasies, marital love is not a narcotic that soothes all wounds. Attending to each other, expressing our deepest concerns and aspirations and listening to those of the other, are fundamental in a good marriage, and crucial to the satisfaction it provides. But if we only expect to be attended to and we don't attend to the other, because we've had too hard a day or whatever (and this is more apt to be a male than a female failing) — we sow the seeds of marital discord and deprive ourselves of the real rewards of marriage. The fact that married people live longer than single people suggests that marriage provides a kind of attention that is very important for human beings.

Attention is important between marriage partners, but it is fundamental for children. Infants who do not get attention, in the sense of psychic interaction and love, simply cannot survive, even if they are fed and clothed. And the quality of attention that children get has a great deal to do with how they turn out. In a study in Chicago that was concerned exactly with this issue, the psychologist Mihaly Csikszentmihalyi and the sociologist Eugene Rochberg-Halton found that the children of "warm families" (families where high levels of attention were given to each member) were significantly different from children of "cool families" (families where parents were distracted, inattentive, and not relating well to each other): "Children of warm homes are more sympathetic, helpful, caring, and supporting. The next difference is Affiliation: the relevant traits here are loyal, warm, friendly, sociable, cooperative. Warm homes also breed children who are less denying, defensive, and unsure of their worth." In short, attentive homes breed attentive children.

Today there is a crisis with respect to giving and receiving attention in the family. The care of everything and everyone, especially children, is suffering because there is not enough time. Although the solution to this problem involves changes in the larger society, in the short term there is the immediate obligation on the part of everyone in the family to restore the centrality of attention and care. Here the primary need at the moment is a greater participation of men, of husbands and fathers, in the care that is essential to family life.

But the task of restoring family life, whatever form the family may take, cannot be the family's alone. As Arlie Hochschild has recently pointed out, a "job culture" has expanded at the expense of a "family culture." Only a major shift in the organization of work and in American public policy with respect to it will enable us to regain a balance between job and family. It might appear at the moment, when economic competitiveness is such an obsession, that Americans "can't afford" to think about the family if it will in any way hinder our economic efficiency. Nothing could be more shortsighted. In the long run our economic life like every other aspect of our common existence depends on the quality of people. How effective will our economy be if it depends on a generation of listless, anxious people unable to concentrate on anything very long and unconcerned to plan a coherent life for themselves? There is literally nothing more important than the quality of our young people, yet American public policy consistently refuses to pay attention to this fact.

The current difficulties of the American family have a great deal to do with how isolated it is, geographically and socially. There is much talk about the various "experimental" forms of the family today — two-earner households, single-parent households, same-sex couples with children — as well as "traditional" families where husbands work and wives stay home, but there is a great deal that all these families have in common and that makes it difficult for all of them to sustain family life. As the theologian John Snow puts it:

"In all these cases the absence of generational rootedness in a certain place with a long term commitment to its community and economic life makes money — cashflow — the primary source of security.

> Concerns that are most deeply personal are closely connected with concerns that are global in scope. We cannot be the caring people whom our children need us to be and ignore the world they will have to live in. We cannot hide from the fact that without effective democratic intervention and institution-building the world economy might accelerate in ways that will tear our lives apart and destroy the environment. Moral discourse is essential in the family; it is also essential in the world. There is no place to hide.

"With professional people there is the added security of insurance, health insurance and pensions. For the rest there are welfare, social security and medicare. In all cases the bottom line of security is money, not extended family and community.

"For some families there is no bottom line at all. They may be found in shelters, and some of them are healthy young people with small children and no addiction to drugs or alcohol, sometimes with jobs, yet unable to afford rent in such cities as Boston or New York. They lack even an address."

What Snow is suggesting is that stable and attentive families need commitment to a place, which in turn requires locally and regionally coherent economies. Certainly many of the experiences that make childhood enjoyable, including extended family celebrations, get-togethers and reunions, have become rare in our society. Snow is surely right that the cause of this condition is the pressures generated by our current form of political economy rather than the desires of people. What families most need is a context of relationships and institutions that gives them attention, not just money. Decentralization of the economy and other public institutions would seem to go against the whole trend of modernity, but new developments in high technology offer a way to reverse long-standing trends. Where heavy equipment is no longer the basis of the economy, one can bring training and jobs to where people are rather than the reverse; this may be possible as it has not been for a very long time.

A new look at localism, at decentralization, at what the American philosopher Josiah Royce long ago called "provincialism," in a positive sense, at what Lewis Mumford called "settlement," would be valuable for much more than family life. Localism does not imply any abdication of the responsibility of the federal and state governments for the general population — it does not insist on a devolution of major responsibilities to underfunded and wavering "points of light." But it does envision that the government would support and expand local efforts where they exist — a summer program for teenagers sponsored by a black church in a depressed neighborhood; an effort by workers to buy out and renovate a plant whose owners wished to relocate in Brazil — but also help create such efforts where they don't exist. In Catholic social teaching this is known as the principle of subsidiarity, about which there is some diversity of interpretation. As we use it here, subsidiarity implies that higher-level associations such as the state should never replace what lower-level associations can do effectively, but it also implies their obligation to help when the lower-level associations lack resources to do the job alone.

When we think about how money has become so central a measure for everything in our society, including personal worth, and remember that money in most of these contexts is a source of distraction rather then attention, we come face to face with the central paradox of American history. The individual was, in the eighteenth century, embedded in a complex moral ecology that included family and church on the one hand and on the other a vigorous public sphere in which economic initiative, it was hoped, grew together with public spirit. Without overlooking its many injustices, we may note that it was still a society that operated on a humanly intelligible scale. Both the economy and the government were sufficiently small-scale as to be understandable to the ordinary citizen. Looking back from our present position we can see that citizens then were faced with two possibilities, which we may denote as "cultivation" and "exploitation." The pattern of "cultivation" which some Americans for a time did embrace (and others never entirely abandoned) involved the creation of regional cultures in some degree of harmony with the natural environment, where individuals, families, and local communities could grow in moral and cultural complexity.

But the temptations of exploitation in so new and so rich a country proved irresistible. Once the possibilities of the new industrial economy were grasped, the results were dramatic. As Lewis Mumford put it:

"Art, culture, education, recreation — all these things came as an afterthought if they came at all, after our one-sided preoccupation with industry had ruined a great many of their potentialities, both in the life of the individual, whose health and intelligence had been sacrificed to material gain, and in the life of the community. When the pioneer had skinned the soil, he moved on; when the miner had exhausted his mine, he moved on; when the timber cutter had gutted out the forests of the Appalachians, he moved on. All those social types left rack and ruin behind them. The regional planner points out that no civilization can exist on this unstable and nomadic basis: it requires a settled life, based on the possibility of continuously cultivating the environment, replacing in one form what one takes away in another."

The pattern of exploitation was destructive to both the natural environment and the life of the community. It appealed to that aspect of the tradition in which individual accumulation, measured in money terms, came loose from other social goods and became an all-consuming concern, undercutting even the devotion to self-cultivation and the family. And this pattern of exploitation led to the development of large economic and governmental structures that grew "over the heads" of the citizens and beyond their control, making a mockery of the most fundamental principle of American political philosophy: government by the consent of the governed. When this was followed not only by plundering the natural resources of the North American continent but by the development of an imperial military state, operating with the secrecy and arbitrary domination that empires always employ, the eighteenth-century notion of a republican polity, answerable to its citizens in the full light of day, was hardly recognizable.

We took up the idea of attention as initially a matter of individual psychology. As we followed it, we moved to ever larger social and cultural circles: from self-cultivation, to concern for the family, to our local communities, to our national life and life in the world. Attention and distraction, the disturbance and destruction of attention, occurred at every point. Everywhere attention had to do not only with conscious awareness but with the cultivation of human possibilities and purposes, whereas distraction was a response to fear and exhaustion, leading to shallow escapism in some circumstances, to defensive efforts to dominate and control through power or money in others.

Institutional change comes only as a result of the political process. An attentive democratic politics is not some extraneous demand that busy and harried citizens may ignore or attend to fitfully out of "liberal guilt." Our argument is that if we are going to be the kind of persons we want to be, and live the kind of lives we want to live, then attention and not distraction is essential. Concerns that are most deeply personal are closely connected with concerns that are global in scope. We cannot be the caring people whom our children need us to be and ignore the world they will have to live in. We cannot hide from the fact that without effective democratic intervention and institution-building the world economy might accelerate in ways that will tear our lives apart and destroy the environment. Moral discourse is essential in the family; it is also essential in the world. There is no place to hide. It is time to pay attention. ■

Esalen Programs for Social Change and Institutional Reform

■ Since 1967, Esalen has sponsored public seminars and invitational conferences to support ecological studies and programs for environmental protection. Many leading environmentalists have attended these programs during the past 25 years.

■ In 1967, with a grant from the Ford Foundation, Esalen instituted a program to develop Confluent Education, which joins sensory-motor, affective, volitional, and cognitive learning in unified curricula. Conceived and directed by Professor George I. Brown, this project gave rise to a graduate program at the University of California, Santa Barbara's School of Education, which has conferred more than fifty doctorates and 200 master's degrees in Confluent Education.

■ In 1968, Esalen initiated a long-term project in medicine to explore alternative approaches to health. This project gave rise to the Institute for Humanistic Medicine directed by Sarah and Stuart Miller, which was responsible for the first national legislation supporting institutional reforms related to holistic, or wellness, concepts of health care.

■ Since 1980, Esalen's Soviet-American Exchange program has sponsored seminars, conferences, cultural and scientific exchanges, and others programs to promote cooperation between the USA and the USSR. By 1991, Esalen had organized several hundred programs to bring Americans and Soviets together for creative exchange and cooperative work.

■ From 1980 until 1989, Esalen sponsored annual conferences on governance. These programs were directed by social psychologist Donald Michael, and included both academic theorists and legislators who had developed new thinking or practical programs concerned with problems of governance at the local, national, and international level.

ESALEN NOTES

Group Reservations for the Big House

As featured in the May-October 1991 catalog, we are now scheduling workshops in our newly renovated Big House. This facility is available to groups of individuals who work together and would like to design their own Esalen program, drawing on our leaders and other resources. Ten bedrooms accommodating up to twenty individuals, ten bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, and living room make it possible to house group members together, thereby enhancing the retreat environment.

To schedule or discuss possible formats, please contact Pat LeWine, program coordinator, (408) 667-3038.

New Program on Human Potential and Ecological Design

The Farallones Institute has been creating models of ecologically stable, resource-conserving environments for twenty years. Its Integral Urban House in Berkeley and Rural Center in Occidental have pioneered models demonstrating new concepts in solar design, water conservation, waste recycling, and energy production. Esalen Institute, in cooperation with the Farallones Institute, is offering a series of programs that explore the coevolution of personal and planetary health, culture, consciousness, and design. The next two workshops in this series are scheduled for January 31-February 2 and June 5-7. Please turn to Esalen Seminars for more information.

WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 49-50. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

With the completion of the Big House renovation in June, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Pat LeWine, (408) 667-3038.

Finally, there are other events which enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. And, there is a community event schedule that is offered; please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clearly," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continual change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness throughout the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life. $350

Introduction to Focusing

Mary McGuire & Roseann Kasayka

Focusing is a step-by-step process for gaining entry into a physically felt intelligence called body wisdom or bodily knowing. This method originally came out of research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. While trying to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, they found that success cannot be predicted by the personality of the client or the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also discovered that this awareness can be taught to those who do not have it readily. The focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

Focusing's applications extend far beyond its use in psychotherapy. It enhances other methods of change or growth and is used in education, business, and work with cancer patients. It offers:

- A way of listening to oneself and others
- A means to personal insights
- A resource for spiritual growth
- A path to healing and reconciliation
- A catalyst for healthier relationships
- A method for reducing stress and preventing burn-out
- A means of getting in touch with one's creativity
- A tool for phenomenological research

This workshop will cover the six steps of this method as outlined in Gendlin's Focusing, which participants are strongly encouraged to read before the workshop. Participants will be introduced to a holistic way of paying attention by creating an inner climate of gentleness, friendliness, allowing, receiving, being with, touching, listening, and waiting. This differs from the usual outside climate of forcing, pushing, shoving, and demanding. They will explore how to relate to both positive and negative experiences as they are carried in the body, without the usual response of being overwhelmed by feelings or running away from them. This way of being with oneself allows each experience to unfold in a positive direction, and the person is empowered with an inner strength and direction that allows life energy to flow forward in new ways.

This blend of gestalt practice, Alexander Technique, Feldenkrais exercises, and Ericksonian hypnosis will be utilized as a gateway to contact, express, and work through deep feelings and memories locked in the body. Group exercises and individual demonstrations will incorporate gentle touch, movement, music, and humor. Key issues will be:

- Surviving the wounds of a dysfunctional family
- Healing the inner child
- Evoking innate healing potential
- Interdependence between emotions and posture
- Dreams and body metaphors that reveal life patterns
- Playfulness and humor
- Tools for self-care

Focusing, Dream Work, and the Helping Relationship

Mary McGuire & Roseann Kasayka

Focusing originally came out of research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. Trying to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, they found that success cannot be predicted by the personality of the client or the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be taught to those who do not have it readily. The focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches awareness of this felt experience.

This workshop is for psychologists, counselors, social workers, nurses, doctors, and others in the helping professions. Focusing is beneficial to these individuals because it augments their understanding of the client's inner process and aids in their own self-awareness as helper. It allows the practitioner to recognize the vulnerable or painful places in the other where new life wants to emerge, and facilitates growth in a gentle way that honors the other's experience.

Participants will practice the focusing process called Experiential Listening, a method of listening for the bodily felt sense in what the other is saying and responding from one's own felt sense of the situation. They will also be introduced to Gendlin's integrative approach to dream work. Theories of Freud, Jung, Perls, and others will serve as a source of questions; the answers will come from participants' own dream interpretations and will be explored via this method of awareness of felt experience.

Research has shown focusing to have made a significant difference in the process of therapy clients, the lives of cancer patients, in preventing staff burn-out, and building team spirit among health care professionals. This workshop could be a new beginning. What better way to start the New Year.

Ilana Rubenfeld

This workshop will provide an introduction to the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Method, a healing system that uses gentle touch, movement, gestalt practice, creative imagination, music, and humor.

The memories and emotions stored in the body can result in energy blocks and imbalances. Through exercises designed to contact, release, transform, and balance these cellular patterns, participants can freely explore their innate healing potential. The atmosphere will be one of acceptance, caring, and laughter, encouraging participants to move toward integration, empowerment, freedom, and new possibilities.

Participation in this workshop will fulfill one of the requirements for acceptance into the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Training Program.

Children and Anger: A Gestalt View

Violet Oaklander

The theme of this workshop is the anger of children. Participants will discuss the various ways that young people express anger, the relationship of anger to negative interjects and self-esteem, and how parents, teachers, and therapists can help children express this least tolerated and most misunderstood emotion in healthy, safe, and satisfying ways.

This approach is based on the use of creative, expressive, and projective methods, with gestalt theory and practice as the underlying framework. The thrust of this work is to provide the child with a means for expressing his or her innermost feelings, to foster self-awareness and self-discovery, to enhance self-esteem and, in general, to promote emotional growth. Children thereby learn not only about themselves, but about their relationship to others and the world around them.

The workshop will include discussion, demonstration, examples of children's work and, particularly, direct experience of expressive methods used with children.

The Body and Spirituality

Maggie Hodgson & Don Hanlon Johnson

This is one of several seminars, and the first public offering, in the Esalen Body-Spirituality Project. Invitational seminars to date have brought together leading teachers in the field of somatics with leaders in the field of religion — nuns, priests, rabbis, teachers of meditation, heads of religious healing centers — from the Roman Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, Islamic, Native American, Russian Orthodox, and Buddhist traditions. The emphasis has been on experiential work designed to challenge disease-provoking tensions produced by the dominant social images of the body, and to offer alternative images more conducive to the physical and spiritual health of human beings and our planet. There has been experiential work with body image and personality, sensory awareness, body movement, breath, imagery, and simple forms of touch, as well as discussion exploring the implications of this work for healing, education, social organization and, particularly, for world peace. This seminar continues that work. Some of its themes will be:

- How to utilize a more holistic understanding of the body to formulate theologies which are more supportive of the basic needs of suffering human beings and of the earth;
- The significance of Native ways in challenging Western alienation from the body and the earth, and the sicknesses that derive from that alienation;
- The integration of more sophisticated uses of touch in traditional healing ministries of the religious communities;
- How to use the various body-oriented therapies in the clinics provided by religious groups for suffering communities: addicts, the homeless, political refugees, etc.;
- How to integrate sophisticated contemporary work with the body with traditional methods of meditation and ritual.

Maggie Hodgson has been a trainer and is now executive director of the Nechi Institute on Alcohol and Drug Education for Native peoples in Canada. That center has demonstrated remarkable success in the healing significance of returning to the old ways. Don Hanlon Johnson brings to the seminars the results of his work during the past four years applying somatics techniques in work with religious leaders.

Feeling and Innovation

Dale Cummings & Karel Samsom

Discovering creative solutions in our personal and occupational lives can transform leisure and work and enliven our experience. Webster defines feeling as "the capacity to respond emotionally" and innovation as the "introduction of something new." How these two themes interconnect will be the focus of this workshop.

Participants will use Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, exercises in creativity and innovation, role-playing, and discussion. A period of individual work (the Radix® intensive) in a small group setting will provide a safe environment of emotional support. As negative feelings are worked through, active creativity can emerge.

Through its focus on feelings and creativity, this workshop offers encouragement and practical ideas for reinvigorating personal and organizational experiences and for pursuing innovation and new (ad)ventures in daily life. $675

Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

Each group of people who comes together creates a unique "field." When the members of a group are all women, as in this workshop, the field takes on a distinct quality which encourages exploration of particular feelings and issues. During this workshop, we will explore those feelings as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice (see Gestalt Practice, January 24-26) as well as any other forms of process that serve us in contacting, expressing, and supporting ourselves and each other. Bring rattles, drums, dreams, pictures of your mother and grandmother, or anything else you might want to share. $675

Somatosynthesis

Clyde Ford

Clyde Ford will introduce participants to somatosynthesis, a method which uses touch, body awareness, and movement to address the emotional issues underlying pain, disease, and physical symptoms. It brings together body-based methods with psychological and spiritual approaches to affect the healing process.

This workshop will provide participants with the initial skills for exploring this dynamic relationship between body and mind through touch. It will begin with body-mapping, a method of linking areas of the physical body to underlying psychological and emotional issues, and then take an in-depth look at how touch can be used to address these issues and guide the person toward greater well-being. There will be lectures, demonstrations, discussion, and supervised hands-on exercises. It is designed for students of the healing arts who wish to explore the emotional and psychological aspects of somatics work. Please wear comfortable clothes and bring a notebook to record your experiences.

The Writer's Way: Self-Exploration through Writing

Nancy Bacal

We all have stories and the ability to tell them. But when asked to translate them onto the page, many of us are inhibited by self-judgment. Through a series of exercises designed to bypass blockages, participants will be encouraged to move beyond the controlling arm of the critic and tap their reservoirs of personal experience. These exercises will provide an opportunity to turn the burdens in our lives into stories, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. They are specific enough to excite the imagination yet loose enough for the writer inside to experiment with form and images and remain open to surprise.

This writing workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the would-be writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, walks, meditation as it relates to creative process, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The intention will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, functioning relationship with one's work.

Vision and Embodiment

Laura DeNuccio

This is an educational introduction to vision fitness, integrating inner vision and outer sight. The focus is on discovering 1) how to relax, clear, and reeducate the eye and the self to see, and 2) how one's present reality is distorted or shaped by attitudes, beliefs, and feelings.

Participants will utilize the Bates method of eye relaxation, movement, breath, guided meditation, earth ritual, and the creative use of the Spoken Word. Together they will explore, discover, experience, and expand their vision of possibilities for themselves and the world in which they live.

Endarkenment

Will & Ailish Schutz

Sometimes in our search for enlightenment we become humorless, and our search becomes tedious. Growth demands a respite from intensive struggle.

This workshop can provide a vehicle for the turn downward. We shall explore: how to establish and maintain meaningless relations; what to worry about while meditating; advanced covert blaming and inducing guilt in loved ones; how to become the most sympathetic victim/martyr in your social group; guilt without sex. This approach, similar to Feldenkrais's "live the disasters" and the "homeopathic principle" (Will Schutz, Body Fantasy), can be as valuable for attaining enlightenment as the direct route — and more fun. In addition, participants in this workshop will have opportunities to explore, play with, and celebrate the shadow — that which we usually hide. $350

Psychoneuroimmunology and its Implications

George Solomon & Margaret Kemeny

The rapidly developing field of psychoneuroimmunology (PNI) is concerned with the nature of complex bidirectional interactions between the central nervous system (CNS) and the immune system and their clinical and bioregulatory implications. The CNS mediates stress effects, coping, emotions, and other psychological processes that, via the immune system, affect the onset and course of many diseases.

This didactic but interactive course will describe the immune system, how it works and is regulated. The leaders will discuss human and animal research on the effects of stress and other experiential factors on immunity and on immunologically-resisted and mediated diseases, including bacterial and viral infections, cancer, autoimmune diseases, allergies, and AIDS. The as-yet poorly researched area of the impact of interventions, including psychotherapy, on immunity and disease will be discussed. Implications of PNI for understanding traditional and alternative healing systems and placebo effects will be explored. There will be ample opportunity for questions.

Moving from Love Addiction to Healthy Intimacy

Jed Diamond

Many of us are successful in our professional lives, but struggle in our love lives. Our romantic relationships are a series of disappointments, yet we continue to pursue them. We seek lovers to make us feel whole, yet we lose our sense of self. We cling to partners who are abusive, yet we are afraid to let go. Some of us have become relationship anorexics, starving ourselves for love because we are afraid to risk being hurt again. Many of us have become addicts and don't even know it. We turn to each other out of the same needs that drive some people to alcohol and others to cocaine. Interpersonal addiction, love addiction, is not only the most common addiction, it is the core out of which all other addictions emerge.

This workshop offers a safe and supportive setting in which to explore sexual, romantic, and relationship addictions. Participants will delve into the "black hole," the center of their being where they contact their earliest experiences of abuse and abandonment. There they may also find the "golden thread" which can lead them back to their true selves.

Small group interaction, writing, guided meditation, and movement based on aikido and energy awareness will be used to experience the differences between male and female love addictions, healthy love vs. love addiction, and the seven stages of developing joyous and peaceful intimate partnerships.

Letting Go–Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Beliefs, fears, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate — in the moment — to ourselves, to our work, and to those we love.

The workshop includes periods of intense body work for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dream work, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge. This workshop will have no more than 30 participants. $675

Couples' Workshop

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead, they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

Exploring Dimensions of Healing

Elizabeth Stratton

The desire to heal and be healed is a deep need within every human being. Seeing someone we love in pain brings out the instinct to touch that person in a caring and compassionate way. Feeling or being ill ourselves can lead us to explore both spiritual and scientific dimensions of healing that we would otherwise not be open to.

Psychic healing, with its focus on the laying on of hands, understanding the meaning of the illness, and seeing into the heart of the person who is ill, brings a spiritual dimension to healing that can be a valuable adjunct to modern medicine and its high technology.

This five-day workshop will provide both theoretical and practical tools to awaken the healer within. Self-healing methods such as opening the energy centers (chakras), communicating with the body, and guided healing imagery will be explored to assist participants in taking charge of their own health. In addition, participants will begin to learn to work with others in a healing capacity through laying on of hands and psychic scanning.

January 19–26

Cortical Reeducation® and The Feldenkrais® Method

Harriet Goslins & Mark Bender

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain/muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all can evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk of injury for the sedentary or those dealing with aftereffects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back, to improve their posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provider approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

Introduction to Gestalt Practice

Joyce Lyke

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear —
And when used — is inexhaustible.
— Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form — nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is *intra*personal rather than *inter*personal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Alexandrian Traditions: A Weekend with Ralph Abraham

Several of the wonders of the ancient world were created in Alexandria, metropolis of Greeks, Egyptians, Jews, and Christians. Mathematics and philosophy merged in a creative whirlpool of Hermetic, Gnostic, and Kabbalistic wisdom. In this weekend of geometry and metaphysics, we will survey the Alexandrian miracle from Euclid to Hypatia, discussing the significance of this pagan intellectual heritage for our past and our future. We will seek the lost bridge between mathematics and the spirit. $350

Creating a New Life

Elizabeth Stratton

The foundation of recovery from any addiction is spiritual strength — the recognition of the healing power of our relationship with God. It gives the recovery process meaning and the individual a will to live.

Creating a new life during recovery is a challenging process. To let go of the past while recovering from it means to see life through new eyes. Beginning each day anew requires dedication, courage, and compassion for the self that is being reborn. It means telling the truth and seeing life and the self through the eyes of compassionate truth.

This workshop provides an opportunity for those individuals who are in the recovery process to develop the healing skills necessary to create a new life. Experiential work will include: establishing and nurturing a relationship with God; self-forgiveness and forgiving others; telling the truth and releasing fear; turning anger into the will to live; healing the physical body from years of abuse; opening the inner energy system through meditation and imagery; developing psychic strength and protection from other people's negativity and addictive behaviors; and experiencing bliss through spiritual substance rather than substance abuse.

Co

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

This is a workshop for people helpers. Everyone has seen duets in ballet in which the male dancer follows the prima ballerina, supporting her leaps and turns. Many human dyads are similar. One person is in the foreground while the other, the "co," accepts a background position. The concerns of the focal person come first. They define the relationship either by explicit agreement, as in psychotherapy and medicine, or implicitly, as in many marriages.

The focus acts; the co tracks. The focus makes a movement and the co, like a dance partner, adjusts. What the focus needs, the co provides. The co is receptive, responsive, attentive, enabling, facilitating.

Cos can be found nurturing the young and the frail elderly, ministering to the disturbed, nursing the sick, designing houses for the wealthy, and in many other situations throughout society. Sometimes these co relationships are a vocational choice and a charitable way of life. Sometimes, as with co-dependencies and co-alcoholics, they are dysfunctional and harmful.

We will spend the weekend studying, through group experiential exercises and discussions, when, where, why, and how to co, and the politics of both entering into and refraining from such relationships.

Women's Wisdom: Celebrating Sacred Dimensions of the Feminine

Jean Shinoda Bolen
& Jananne Lovett-Keen

By tapping intuitive sources of wisdom, creativity, and spirituality, life takes on deeper meaning. We are nourished by what we feel and know and dream and express. In the outer world, change and transitions are inevitable. What we often miss is time to reflect upon the meaning of events and to take stock of who we are becoming.

This retreat invites women to take time for inner reflection in the nurturing company of other women in an environment of natural beauty. Jean Shinoda Bolen, author of Goddesses in Everywoman, will lead participants inward through myths and meditation to their personal symbols and to the truth in their dreams. Jananne Lovett-Keen, a musician and body worker, will teach participants to care for their bodies and to be attuned to their vulnerabilities, pain, trust, and strengths. Through music, participants will touch sources of inspiration and creativity and be reminded of the profound connection between women's nature and Mother Nature, between music and body knowledge.

CAROL RENEE PIERPOINT

These five days will provide women with an opportunity to experience their inner trusting child, the grown woman choicemaker, and the wise woman aware of the sacred dimension of ordinary life. $675

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The process will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $675

Sim Van der Ryn

Each of us is a designer. In this workshop, we explore the roots of design within us, including our conscious and unconscious internal programs, our personal and collective histories. We use storytelling, model-making, image-making, and free writing to get at the designer within. From there we can design our personal ecology, physical and temporal space. We begin to move from being unconscious to conscious designers.

Recommended for professional designers who have lost their roots and lay people who never realized they had any roots in design. $350

Protoanalysis and the Enneagon: Breaking the Fixation

Jack Downing, Michael Kramer & Paule Marx

This workshop introduces the Arica theory and method of protoanalysis in which ego fixation is revealed by the muscular tensions of the face. Oscar Ichazo, the founder of the Arica Institute, will determine each participant's fixation from photographic slides submitted prior to the workshop. Ichazo is the sole originator of the theory of ego fixations.

The fixation is the area of the psyche in which a person is most sensitive. We defend this over-sensitivity with a cluster of reactions which becomes a fixated pattern in childhood. There are nine types of over-preoccupation which veil our perception of reality and shroud our natural, spontaneous, and essential nature. This ego identity is, at its core, ontologically empty and will never allow us to experience the totality of ourselves, which is our birthright as human beings.

Discovering our fixation is a catalyst for internal growth and evolution. Once we break this habitual identification with one point of view, the eight remaining elemental parts of our psyche become enormously enriched. We being to recognize the defense mechanisms of our fixation as simple processes, comical in their predictability. This work is done with humor; in this way the nine fixations become exaggerated characters in our "theater of the subjective." We can then transcend ordinary states of subjectivity and experience a more lucid state of self-awareness.

In this seminar, participants will study a number of enneagons that work harmonically with the enneagon of the nine fixations. The workshop will also include enneagon theory, meditation, diakath breathing, essential movement, group work, and theater.

Please note: Three slides of each participant's face must be received one month prior to the workshop, or by January 2, 1992. A letter of explanation about the lighting and photography of the slides is available from Esalen.

Accessing Creative Process

Dianne Laurence

Spontaneity, imagination, trust, and risk-taking are all essential ingredients in the creative life of the individual. They are not parcelled out at birth in limited supply but are parts of our natural makeup and can be exercised and strengthened. This workshop will use theater improv, storytelling, and painting games to evoke these natural potentials.

Many people claim that they "just aren't that creative" when the real issue is whether or not they are willing to engage in a relationship with their creative intelligence. This workshop will offer the opportunity for laypeople and artists alike to see where and how they joyfully participate and where and how they resist. It is useful for people who are stuck, who want to find a way of going deeper, or who just want to play in areas they have been curious about. $350

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared — by their family backgrounds or society — to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $350

A Weekend with Terence McKenna

Author, explorer, and philosopher Terence McKenna brings us unique perspectives on the spiritual life and impending transformations of the human world. In this seminar he and participants will examine human attitudes toward the Other, discuss Time and its mysteries, the nature of language, and techniques of ecstasy that have developed in non-Western societies. The role of hallucinogenic plants will be discussed in depth — their role in shamanism and their impact on the general evolution of human cultures and social forms. McKenna will discuss the making of effective choices about spiritual development and the roles that we can play in the unfolding of the post-historical future.

McKenna writes: "This is a chance to experience consciousness as an informational creature loose in an environment of meaning. Our global culture is preparing to depart for the stars; learn what you should pack for the trip. We will discuss what a long, strange trip it has been and is bound to be. We will consider a growing zoo of strange futures, chaotic attractors, and fractal language elves breeding and at play in the phase space of happenstance. We will conduct a real-time search for understanding of the onrushing transformation of our planet, ourselves, and the way we see each other." $350

Catherine de Segonzac Shainberg

In this workshop, participants will explore in rapid succession different aspects of life in an imaginal and sensory mode. Through short inductions, an empty space opens up in which images emerge spontaneously. Visual movement is experienced at the somatic level as well as emotionally and mentally. As the images unfold, they speak for themselves, often in surprising and deeply moving ways. They lead the dreamer toward a broader awareness of themselves and of their rich inner resources. An unfolding image can represent both the diagnosis and healing of a difficult situation. In other instances, the guide might suggest another perspective from which to look at an image which may serve to unblock or change a situation. The act of moving into a new configuration becomes the healing process, the transformation.

The emphasis in this workshop will be on the connection between organic movement and the spontaneous emergence of images. Working quickly with inductions and exercises to elicit an imaginal experience, participants — students of themselves — will have the opportunity to discover the transformative value of being 'taken by surprise' by their own images.

The Unfolding Self

Jessica Moore Britt & Joyce Lyke

We live in a world of mystery, wonder, and beauty. But many of us seldom participate in this real world, being aware instead of a world of strife, suffering, and meaninglessness. This situation arises from not realizing and living our full human potential. Childhood conditioning and attachment to that conditioning is one way that our potential gets stuck.

This week is for participants who have been working on themselves and would like to delve further into the relationship between their emotional work and spiritual practice. Using self-remembering exercises, meditation, and individual Reichian/gestalt work, they will inquire into what it means to allow and commit to the unfoldment of the self.

Stepping Into Power

Dawn Callan & Stephanie Mines

This self-defense and awareness program attunes women and men to their innate power and helps them guide that power into decisive action. Integrating movement with thinking, feeling, and sensing, participants will practice simple and effective techniques that embody the basic right of self-protection and support them in breaking through personal barriers (old habits, limiting beliefs, fears, unconscious patterns). This workshop offers an opportunity for healing core issues as well as the polarity and adversarial beliefs between women and men. It culminates in a demonstration of individual empowerment.

This integration of self-defense and self-awareness is designed for individuals committed to achieving new levels of mastery and excellence in their personal and professional lives.

On Being a Man

David Schiffman

Many men today have sought to honor and embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result of this emphasis, the right to celebrate and honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man's sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own natures which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood, and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and goodwill, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the "wild man" within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

A variety of experiential processes will illuminate these and similar issues. Traditional initiation rituals and purification ceremonies using drumming, changing, and a sweat lodge will be incorporated in this journey as well. $675

Creating Exact Moments of Healing

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, life-long commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for the necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of chronic trauma;
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries;
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation and toward stability and abundance;
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and body work. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals who work with ACAs. Please bring a mirror and photographs of yourself at all ages.

Weekend of February 14–16

Keeping a Good Relationship Alive

Gerald Smith

This workshop will focus on a major dilemma in keeping a good relationship alive. That is: how to be close and vulnerable as partners yet separate and free to grow as individuals. This dilemma is never resolved because each partner continues to change, but it can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship.

Much of participants' time during this weekend will be with their partners separate from other couples. Verbal, non-verbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection will be used, as will skills at resolving differences in ways that do not produce "scar tissue." And, since playing is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be experiences to kindle the imagination and the willingness to play together. Limited to 12 couples. $350 per participant

Eleanor Criswell Hanna

This workshop will explore the neuromuscular responses to emotional states — the somatics way to internal mastery of muscles and emotions — and the joy that comes with the body's renewed awareness and freedom. Guided somatic exercises and individual sessions with practitioners trained by Thomas Hanna will give participants the opportunity to experience this wonderful work.

The Psychotherapist as Shaman: Methods for Madness

Joan Halifax

In many indigenous cultures across the world, the shaman has functioned as healer and therapist in the physical, psychological, intellectual, transpersonal, social, and environmental domains. During this weekend, anthropologist Joan Halifax will look into the traditions of shamanism for those practices and methods possibly relevant for use in contemporary psychotherapy. Included will be the function of art in personal, social, and environmental healing; the role of ritual in individual and community process; the use of entheogens in psychophysical transformation; and the relationship of the natural environment (as reality and metaphor) to the healing process. This program includes experiential practices, teachings, and discussion. $350

The Open Space: Poetry and Authenticity

Norman Friedman

When is a poem the expression of feeling, and when is it an avoidance? How can we tell he difference, and what difference does it make? We seek that open space where poetry frees us to re-make ourselves, and we return to the world integrating that freedom into our daily lives. For this to take place, what the poet feels must be shaped so as to evoke that feeling in us. Keats said that truth is not truth until it is tested on our pulses. Craft, discipline, and training are the means, but sometimes the enabling letter can kill the life-giving spirit.

We will examine a number of poems, classics of various times and places, to find and experience how we in our time, and others in theirs, confronted the same dilemma. And we will encourage — through readings, mini-lectures and discussion, fantasy and experiment — the re-creation of that open space in this workshop. $350

Vimala Rodgers

Our handwriting is the result of intricate neuromuscular connections that express on paper both the conscious and unconscious aspects of our established behavior patterns. Each time we move the pen across the page we not only reflect these patterns, we reinforce them. Slant, spacing, margins, pressure, loops, angles, size, letter formations, and zonal relationships: each of these factors is significant and combines with countless other writing patterns to make a clear statement of the attitudes with which we greet and react to life situations.

This weekend will be spent in an active, step-by-step exploration of the components of handwriting as they mirror aspects of the personality. For those participants who wish to consider making specific alterations in personal writing patterns, the workshop will allow time to work on specific strokes (supported by repetitive practice) as a means of instilling new brain/hand patterns. Time will also be given to inner child work.

This workshop is for the person who is engaged in a journey of self-exploration as well as for counselors, teaches, parents, ministers, health care practitioners, and other professionals who deal with self-esteem issues and the well-being of others.

Cross-Cultural Shamanic Practices

Angeles Arrien

Participants of this workshop will be introduced to shamanic tools from diverse cultures in order to access and empower their inner teacher, healer, visionary, and warrior. The universal healing selves of singing, storytelling, dancing, and silence will be engaged to rekindle the spirit and retrieve any soul loss.

Group members will work individually and collectively to: honor ancestor spirits by releasing limiting family patterns; enhance personal and professional power by speaking with "spirit tongue" (truth-telling); and experience shamanic practices that reveal internal mythology, help heal wounds, and adjust imbalances.

This week qualifies as a Foundational Training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien. $675

Sports Massage

David Streeter

This workshop will focus on aspects of sports massage that prove useful in other massage modalities. The curriculum includes: study of anatomy, to understand the rhythmic coordination of muscles working together; cross-fiber or cross-friction massage, simple strokes that promote healthy muscle tissue; and trigger point massage, to locate and relieve sensitive and congested points in muscle bundles and tendons. Trigger point work has proven beneficial in reducing myofascial pain caused by chronic tension.

In these five days, participants will progress through a study of the entire musculoskeletal system via brief lectures, hands-on practice, and one-to-one instruction. This workshop takes a simplified approach to what is usually a complex subject and gives students a better idea of just what lies beneath their hands, and how to more effectively communicate with the human body. It is open to all levels.

Life Stories: Healing the Sorrows

Peter Finkelstein

Painful experience is one of life's givens. However, whether we are discussing the inevitable existential concerns of aloneness, freedom, or death, or the personal tragedies of divorce or untimely loss, it is the manner in which we give form to our painful stories that defines our personal development. The attention we give to the ongoing creation of our own story can help us broaden our sources of satisfaction, concentrate our energies productively, and recognize life's wisdom in its many forms.

Participants will use group exercises and individual work to help them acknowledge and integrate painful life experiences such as divorce and bereavement. Dream interpretation, hypnosis, didactic material, and attention to group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Blocks to the successful completion of healing will be explored.

The Lover's Journey: A Quest for the Inner Man and Woman

Paul Rebillot & Melissa Kay

The leaders write: "It is difficult to relate to other people fully and clearly as long as we remain unaware of our own inner process. What role do we play with ourselves and others? Do these enhance or inhibit our ability to make contact? How do we feel about our sexual identity, our shadow, and our inner opposite selves?

"The Lover's Journey is not a couples' workshop; it is a journey into the depths of our individual process to discover how we love. It is based on the concept of the alchemical marriage, the owning and uniting of the masculine and feminine archetypes. We will enact four aspects of ourselves — the negative and positive man and the negative and positive woman — in order to see when we are being authentic with others and when we are not. We will then create a ritual of joining these four aspects together, which must live within us if we are to be whole.

"It is possible to experience the humor as well as the profundity of these images by bringing them into contact with the other members of the group. By playing them out and having fun with them, they become optional rather than obligatory. And, by accepting and embracing these polarities, we open the door to fuller, more satisfying contact with others and with ourselves." $675

Andrew Weil

Every human body has systems of self-repair and healing. Whatever your genetic inheritance, whatever your past history of illness, you can learn to move toward optimum health and wellness by learning to use the natural resources of your body and mind. How you eat, drink, exercise, think, visualize, work, play, and deal with stress all influence the efficiency of your internal healer. Conventional doctors often "hex" patients by conveying their own pessimism about illness and their own lack of faith in self-healing. Wellness-oriented doctors are able to undo this negative magic by teaching people to believe in and work with their natural healing powers.

In this workshop, participants will make some meals together in the course of learning the latest ideas about diet and health. We will exercise and relax together, learn how to breathe, and discuss simple natural remedies for common ailments. We will also look at the strength and weaknesses of various systems of treatment. After completing this workshop participants will hopefully have gained more confidence in their ability to manifest health and wellness in their lives.

Private sessions will be available by arrangement.

Psychological Implications of Symbols: The Tarot

Angeles Arrien & James Wanless

The tarot is an ancient book of wisdom that visually captures possible internal and external experiences that individuals can have. Participants in this weekend workshop will have the opportunity of seeing multiple ways symbols can be practically used as guides and clarifiers for life issues.

This workshop is structured to meet the needs of participants at any level of experience or inexperience they may have with tarot. $350

Healing the Healer: A Workshop for Helping Professionals

Peter Finkelstein

Working in the field of health care brings the practitioner into contact with sorrow and death. And although health care professionals accumulate great emotional burdens, many do not pay enough attention to staying whole, integrated, and non-depressed while doing this work. Often, in fact, institutional arrangements foster the opposite: isolation, dehumanization, withdrawal. Hence, it remains for the practitioner to find a personal approach in which to process sorrow, frustration, and fear, both wisely and well.

The heart of this workshop will be the telling of stories from the world of health care. Each participant will have the opportunity to share an event from their practice, one that deeply moved them, and receive feedback from the group. Through such telling we can reveal and heal those sometimes invisible wounds that interfere with our own growth and ability to continue helping others. Dream interpretation, didactic material, and group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Special attention will be given to creating a setting of trust.

A Modern Shamanic Initiation

Richard Yensen Pérez-Venero & Donna Dryer Pérez-Venero

This workshop explores shamanic tradition as a means for self-healing and spiritual growth. Through music, art imagery, visualization, breath and body work, participants will travel through altered states of consciousness to a source of healing and meaning within themselves. Shamanic cultures call this realm the world of the spirit, where we can find true power and the ability to bring an open heart to our life's path.

Participants will study maps of consciousness drawn from research in psychedelics, from archetypal themes of death and rebirth, and from shamanism. Experiential sessions will combine modern technology, ancient ritual, and specially developed media portrayals of the transformative journey.

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will be to enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder and meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and movement are one." $675

Elliot Waker Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg

Disorganization is a natural part of transition and facilitates reorganization. People are almost constantly in a state of transition — whether it be getting married, beginning a new career, becoming a parent, letting go of a relationship, or moving on to the next stage in the life cycle. These changes can be exciting and, at the same time, can evoke a loss of internal balance. The result can be loss of self-esteem, confusion about one's identity, and doubts about one's perceptions. New feelings and ideas are fragile during these periods of transition and require special nurturance.

The goal of this workshop is to gain perspective on the process of making transitions. Through guided fantasies, self-exploration, and didactic presentations, participants may develop ways of enhancing their understanding of themselves and increasing their overall effectiveness.

The Path of Transformation in Psychotherapy and Meditation

Daniel Brown

This workshop is designed for psychotherapists, practitioners of meditation, and those interested in the integration of the worlds of psychotherapy and spirituality. The leader will present an integrated model for the path of transformation, for the development of emotional experience, the sense of self and others, and reality sense. This model of normal, pathological, and optimal human development is drawn from the fields of child development, clinical psychology, and the great Eastern traditions of meditation.

This workshop will show how the path of meditation unfolds and will present a vision of optimal human development. It will also help participants learn to assess and treat different types of problems (clinical symptoms and meditation crises) which occur at various points along the overall developmental continuum. The workshop will address how psychotherapy can be used as a way to attain some of the necessary prerequisites for spiritual development and can assist with the problems that occur for the meditation practitioner and meditation teacher. It will also show how spiritual awareness can inform one's view of psychotherapy. Various experiential exercises and meditation practices will be used along with clinical case material. The workshop will be both experiential and didactic.

Much of the material will be drawn from the leader's experience as a clinician and teacher, and from his eighteen years of practicing meditation, translating meditation texts from Sanskrit and Tibetan sources, and conducting scientific studies on deep meditation states and enlightenment on meditation masters in this country and in South Asia.

Finding Inspired Work in Mid-Life

Peller Marion

At 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people don't live to be 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them largely because their lives seem effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to the kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop, drawing from a conceptual base of adult development theory and models of aging, will explore these issues. Through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, What's my dissatisfaction? Who am I? What's my definition of success? The leader will help participants create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that he/she feels are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain clarity, focus, and direction in one's life contributions. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you — singing. $350

Interspecies Touch and Healing

Linda Tellington-Jones

This course will provide hands-on practice of the Tellington Touch, a method which has been used successfully for healing and communicating with an intriguing variety of animals. Tellington Touch can release tension, fear, and pain, and enhance cellular function and overall well-being. The benefits to the toucher are as great as to the touched.

Participants will learn how to use this method to treat shock, to release chronic and acute pain, and to alleviate allergies in both humans and animals. Eleven "touches" will be taught, with participants practicing on each other and working with live animals in the Gazebo. $350

Daniel Brown & Marushka Glissen

This workshop is for couples who want to improve their communication skills and increase their understanding of each other. Ways for resolving conflict and practical methods for becoming self-assertive and self-transcending in a partnership will be taught. Some of the work will address how the family of origin and past conditioning contribute to the bonding as well as the conflicts. Time will also be spent on how to find satisfaction, mutual support, relaxation, solitude, and play in day-to-day living as partners. Helping couples discover the wider purpose of being together through a sharing of values, love, and perhaps a spiritual vision will be emphasized. $350

Cosmic Conspiracy: A Game of Enlightenment

Robert Anton Wilson

Robert Anton Wilson writes: "Based on my psychological works and science-fantasy novels, this Game may shake the foundations of your world. When you enter the portals of Chapel Perilous, you will be given a deceptive Cover Story and a Real Identity — which is also fiction and exists only for the duration of the Game (if you're lucky). Thus, every participant is a liar — and you can't be too sure about the leader either. In regular sessions, I will lecture on such concepts as the presentation of the self in everyday life, the social creation of reality, the Game element in behavior, but between sessions you will have to deal with these abstract concepts in very concrete ways as spies, criminals, government agents, and extraterrestrials, as Cosmic Forces of Good and Evil attempt to lure you into their plots and counter-plots. "Can you find the Maltese Falcon before any other player? Is some clever villain among you using the Game as a front to deal drugs or to brainwash other players? Will you spot the CIA assassin before you're 'killed' and removed from the Game? If you do get 'killed,' what will happen in Rebirthing, before you can enter the Game with a new Ego? As you deal with these increasingly urgent questions, you will also have to decide if this "Game' is teaching you social psychology, mysticism, agnosticism, paranoia, or if it's 'just a Game' after all.

"Warning: the Attorney General has determined that this Game may be hazardous to your dogma." $350

Achieving Maximum Performance

James Loehr

For the past 15 years James Loehr has worked with junior world-class and professional tennis players, including Gabriela Sabatini and Martina Navratilova. His method of performance training has been strongly influenced by Irv Dardik, a cardiovascular surgeon and former chairman of the United States Olympic Committee on Sports Medicine. Loehr blends his approach to such issues as motivation, concentration, peak performance, ideal performance state, flow, and stress with Dardik's cardiocybernetic model.

During the weekend Loehr will demonstrate his training system for achieving maximum performance. His method for calculating units of stress, units of recovery and markers of overtraining will be personally explored and experienced. All participants will wear heart-rate monitors to help illumine the stress-recovery relationship. A variety of exercises will be used to evaluate personal cycles of stress (both physical and emotional) which will then be balanced by cycles of full recovery. This workshop is for anyone interested in "Toughening for Life" Training, working towards becoming stronger both physically and emotionally.

The importance, function, and timing of factors such as sleep, exercise, meals, diet, movement, breath control, rest and relaxation, laughter, fun and massage will also be discussed.

What is This Thing Called Love? Myths of Romantic Love

Madeline Nold

Why are we drawn to stories of love and loss, unrequited love, and blissfully romantic endings? What stories, fairy tales, songs, and mythologies have influenced our expectations? This workshop is about all kinds of love, stressing what does and does not work in love relationships. There will be a lecture with slides that explore myths of romantic love exemplified in Eastern and Western mythology. We will focus on topics that include:

- Our expectations of love
- What draws us to our partners
- How we seek to fill needs left unmet from childhood
- The pitfalls of repeating destructive family patterns of loving
- Healing false expectations

Through gestalt, movement, and other expressive work, participants will draw on their personal lives, experiencing their stories juxtaposed against the panorama of literature and myth. What would it mean to exist as healthy individuals, coming together to share love without the projections of unfulfilled childhood needs? $675

Shamanic Arts

Elisa Lodge & James Wanless

Shamans transmit to their people in sign, song, and dance the nature of the cosmic geography.
— Joan Halifax

Shamanism is a healing path of transformation through the expressive arts. In the symbolic art of personal expression, the shaman is liberated and recreated.

Participants will experience the shaman's way by making their own oracle; writing their myth and storytelling; acting out the sacred actor within; finding their voice and soul song; dancing to the life beat; and maskmaking.

The workshop will conclude with a shamanic performance ritual, which will be videotaped for each participant. $675

Surrender and Self-Acceptance

Steven Radiloff & Phyllis Shankman

Surrender is the process of relinquishing the illusion of control. While this is happening, people often experience themselves as falling apart. In fact, this process can be a courageous act of faith, self-acceptance, and healing.

The goal of this workshop is to identify and access the openings to one's deeper self where the source of the healing exists. The workshop will involve group process, light body work, awareness and breathing exercises, music, movement, meditation, and supportive discussion.

Reversing and Preventing Heart Disease: A Model for Personal Transformation

Dean Ornish

This workshop will teach participants ways in which to reduce cholesterol and blood pressure and how to begin reversing coronary heart disease. For the past fourteen years, physician Dean Ornish has conducted three research studies demonstrating, for the first time, that a comprehensive life-style program (yoga, meditation, imagery, diet, smoking cessation, exercise, and group psychotherapy) can produce extraordinary improvements without medications. This workshop will include lectures that review the research data and explain why life-style affects the heart and will provide experiential training in the life-style program.

Illness can serve as a catalyst for personal transformation and growth, motivating a person to ask, "Why did I get sick? What are the causes?" What we eat, how we respond to stress, and other aspects of life-style are powerful determinants of health and disease. It is also known that feelings of isolation can lead to psychological stress and ultimately to illness, whereas feelings of intimacy can lead to healing.

Because the technology for measuring coronary heart disease is so advanced, heart disease is an excellent model for measuring the power of life-style changes to help heal — and prevent — heart disease.

Noble Visions: Living a Committed Life

Bill Puka

This seminar is designed to affirm and enhance participants' commitments to high ideals, toward living inspired lives as inspiring people. It will look at ethical visions and ethical visionaries. Participants will reflect on the components of respecting and appreciating each other, of loving and caring. They will consider ways of practicing these arts more gracefully, drawing from humanistic counseling methods, yogic meditation, and the psychological research of Kohlberg and Gilligan on moral development and gender outlook. They will also consider the creative use of moral perception and imagination evolved by various spiritual traditions. In so doing, they will compose ethics-for-living that are self-expanding, spiritual, and aesthetic rather than judgmental and duty-bound, ethics which show a sense of wisdom and perspective and express the good will they prescribe. Participants will also seek ethics which can solve concrete problems and use them to take up moral dilemmas members of the group may be facing.

A main theme will be how to align psychological growth and career progress with personal integrity, interpersonal responsiveness, and active social concern. $350

Tantra: The Art of Conscious Loving

Charles Muir & Caroline Muir

Few of us have been blessed with healthy childhood conditioning and education regarding the mysteries of sexual love and sexual energy. This can leave many individuals less aware and conscious about their sexuality than they are in other aspects of their lives.

Tantra can transform sex into a loving meditation, putting more consciousness, energy, intimacy, joy, and love into sexual exchanges.

Participants will learn and discuss various ways to increase intimacy and passion in their relationship. Tantric meditation and ways to exchange sexual energy in a safe, non-sexual manner will also be taught in the workshop. These methods can then be practiced in a sexual way in the privacy of your own home. This workshop is open to couples only.

Live music will be provided by Michael Stillwater. $675 per participant

Meditation: The Living Dance

David Streeter

The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation. This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way.

In our retreat atmosphere we will prepare the body-mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. We will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama), and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a silent listening hike in the wilderness, group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery, and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life, and that crystal-clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

Embodied Gestalt Practice: Body and Soul

Edward Smith

Gestalt practice focuses on personal process as it unfolds moment to moment in the here-and-now. The value is on awareness, actuality, and personal responsibility. As a path of growth, Embodied Gestalt Practice integrates methods from various Eastern and Western body-oriented systems. It includes one-on-one work with the leader, group exercises, movement, meditation and other spiritual practices, and time spent in the natural environment to help foster personal and spiritual healing and growth.

A Christic Institute Seminar with Daniel Sheehan & Sara Nelson

This seminar will address needed changes in the national security state structure of America in light of the changes in world economic and military structures generated by President Gorbachev, and in light of the public revelation of General Richard Secord's private criminal covert operations enterprise.

The leaders will review evidence for criminal activities by publicly-revealed participants in the Iran/Contra scandal, but also for other high-level Reagan/Bush Administration personnel. They will discuss the thirty-year history of men who set up and direct the now infamous "Off-the-Shelf, Stand-Alone Enterprise," including the formation of alliances with major heroin traffickers in Southeast Asia, organized crime figures in Florida, Las Vegas, and New Orleans, and more recently with cocaine traffickers from the famous Medellin Cocaine Cartel of Columbia.

A. RAJA HORNSTEIN

Based upon this review, the leaders will detail concrete organizing and education steps which must be undertaken to dismantle this covert national security state apparatus and to open the way for ushering in a new era of international peace and cooperation at the beginning of the twenty-first century based upon a spiritually-informed, yet politically-sophisticated, ethical base. $350

Participants will reenact many of Campbell's teachings through rituals, myths, and stories. The workshop will also combine Tai Ji, music, and discussion to allow the individual to enter and reflect upon his or her own "hero's journey."

Embodiment and Vision

Laura DeNuccio

The perception of wholeness is the consciousness of healing. — Ernest Holmes

Laura DeNuccio writes: "This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

"Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Learning to listen from within can lead back to the ancient wisdom of the Earth — returning us to our sacredness and wholeness. Participants will use breath, sound, and movement as meditations for enlivening the vitality of cells and tissue, for dissolving energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind. The sound meditations have the potential of moving the individual past the limitations of language, creating openings for new thought and inspiration. The emphasis will be on self-care, renewal, and nourishment.

"The group will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one's inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What is meaningful and significant to you? What's truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth. While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group can experiment with co-creating community, an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore this ever-unfolding adventure of spirit."

Yoga Works: Tools for Well-Being

Chuck Miller & Maty Ezraty

Yoga is an ancient system that uses the body, breath, and mind to energize and transform all aspects of living. It is not only an excellent source of physical exercise, but a unique and powerful tool for self-realization. The practice of yoga can help release blocks that cause mental and physical pain and prevent us from knowing our true divine nature. It is also a great way of dealing with the stress of daily living.

The invigorating and vitalizing effects of yoga become readily apparent as the body opens and stretches. Breath is the link between mind and body, and various breathing methods will be taught to help reduce tension and cleanse the system. The serenity and clarity that is the goal of yoga will be sought through meditation exercises, which can calm and focus the mind. Yoga philosophy and theory will be discussed, as well as nutrition and its role in overall physical health.

All levels are welcome and no prior experience is required, only an adventurous spirit. For further information contact the leaders at (213) 393-5150. $350

Body Work Intensive: Strategies for Healing Post Trauma Stress

Carolyn Braddock & Char Pias Brenner

During sexual abuse/assault, the body is the scene of the crime. For that reason, survivors often utilize massage and other forms of body work as part of their healing process. When a body worker places his or her hands on a survivor, memories begin to flood in, or body sensations may become blocked.

This workshop will explore specific strategies for working with post trauma stress, particularly sexual abuse/assault survivors. It will be oriented toward massage practitioners, body workers, medical professionals, and anyone interested in learning more about specific body-oriented intervention. Particular attention will be paid to body-oriented intervention strategies that do not re-victimize the survivor.

In working with sexual abuse survivors, sensitivity to the many dimensions of communication is critical; communication must be clear, with an awareness of the power and effect of words. Also important are boundary issues, intuitive knowing and seeing, being present, and a special sensitivity to the risks the client feels in being touched. Emphasis will be placed on establishing safety, choice, control, and trust in the practitioner/client relationship. Awareness of the survivor's breath patterns, dissociation responses, flashbacks, body sensations, energy blocks, and difficulty accepting the positive will be discussed, as will possible legal issues that may arise. Much of the weekend will be experiential.

Dialogue on the Observation of Consciousness

David Shainberg

From his discussions and association with J. Krishnamurti and David Bohm, David Shainberg has developed and conducted dialogue groups for many years. The purpose of these groups is to enable people to see the isolation caused by their particular notions of self. Through group process and discussion it is possible to become aware of the patterns that restrict the mind's freedom to explore various levels of thought and perspective.

Participants will discuss how consciousness manifests its fixations, and how we keep ourselves from direct participation in the movement of the moment. Discussions will focus on how the self becomes caught-up in particular ideas or images, how violence arises, and what it says about consciousness. If the world is to experience a fundamental transformation of consciousness, we must become aware of the contents of our own mind and how, in its fundamental nature, it reflects the consciousness of humankind. $350

Rituals of Transformation

Paul Rebillot & Audrey Savage

People are continually approaching threshold, transition points from one state or condition of being to another. To live is to change. The tendency, however, is to resist change, to cling to the familiar, to remain stuck at the threshold. This tendency is the source of much stress and pain that people experience in life.

A ritual does not make a change happen: rather, it awakens within the psyche the archetypal pattern of change, it teaches the participant how to change. By acting out the ritual, people learn, not only in their minds but in the feelings of their hearts and the movements of their bodies as well, the process of transformation. Rituals can both prepare people for change as it happens in the course of their lives, and help heal the passages that were not completed in the past.

During this workshop, the group members will look at what they want to heal and transform in their lives, what they need to say good-bye to in the past, and what new step they need to take in order to cross their present threshold. Sub-groups will work together to design and enact individual rituals in order to support and help this healing process.

Just as the body can move from one position into another, so can the full being: hearts can move, minds can move. The basic tenet of the ritual is that one can trust the body to show the appropriate path, that way so supported by the full being that doors seem to open before one. Joseph Campbell said that when someone can discover his or her authentic path, this way seems to be blessed by magic. To find this way is the work of the Rituals of Transformation. $350

Play, Spontaneity, and Performance Art

Nina Wise

This is a workshop for participants to enliven their relationship to play; to rekindle spontaneity in relationships; to recognize the sacred in the mundane; to make rituals, songs, and dances out of everyday experiences; to find humor in matters of the heart; to understand that improvisation is a way of life.

Sessions will include sitting meditation, chanting, a thorough physical warm-up, opening the voice, and exercises designed to integrate sound and movement. Participants will also have opportunities for developing technical performance skills, but the focus of the week will be improvisational expression of impulses, feelings, and ideas as they arise moment to moment.

This workshop is open to students of all levels, beginner as well as professional. $675

Sexual Abuse Survivors: Specific Strategies for Body, Mind and Spiritual Recovery

Carolyn Braddock

Countless numbers of children consider the exploitation of their bodies part of their formative experience. Trusted adults assault, neglect, and sexually abuse them, leaving physical and emotional scars. Professional counselors and others need special skills to work with these victims/survivors, and the survivors themselves need special skills to overcome the physical and emotional consequences of being abused.

The primary focus of this workshop will be to empower the practitioner and the client to work from both cognitive and body-oriented approaches. It will offer a new body-focused dimension to traditional strategies in dealing with sexual abuse. Participants will discuss the victim/survivors' body, mind, and belief systems. The importance of understanding the various dimensions of a persons' reactions — especially body reactions — to sexual abuse is the key to developing predictive tools and guidance for the intervention process.

The leader will present specific intervention strategies and will detail patterns of child abuse and neglect, family dynamics, and body reactions. Much of the week will be experiential. Participants will be actively involved in intervention demonstrations, discussions of ethical issues, and case presentations. Breath work, sound, movement, gestalt, body work, Tai Ji, role-playing, and creative cognitive work will also be used.

Owning the Shadow

Paul Rebillot & Audrey Savage

We have met the enemy and they is us. — Pogo, Walt Kelley

Paul Rebillot writes: "In my work I have come to realize that one of the most important and frequently avoided themes in people's lives is the ability to own the part of themselves they don't like, the part Jung called the shadow. As a result, people become projectors of their own disowned energy. In this workshop, participants will seek to discover within themselves the bad guy they have been projecting onto and hating in others. Hopefully, by facing and communicating with this negative self, they can discover in their shadow not the enemy, but the friend and challenger to growth of the heart and consciousness." $675

Expanding Self-Expression

Paula Shaw

When we find ourselves around a group of people, many of us become inhibited. Whether we know them or not, our sense of freedom and intimacy, and the confidence to be ourselves, simply disappears — and we disappear in the process. What happens to our sense of self and the integrity of our communication ability? Why is it so difficult to express who we really are?

This workshop will explore these issues and provide a safe space to experience the feelings and fears that keep us inhibited. We will experiment with personal risk-taking in a way that makes it exciting, challenging, and appealing. Our goal will be to unlock ourselves in order to find clarity and joy in our self-expression with others. Acting and creative communication games, physical and vocal exercises, and individual and group work will be used to find our way through inhibitions to joyful self-expression. The process will also be fun and playful, so be prepared to enjoy the group! $350

Creating Time: A Rhythm for Health and Longevity

Stephan Rechtschaffen

As we constantly strive to be "on time" in our fast-paced, over-scheduled lives, we lose touch with living in the flow of time. We are a society plagued with time-sickness: caught up in the stress of running to work, home, recreation, or other responsibilities and interests, we don't seem to have time for the important things. Anxious about the future, regretful of the past, we miss the fullness of the moment.

This workshop will help participants understand their own attitudes toward time and how those attitudes affect their life-style, health, and longevity. Methods that move perception away from societal time pressures into the often unexplored territory of freedom-within-time will be introduced, along with meditation, visualization, time evaluation and planning (not scheduling).

From this vantage point participants can: explore how dysrhythmic, hurried schedules affect their relationships, work, and creativity; use their expanded sense of time to define what they really want in their lives and what their real priorities are; and enjoy the simple power and pleasure of being present in each moment.

The Extraordinary Human: Theory and Practice

Michael Murphy & George Leonard

In his new book, The Future of the Body (Tarcher, May 1992), Michael Murphy raises the possibility that by gathering data from many fields — including medical science, anthropology, sport, the arts, psychical research, and comparative religious studies — we can identify extraordinary versions of most, if not all, our basic attributes. Murphy's research has shown that the most reliable path toward the realization of these extraordinary attributes involves transformative practice. He defines such practice as a coherent set of activities designed to produce positive change in a person or group. For a practice to be integral as well, it must aim to cultivate the physical, vital, cognitive, volitional, affective, and transpersonal dimension of human functioning in an integrated way. Leonard Energy Training (LET), was developed by George Leonard as an integral transformative practice.

Michael Murphy will discuss the twelve aspects of human functioning outlined in The Future of the Body: perception of external events, somatic awareness, communication abilities, vitality, movement abilities, capacities to manipulate the environment directly, feelings of pain and pleasure, cognition, volition, sense of self, love, and bodily structure. George Leonard will lead participants in practical exercises that illustrate the possibility of extraordinary human functioning. There will also be discussion of the applications of integral transformative practice to society at large.

At Play in the Overlap: Moving Through Life's Transitions

Heather Maycock Ogilvy & Peter Finkelstein

As infants and children we create a self in the overlap between our inner reality (the physical, whimsical givens of being born into the world) and our outer reality (the external circumstances which present themselves to us). We do this exquisite creation through play: trying things on and putting them aside, tasting and spitting out, building, knocking down, and re-doing. This space of play remains available to us as we recreate ourselves as adults through life's transitions.

This experiential/didactic workshop is designed for psychotherapists, nurses, physicians and others who work with people in transition. It can also be useful for people making changes in their own lives, whether in response to a loss such as the death of a loved one, illness, divorce, or in preparation for a gain such as new work or new love. Understanding the losses and gains in any change, taking time to "re-play" both deepens and lightens the transition, and unfolds its opportunities. Dreams, fairy tales, dancing and drawing, hunting for rocks, individual and group work are some of the means we will use to work towards this goal.

Participants are encouraged to bring a small object which has personal meaning and a tape of beloved music.

Weekend of April 10–12

Performance Art

Rachel Rosenthal

Rachel Rosenthal offers a workshop that explores performance as a means of accessing one's deeper self and for reconnecting with the earth. It is based on her "Doing by Doing" teachings, a framework that activates the spiritual self through the medium of performance by uniting ritual with spirit and nature with inner knowledge.

Participants will approach the source of their individual creativity and translate this energy into the poetics of action through movement, vocal and instrumental sound, ritualized gesture, and collective improvisation. Through a succession of processes — relaxation, awareness, guided imagery, body and voice work — they will compose short performance pieces as solos, duets, or ensembles to evoke the power and beauty of the earth and to reconnect themselves to the matrix of the planet.

This work explores individual expression as well as group ritual and demonstrates how contemporary urban human beings can still discover community. Participants are encouraged to bring musical instruments, soundmakers, and any object, fabric, mask, or hat that they wish to work with or make available to the group. Found objects will also be used. $350

Courage

Joyce Frazee

In the mouth of the dragon there are many jewels. — Buddhist proverb

For some of us it takes courage just to live our daily lives. Every day we awake to face the demons in our lives — demons that come in many forms: perfectionism, guilt, avoidance, shame, despair, failure. Time passes and we become skillful in living despite the constant awareness that these demons are preventing us from experiencing the fullness of life. Their existence drains our energy and limits our joy and freedom. But getting close to them, allowing ourselves to confront them, is very difficult to do.

This weekend will give us an opportunity to find the courage to face our demons. Participants will be encouraged to look at the things in their life that are difficult to face, and will be given support to help recognize and confront them. This will be done through gestalt practice, dream work, and bioenergetics. Drawing, dance, and meditation will also be used to recover the jewels from the dragon. $350

Creative Writing Brainstorming

Herbert Gold

From feeling to expression to communication, this workshop will carry participants into the possibilities of making literature. Exploring an experience different for everyone, yet shared by all, they will probe for the riches within.

Participants should bring typewriter, word processor, pen, soft pencil, or clay tablets and stylus to the meetings. A situation will be called forth — love, death, ambition, pride, fear, hatred, jealousy — and after preparation in the discussion, participants will write. Then they will read and rewrite each other's work. They may expect to go from truth to lying: from recollection to art.

What may develop is a sense of style and control as a part of the mastery of experience. Participants will practice the freedom of imagination by giving shape to it. $350

Week of April 12–17

Inner Drama Outer Play: A Week of Dreamwork and Theater Games

Joyce Frazee & Paula Shaw

Human beings are innately creative. The images, metaphors, and language of dreams are proof of our creative abilities, even on the unconscious level. And with awareness, creative riches are available to all of us in every aspect of our life.

Through the exploration of dreams and theatrical forms, participants will discover their ability to express themselves creatively. Such expression helps to develop deeper personal connections with our artistic nature, and the ability to empathize and communicate with each other.

The week will include exercises in sound, movement, dream recall, drawing, and theater games. The workshop combines the skills of Joyce Frazee, a dream analyst, and Paula Shaw, an actress and teacher, to offer an in-depth glimpse of our own creative beauty both inside and out. $675

Modalities of Pressure Point Release: Integrating Pressure Point Systems

Arthur Munyer & Laurie Lioness Parizek

This workshop addresses those health care workers, doctors, nurses, chiropractors, and body workers interested in using pressure point systems as a way to release and integrate the body's dynamic energies.

Acupressure, trigger point therapy, polarities, and meridian relationships will be explored and discussed in an experiential setting. Demonstrations will explore these topics individually, and we will work with the overlapping and integrative potential of these effective ways of balancing the body. A fluid body work style will be used to integrate this work.

Emphasis will be placed on strengthening our own inner balance and health during this time together. The study and practice of good nutrition, meditation, and a composite of Eastern and Western health and longevity practices will be introduced.

Socratic Midwifery: Uncovering Beliefs that Block Human Excellence

Pierre Grimes

Pierre Grimes will discuss the Socratic art of philosophical midwifery and show how it addresses a new class of human problems: the pathologos. A pathologos is a false belief about oneself and one's reality, and although its presence is unsuspected, it is unquestioningly accepted as true. It exerts a pervasive influence upon our lives and is irreconcilable with the attainment of our highest goals. It produces the sense of being bound by our past and renders us unable to secure our profoundest ideas. The influence of the pathologos pervades and distorts the waking world but in our dreams it is presented purely, without compromise, or distortion. For the dream holds up a mirror in which we can study the state of our mind. Philosophic midwifery provides a method for discovering the origin, maintenance, and dissolution of the pathologos which functions behind and through our problems, and offers a new way of understanding the function of the mind.

This workshop will offer participants insights into the nature of their own pathologos — in the waking world and the dream world — and an understanding of how it is passed on by each generation. It will explore family dynamics and how to cultivate excellence in the family.

Philosophical midwifery is unlike the interpretive systems of psychology. Even though a mode of Socratic dialectic has been adapted by psychologists for clinical practice (called Dialectical Rational Psychotherapy), its more profound use is for those who seek to achieve the most significant goal of human excellence: to know thyself.

Selections from Pierre Grimes's book Philosophical Midwifery as a Mode of Rational Psychotherapy and its Validation, will be available to participants, as well as his computer program, To Artemis: The Challenge to Know Thyself. $675

To make effective, creative choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

In this week, participants will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Healthy Eating

Jane Miletich, Grace Stern Swanson & Robert Swanson

One of life's important decisions is choosing what we put in our bodies. But what is the optimum dietary program? There is special interest research to support almost any position. What we don't know is monumental, but evidence suggests that holding on to cultural dietary habits and myths may be hazardous to our health.

In this workshop we will practice dietary methods designed to cleanse the system and allow each individual to make clear, responsible choices about what to eat. Our food is harvested from the Esalen farm and other local organic farms, and delivered daily to our specially designed kitchen, where we will practice a "gourmet" approach to health. Join in on the harvesting and get hands-on experience preparing cooked and raw food dishes in a variety of ways. Fasting and various dietary preferences such a macrobiotic, living foods, and Ayurveda will be discussed and explored.

The beauty of the Big House will set the stage for a culinary celebration.

A Workshop for Couples: Independence and Intimacy

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, "There is room for both of us." Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs.

In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken expectations they project onto each other, heal past hurts that create distance, and learn new ways of communicating. They will have a supportive environment where they can experience themselves as courageous and able to take risks. Experiential processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation. $675

The Unfolding Moment: The Experience of Inner Freedom

Stephen Schoen

Our lives are folded in. We have created for ourselves a space intended for safety but hampered by confinement. This workshop offers a place for safe unfolding, respectful of the limits we are used to, but encouraging attention to those unconfined experiences which are always with us and to which we can develop a steadier access. Martin Buber's I-Tho, Lao Tzu's wu-wei or yielding, Gregory Bateson's contextual being, and Krishnamurti's unconditioned awareness illuminate this change from the limited to the limitless. Their ideas will right our way. Our actual path toward inner freedom will be shaped by our own experiencing.

Recommended reading: Buber, I and Thou, Part I, R.G. Smith, tr., (Scribner); Lao Tzu, Tao Te Ching, Gia-Fu Fend, tr., (Vintage); Bateson, Steps to an Ecology of Mind, chap. Hypnotic Innovations: Investigations in Living, Using Ericksonian Hypnosis

Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

In the moment before a new idea unfolds, our attention becomes so fully focused that time seems to disappear. Perhaps without quite realizing it, we forget where we are and what's around us. These spontaneous states are the stuff out of which hypnotic experience unfolds and through which unconscious possibilities take form.

In this workshop, participants will investigate the hypnotic approaches developed by Milton Erickson and the systemic principles generated from Gregory Bateson's research in communication. They will explore how unconscious processes can be mobilized to creatively disrupt limiting life patterns, to organize innovative behaviors outside the range of normal conscious controls, and to more fully optimize their current living and work situations. Structured trance experiments and discussion will support the week's work.

This workshop may be of special interest to those in the helping professions as well as managers who want to expand their frames of reference and extend their understanding of Ericksonian hypnosis and communication skills. $675

Sensory Awareness: Awake, Tune-In, and Unfold

Charlotte Selver

Some forty years ago Charlotte Selver's teacher, Elsa Gindler, began exploring the natural potential of the human being. The work which evolved from these explorations was an approach through practice, involving the person as total organism. Gindler's innovative methods very often unearthed, liberated, and cultivated abilities and sensitivities which her students had never been conscious of possessing.

To "awake" means that one's energies — neuromuscular and perceptive — become altered, leading to greater movability, both psychologically and physically, and to a fuller use of the senses and intuitive powers. In order for this to occur, a deeper peace is needed so that sensations can become clearer, and rigidities, pressures, and preconceptions can gradually dissolve. In becoming "tuned in" by another person, or by a task or given situation, one comes face to face with the creative nature of the organism, with the miracle of potency. Powers arise and come into play which correspond exactly to the demands of the occasion. This calls for permissiveness, subtle reactiveness, and openness to the moment.

The cultivation of these functions can lead to an unfolding of our lives in a far richer and more responsive way than what we are used to. Once again we can restore the delight of ever-new experiencing which was our birthright in childhood, but can be lost in the course of our education into adulthood.

Beyond Childhood

Elliot Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg

Most of us have unfulfilled longings for recognition from our parents. We harbor the feeling that if only our father had acknowledged us, had expressed more warmth and affection for us, our path would have been easier. If our mother had only loved us unconditionally, had comforted us and supported us in our feelings, our life would be more harmonious. When it seems that our parents have failed to satisfy those needs, these longings interfere with our ability to live in the moment and form satisfying relationships.

This workshop will help participants identify what is hoped for in the father/son and mother/daughter relationship, and how it can make our quest to become a man or a woman very difficult. Moving beyond parental ties and habitual disappointment can make us available to rich learning experiences from the collective unconscious. By tapping into other resources in the human experience we can transcend the limitations of our childhood.

We will use fantasy and the group process to gain insights into our personal history and myths. $350

Psyche and Cosmos

Richard Tarnas

During the ten years they worked together at Esalen, Richard Tarnas, Esalen's former director of programs, and psychologist Stanislav Grof, its scholar-in-residence, encountered an extraordinary correlation between specific planetary positions and a wide range of psychological states. Besides providing invaluable insight into both the timing and the specific archetypal character of psychological transformations, these planetary synchronicities suggested that the relationship between the cosmos and human experience was very different from that assumed in the disenchanted, mechanistic world view of conventional modern science.

In this workshop, Richard Tarnas will present both the practical applications of this research and its larger philosophical implications. Specific topics will include precise descriptions of the observed psychological and archetypal correlations; discussion of participants' birth charts and transits; instructions for calculating one's own transits; a look at major present and upcoming planetary alignments; the specific planetary correspondences with Grof's stages of birth and psychospiritual transformation; the relevance of this work to the larger tradition of depth psychology (Freud, Jung, Hillman); and an overview of the evolution of the Western mind as illumined by this recovery of the intimate relationship between the human being and the cosmos — "the return of soul to the world."

Though useful, prior background in astrology is not necessary. Participants should bring a copy of their birth chart.

Recommended reading: Epilogue to Richard Tarnas's The Passion of the Western Mind (Harmony, Random House, 1991), and any book by Stanislav Grof. $350

A Weekend with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $350

Yoga: A Week of Learning and Rejuvenation

Ganga White & Tracey Rich

Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and which combines grace and flow with postures, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the arts of enlightened living.

Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies. Through Jnana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.

Participants at all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at (805) 964-1944. $675

Nature and Contemplation

Steven Harper & Brother David Steindl-Rast

From time immemorial, nature has inspired human hearts to contemplation. Can we make this experience our own today? This week is designed to help participants experience both nature and contemplation deeply. Direct experience and contemplative reflection are the key words.

Earth under our feet on gentle hikes; water of the Pacific pounding against the shore; air of Big Sur's refreshing breezes, fire that heats Esalen's hot springs; all the elements of nature combine to touch our bodies and to raise our minds and spirits.

"Nature is never spent: there lives the dearest freshness deep down things," writes the mystic poet Gerard Manley Hopkins. To drink from that freshness, from the fountain of youth, that's what this workshop is all about. $675

Mid-Life Crisis as Spiritual Emergence

Karen Turner

Participants will view mid-life transition in the framework of spiritual emergence and renewal, a time when the old systems the individual has used as foundations seem stripped away, leaving chaos and challenging long-held beliefs. It is a time of soul-searching; of confronting both inflated and deflated self-concepts; of surrendering to deeper, more expanded states of awareness; of learning to trust inner guidance as absolute authority in one's life.

This workshop will be a rite of passage for both men and women going through this transition. Together they will have the opportunity to discover each participant's unique self, and how each is in relationship to self, each other, the world, and spirit. Tools for self-exploration and awareness gathered from psychology, mysticism, and shamanism will be presented, with time for discussion and sharing. $675

Gestalt: Elements, Innovations, Traditions

Eric Erickson & Seymour Carter

Gestalt is one of the existentialist clinical traditions that deals with the issues of separation, loss, ambiguity, and choice. In this workshop, the leaders will use gestalt methods of inquiry to draw out, clarify and help participants resolve inner conflicts. The focus will be on searching for aspects of the participant's world which seem fragmented and incomplete, and eventually combine these fragments to evoke the self-righting capacity of the human organism.

Both leaders have been long-time students of gestalt and Eastern philosophical traditions, and believe there is a strong complimentary relationship between Buddhist teachings and gestalt practice. Both practices emphasize mindful awareness as a basic tool. Much of the power of both traditions is brought forth by concentrating attention on the seeming simplicity of our moment-to-moment experience. Awareness practice from the perspectives of both gestalt practice and Buddhist meditation will be explored. $675

Enjoying Poetry

Brother David Steindl-Rast

Nature and people at Esalen help poetry come alive. So many have found this to be true that Brother David is offering a new selection of poems in the same workshop format and setting.

Poems are high-energy food for life's journey. Some of us thrive on this fare: for them, this weekend will provide the delights of a festive meal. Others have been estranged from poetry ever since high school days; they are likely to discover at this workshop rooms of their own house which they never entered before.

Why does school spoil for many young people the taste for poetry? Why does Sunday school turn so many away from religion? These two phenomena are closely related. Yet, it is never too late to discover the divine poet child within us, a child more alive than we ever dreamed or imagined. $350

Couples and Creativity

Eva Leveton

Using drawing materials, movement and drama, participants will spend a weekend playing in order to understand how couples relate and to rediscover the well-springs of spontaneity. Emphasis will be placed on reconnecting with the creative sources of relationships, teaching systems, and communication concepts. $350 per participant

Psychodrama: Exploring the Possible

Maurica Anderson

In an exchange with Freud, J.L. Moreno, the creator of psychodrama, said: "I begin where you leave off. You analyze dreams until they are dead. I give people back their dreams."

Psychodrama is an active and often humorous process which improvises life scenes as a way of identifying and expressing feelings, gaining insight and empathy, improving relationships, and developing creativity and spontaneity. In this workshop participants will have the chance to explore and experience a variety of personal decisions with the option of "choosing not to choose."

The workshop is experiential; the degree of active involvement will be up to the individual. $350

Spring Shake-up

Deborah Anne Medow

Spring is here and now is the time to get up and move and shake off some of that winter sluggishness! Renew the aliveness of your own body and see how the way you move often reflects how you feel. Become more aware of your old habits and patterns, and give yourself the opportunity to express new possibilities for change.

This weekend will combine sessions which include elements of dance, yoga, massage, aerobic movement, and theater games for shaping up the outside, with quiet, meditative time for turning inside. The purpose of the workshop: tune in and tune up your Body, Mind and Spirit! $350

The Art of Touching: The Joy of Being in Touch

Roger Grandy & Brother David Steindl-Rast

Where touching begins, there love and humanity also begin. — Ashley Montagu

Our affluent society has its own share in human hunger: the hunger for touch — no less physical, no less painful, no less dangerous than the hunger for food. This five-day workshop is for those who dare to face and own this hunger and to do something about it.

Esalen massage staff member Roger Grandy studied in Thailand and will teach a centuries-old method of body work developed by Buddhist monks. Brother David, a Christian monk, has helped many to find a healthy attitude towards the body. Together, both leaders will explore ways to overcome prejudices and inhibitions often encouraged by church and society.

Participants will explore the art of touching in its full range. The strong, gentle, healing touch of the body and the touch of a Presence beyond space and time are merely different levels of touching. In traditional Thai manner, the body work will be done on mats, with participants clothed. In this and a variety of other ways we will practice getting in touch with self, with others, with nature, with God. This will be a five-day celebration of the joy of being in touch.

Five-Day Lomi Intensive

Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff

In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality. This loss fosters suffering.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one's authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work. $675

Spirit in Nature: A Shamanic Workshop

Jo Imlay & John Broomfield

For most of our ancestors, the world was a unified, spirit-filled cosmos in which humans were bound in kinship with animals, trees, rivers, rocks, and sky. Our contemporary culture is attempting to rekindle the belief that by acknowledging the living consciousness of the earth, we have much to learn from our companions in nature.

This workshop will help participants reconnect with the earth and hear nature's voices once again. To open all the senses, time will be divided between talk and meditative silence, group activities and solo explorations, drumming and shamanic ritual.

Through discussion and videos, participants will be introduced to the spiritual bond with nature embedded in native cultures: Celtic, Himalayan, Arctic, Native American, Polynesian, Australian. These beautiful traditions teach us that everything given by the earth must be held sacred. Against this background, participants will explore their own spiritual experiences in nature and pool ideas on ways to live more lightly on the earth.

Much of the week will be spent out-of-doors in the quiet beauty of Esalen's gardens, groves, and seashore, practicing how to truly see and hear — learning to walk with reverence and joy among our brother and sister creatures. $675

Body, Heart and Soul

Paul & Niyaso Carter

This workshop explores the many aspects of sexual life, with the objective of helping to heal old wounds, unlearn restrictive programs, dissolving fears, and becoming free to appreciate your own sensual-sexual nature. The 5 days are structured as a series of initiations beginning with conception and going through childhood, puberty, adolescence, into the mature union of sexual energy and open-hearted love. The goal of the workshop will be to help bring back into your life:

- a heightened sense of well-being in your body
- a lighter and more open heart
- the ability to communicate without fear
- deeper intimacy in your relationships

When we are free to appreciate our sensual aliveness, when our sexual energy is integrated with the energy of our heart, and when we can let our bodies, hearts, and souls experience their own natural flow, true intimacy can happen in our lives. Touching this space is not only a delight, it can also transforms every aspect of our lives. $675

From the Field to the Table

Diane Joy Goodman, Jesse Cool & Esalen Garden and Farm Staff

To have a passion for exceptional food is to be concerned with the honesty and care with which it is grown and prepared. This workshop is for cooks, gardeners, food professionals, agriculturists, or anyone who loves food and gardens. The leaders include a professional cook and consultant in the field of sustainable agriculture, and co-founder of Flea St. Cafe in Menlo Park, California. Focus will be on the inherent relationship between food and its source, the connection between the character of the food you produce, and the quality of the ingredients you use. Practices that support environmentally and economically sustainable agriculture, such as growing your own food, buying locally and seasonally, and seeking out high quality organic produce, will be illuminated.

In this hands-on workshop, participants will prepare food using new ideas and techniques. They will spend time in the Esalen garden and farm, in the kitchen at the Big House, and at the table. They will create soups, salads, breads, pastas, main courses, breakfasts, sauces, condiments, desserts and sweets from Esalen's spring harvest and other local purveyors.

There will also be time for a group process in which participants can explore their individual relationships to food. At week's end they will leave with information skills, recipes, and perhaps a new vision that celebrates the natural integrity of food. $675

The Modern Warrior and the Samurai Game

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

A man or woman with outward courage dares to die;
A man or woman with inward courage dares to live. — Lao Tzu

The Modern Warrior is not one who goes to war but rather one who exhibits integrity in every aspect of living, one who seeks to attain control then act with abandon. For the Modern Warrior, life is vivid, immediate, and joyful. He or she lives each day to the full, and is fulfilled in serving others. This workshop is based on the premise that to achieve peace in the world and harmony in daily life, it might well be necessary for men and women to reown the warrior ideal.

Through the centering and movement exercises of LET (Leonard Energy Training) as well as through participation in a Samurai Game, you will be invited to get in touch with your own unacknowledged powers, and thus to discover the hidden warrior within. You will practice alternative ways of dealing with conflict and stress. Guidance will be offered on how to apply the warrior ideal to daily life. This workshop will not be physically strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Vision Painting

Helen Malcolm-Neeb

Vision painting is a process through which a personal map of the future is crafted. Each aspect of the person's life is addressed from its highest potential. Through meditation, guided visioning, and play, dreams are evoked and organized into images. The vision painting is an affirmation of the individual in professional, spiritual, and personal life.

This is an opportunity to affirm the spirit within from a place of play, creativity, and strength. The maps we create will use symbols, pictures, color and words. Beginners and artists are welcome. Create a vision of your future as you want it to be.

Buddha, Krishna and Christ

Robert McDermott

Through scriptural texts, slides and cassettes, this workshop will create visual and conceptual images of these three spiritual beings. Two of the six sessions will focus on each of these figures as depicted in three texts: Buddha in Burtt, Teachings of the Compassionate Buddha; Krishna of The Bhagavad Gita; and Christ of The Gospel of St. John. Prior reading of these sources is not essential but some familiarity with these books, or with contemporary interpreters (e.g., Thich Nhat Hanh on Buddha, Sri Aurobindo on Krishna and Rudolf Steiner on Christ) will deepen the experience of these figures and their meanings for our individual and cultural lives.

Completion

Will Schutz

Incomplete actions, be they personal or social, result in many of humankind's troubles; emotional — replaying early stuck relations; physical — chronic tension from unfinished actions; health — blood poisoning from uneliminated waste products; aging — caused by incomplete events; ecology — waste disposal problems, especially nuclear; spiritual — karma, unfinished business; education — Montessori's insistence on putting toys away; sports — the concept of the killer instinct.

What are the resistances to completion? What must happen to a self-concept to propel it toward completing cycles? These and other questions will be explored via the following concepts: theory of energy cycles, life history completion, health through imagery. $350

Change and Self-Esteem

Phyllis Shankman

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creatively if one is to sustain a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, is the aspect of self which enables one to confront resistance and fear and which increases the willingness to change and take risks.

This workshop includes an in-depth process for finding and allowing self-acceptance and for creatively confronting opportunities for change and growth. Group activities include gestalt process work, discussion, massage, meditation, music, dance, art imagery exercises, and whatever else happens spontaneously.

Golf in the Kingdom: An exploration of the Inner Game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart. — Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It can not only be experienced simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

During these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Following the Thread: Revealing the Fabric

David Silverstein & Joyce Lyke

The leaders write: "Most of us go through life ignoring, judging, or rejecting the content of our inner or unconscious life rather than paying attention to the information and messages we are giving ourselves. In our haste to be doing, we have forgotten our Being, and we have surrendered to the conditioning that limits a fuller experience of who we are.

"By attending to whatever is emerging in the moment, with interest and curiosity, we can begin to follow the thread of our inner life, detach ourselves from our conditioned responses, and perhaps discover that which is most essential, the fabric of our Being.

"The purpose of this workshop is to bring us closer to ourselves. We will combine meditation, breath exercises, sound, movement, and personal work in this week of inquiry. Through various awareness practices we will work and play with what emerges without coercion or judgment." $675

The Limits of Art and The Edges of Science

Terence McKenna

Every culture has assumed that its models were excellent approximations of ultimate truth. The naivete of such tribal chauvinism cannot fail to provoke a small smile. Join us for a weekend of discussion and insight that carries us outside the cheerful envelope of such myopic assumptions. Can archaic values based on shamanism and the psychedelic experience give meaning to the now apparently inevitable dissolution of our ages-long link to this green and watery world? How can great works of art facilitate our departure from the cave of forgetting and our immersion in the real politic of membership in the galactive collectivity of mind? We will cuss and discuss who we are, where we come from, and where we are headed as a species. Come share in a collective act of opening our mind to a universe that is stranger than we can suppose.

Writing with Style and Confidence: Finding the Breakthrough

Lacey Fosburgh

Is your writing not going as well as you'd like? Have you reached a plateau? Is there something you're trying to write, but you feel blocked? Does your writing lack something but you don't know what? Or do you simply want to become an even better writer but don't know how?

This workshop will explore such issues as voice, point of view, style, conceptualization, significance, and especially, your personal relationship with your material. This will be done with an eye toward discovering the way, the vision, that works for you. The goal will be to develop an understanding of what you're trying to write and finding further resources and inspiration within you that will liberate your creative energy. When a breakthrough comes in the creative process, your power and talent are liberated.

Each person in the workshop will receive individual attention and discussion. We will spend time writing and then read each other's work. An aware, psychological approach to writing and the writing process allows you to understand more clearly what attracts you to your material. You can also then discover what may be holding you back from wherever it is you want to go.

The workshop is open to any kind of writing project. $350

The Subtle Self

Judy Blackstone

All spiritual traditions refer to an essential dimension of existence, calling it unity consciousness, emptiness, universal consciousness, and many other names. This dimension is not an abstract concept. It is the core of our own true nature and can be experienced by anyone who is willing to approach it with patience and openness. Unity consciousness is experienced as clear, mirror-like space, pervading our body and our environment, transcending the duality of self and object. It is deeper than the physical and energetic levels of our being, and beyond our psychological defenses, projections, images and archetypes. Subtle Self Work is a precise method for attuning to the clear space of unity consciousness.

In this workshop we will explore how to relate to others in this clear space, how to commune with nature, how to experience and live in the inner depths of our body. Participants will use daily sitting meditation, sounds to stimulate the subtle channels in the body, subtle movement exercises, and verbal and movement process work to stabilize and expand our sense of unity consciousness.

Through concentrated effort we can deepen access to our authentic self and unity with the spiritual basis of all life. In this essential dimension of ourselves, we can find the source of our love, clarity, vitality and peace.

Understanding Differences: A Myers-Briggs Perspective

Maggie Seeley & Mark Seidler

Differences in personal preference create excitement, attraction, and synergy. They can also be the source of great tension and misunderstanding between friends, lovers, colleagues, and family members. Understanding differences can transform these relationships.

Based on the work of Carl Jung, the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator is a user friendly personality test which reveals personal likes and dislikes about almost everything (food, lovers, jobs). The personality types include extraverts/introverts, sensors/intuitives, thinkers/feelers, and judgers/perceivers. Although these pairs seem to be opposites, they are both parts of the whole of ourselves: light and dark, conscious and unconscious, feminine and masculine.

Participants will take the MBTI and then be treated to an in-depth exploration of how the 16 personality types are energized, their tendencies to collect and process data, make business decisions, choose mates and friends, select careers, resolve conflict, create spiritual paths, and improve organizational life. Exploring our many sides can provide us with new options for personal growth and freedom. $675

Sogyal Rinpoche

In the stillness and presence of meditation, we discover a pure awareness beyond the ordinary thinking mind and catch a glimpse of our true nature, something long lost to the busyness and turmoil of our lives. The core of meditation practice is the releasing of heart and mind in deep ease and relaxation, dissolving tensions, and connecting with a tremendous source of healing within. Health is a state where all aspects of body and mind are in balance. Through meditation practice, the mind's natural freedom begins to shine through whatever arises in everyday life, bringing us confidence and skilfulness in our action.

At the heart of the Buddha's teachings lie the ancient meditation practices of Dzogchen, taught by Sogyal Rinpoche, heir to the 2,500 years of wisdom of Buddha. Rinpoche blends teaching with meditation, exploring the expansive Dzogchen view and showing how it can be integrated into everyday living. This weekend will be a valuable introduction for beginners and of special interest to those who have attended Rinpoche's previous workshops and wish to deepen their practice.

Image and Insight: The Integration of Art and Physics

Leonard Shlain

The origin of the word "physics" means nature. Both artists and physicists are engaged in an ongoing attempt to describe nature's reality. The artist uses chiefly image and metaphor; the physicist, number and equation. This seminar will explore the connections between the conceptual ideas inherent in revolutionary art movements and the visionary breakthroughs that have occurred in physics.

Throughout history, but particularly in the modern era, the artist sees the world in a new way. Later, the physicist discovers a new way to think about the world. When these two opposing viewpoints are superimposed on each other, their images and insights are seen to have an uncanny similarity. In this seminar, Leonard Shlain will strive to demonstrate that they are but two different aspects of the same reality.

The changing view of three basic constructs — space, time, and light — in various periods of art, science, and culture will be the basis for a slide show and discussion that explore the reciprocal nature between cubism and a new concept of space, futurism and a new concept of time, and fauvism as a new concept of light. From there, attention will turn to a theory of consciousness which posits the split brain model in the individual as the source of the art/science division in the general culture. Stressing the need to combine the two hemispheric viewpoints, this seminar will examine the benefits that accrue when art is seen in terms of its precognitive ability, and when the imagery of modern physics is understood.

There will be no equations and one need not have a background in either art or physics to enjoy and participate in this workshop. The only prerequisites are a sense of wonder, an open mind, and an innate curiosity. $350

Acting is Doing

Stephen Book

Remove the restrictions, both inner and outer, which suppress the spontaneity of any human being, and his/her natural spontaneity will show itself as artistic creativeness. In this workshop, complicated theater techniques are transformed into simple game forms which produce spontaneous behavior through playing. True playing is spontaneous and requires focus — the absorption in what one is doing, to the exclusion of other thoughts.

This experiential workshop, which is designed for the layperson, emphasizes playing and focusing. Participants will heighten and focus energy, increase communication skills, extend powers of observation and concentration, and improvise imagined realities. $675

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

A Course in Miracles

Julian Silverman

"A Course in Miracles" is a curriculum which uses the mind to empower, inspire and enjoy oneself. In it, conventional problem-oriented human thinking is regarded as an oppressive force, a force which needs to be understood and then neutralized. The method and perspective of the course is based on the following goals:

- Upgrading our ordinary ways of making sense of things
- Learning how to recognize life's trials as opportunities to heal ourselves, and how to take advantage of these opportunities
- Learning to re-cognize and to recollect routinely and to fulfill our essential value and purposes as human beings. $675

Ishta: The Yoga of Empowerment

Rod Stryker

Every human being is a uniquely gifted individual. We are each endowed with physical, intellectual, emotional, energetic and spiritual capacities that, when honored and cultivated, direct us to limitless achievement. Yoga can show us how to awaken these powers and to help us realize our own way to self-mastery.

In this workshop participants will practice the tools of Ishta Yoga, a tradition which combines the Yogas for body, mind, and energy cultivation. To unlock our individual potentials we will use yogic postures to strengthen and relax the body; breathing, chanting, and meditation to still and open the mind; and visualization to awaken the psyche's untapped resources. Open discussion and sharing will be used to help personalize our processes and find deeper enjoyment in keeping these ancient traditions alive.

All levels are welcome; the only requirement is the desire to grow. In order to begin our daily practice on an empty stomach, morning sessions will be held from 8:00 to 9:30 instead of the customary 10:00-12:00. For further information please contact the leader at (213) 393-5150. $350

Imagery and Healing

Jeanne Achterberg
& Frank Lawlis

The imagination is a perennial, yet newly celebrated, healing resource. It is a bridge between body and mind, a manifestation of the human spirit. The image forms the creative juices and allows transcendence.

This workshop will explore, beyond the confines of modern medicine and psychology, the potent realm of imagination as healer. The potential for self- and transpersonal healing will be experienced through sound, image, meditation, and other tools to shift consciousness. A rationale for the use of mind in the crisis of illness will be given, using information on the forefront of science.

The presenters, pioneers in the study and practice of imagery, will introduce their ideas, practices, and visions for the future. The workshop may be of interest to persons who are working or studying in the health professions and to those who are confronted with chronic or catastrophic illness.

Minding your Health

Nicholas Hall

There is convincing evidence that chronic stress has an impact on cardiovascular disease, and mounting evidence to show its effect on the immune system as well. Current research is discovering that the components of "health" are varied and many dimensional — diet, exercise, vitamins, relaxation, imagery, animal bonding, and social support, can all possibly help reverse the adverse effects of stress and disease.

This workshop will explore some of the research being done by Nicholas Hall, director of the Division of Psychoimmunology at the University of South Florida School of Medicine, and his research team. The research involves, for example:

- cancer patients using guided imagery to boost their immune system
- actors and actresses using performance to induce personality changes that have been correlated with measures of the immune system
- studies of stress behaviors and communication patterns in whales and dolphins

Stress assessment and management techniques will be explored and discussed. The group will have an opportunity to participate in discussions about the latest theories in health research, and how these ideas and possibilities might apply to their own lives.

Intermediate Massage Workshop

Peggy Horan and Esalen Massage Staff

This workshop is designed for those who have had some basic Esalen massage experience and are ready for the next step. We will work on several levels; centering ourself through meditation and movement, and developing our sensitivity and awareness to better communicate with and support those we work with. We will also work with specific techniques for deep release, paying close attention to correct body use. Our pace will be relaxed, allowing time to enjoy the hot baths, and explore the natural beauty of the surroundings.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; for more information see pages 47-48. $675

Opening the Feelings

Dale Cummings

Participants will employ Radix* and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants. Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexuality intensify and merge. $675

Dreaming: The Magic Mirror that Never Lies

Jeremy Taylor

Participants will share and work with their dreams, drawing upon timeless mythological/archetypal images that shape our contemporary individual and collective lives. Although the focus will be dream interpretation in a collective context, the methods are designed to give participants the ability to engage in their own dream work upon returning home.

Those people who are just beginning to explore the world of their dreams, as well as professionals who work with dreams, are welcome. As Jeremy Taylor comments, "Only the dreamer can say with any certainty what meanings his or her dreams may hold, and dream work is one of the few activities that puts beginners and experts on an equal emotional footing from the outset." $675

Crazy Wisdom: A Weekend of Philosophy and Laughter

Wes "Scoop" Nisker & Paul Krassner

What a fine comedy this world would be if one did not play a part in it. —Denis Diderot

This is more like a *play*shop than a workshop, but that doesn't mean there is nothing important to be gained here. Perhaps there is nothing more useful these days than to cultivate the art of play and laughter, and to learn how not to take ourselves so seriously.

This weekend is designed to help people develop both their comic and cosmic perspectives. Through talks, discussion, writing exercises, and theater games, participants will explore their own sense of humor as well as their philosophy of life. Sessions will include the presentation of Zen and Taoist wisdom tales (the lighter side of enlightenment), trickster stories, Mark Twain's dark writings, some poetry and jokes, and audio- and videotapes of some of the great satirists and comedians, including Charlie Chaplin, Lenny Bruce, Nichols and May, Robin Williams, and Woody Allen. There will be discussion of the uses of humor in the helping professions and in people's everyday lives. This popular Esalen workshop will not necessarily help you to be funny, but should help you to see funny. At least one belly laugh is guaranteed. $350

Waking up at Midlife

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

In the middle of their years many sense their habitual concerns mediocre and their lives not glad enough. Whence the endless summer day? Inexorable evening cannot be ignored. The chill advances. A crisis occurs. At the farthest point of excursion into ordinariness, and not yet falling back again toward the center, there is a stop. In an instant of suspended movement all seems uncannily strange. What was self-evident yesterday? Today it has become repugnant. Events appear to be repeating a recipe or leading nowhere while experiences of great import hover just out of reach.

We will dedicate this weekend to the reexamination of our ideals and our actual life circumstances. Others appear to know some secret of orientation or happiness. What is it? Come prepared to question, to explore and above all to confront yourself. Bring your journal. We will have the help of philosophers and the succour of great music but — as Auden put it — "look if you like, but you will have to leap." $350

Eco-Design

Sim Van der Ryn

Eco-design is an emerging discipline that transcends traditional boundaries. If we are to have a future, we must take responsibility for being part of nature; and this participation must not be as conqueror, but as a coevolving, harmonious force that synergyzes biosphere and technosphere using the approach and tools of eco-design.

In this workshop, we begin with examining the ideas and work of the patron saints of eco-design: Mumford, Bateson, Fuller, Wright, Steiner, and others. We will survey the history of success and failure, and examine today's state-of-the-art and future potentials for sustainable and regenerative alternatives for eco-design. $350

Mountains and Waves

Susan Harper & Steven Harper

Nature is a primary teacher of movement, creativity, and awareness. Being outdoors in the richness and beauty of the natural world awakens our outer senses. Continuum movement takes us inward, heightening the awareness of our inner senses. These five days will combine both practices, integrating the subtle inner explorations that Continuum movement inspires with the activity of day-hiking in the magnificent Big Sur backcountry.

The day-hikes will introduce participants to basic and increasingly-refined awareness practices to enhance their sensitivity to all that wilderness and being out-of-doors offers. In doing so, not only will there be contact with the natural world, but it will be an opportunity to reawaken those elements of wilderness within.

In the indoor sessions, participants will explore movements which express and embody what they have taken in during their walks, enlivening their ability to feel what they see in nature, as well as their ability to feel their own inner nature. Engaging with this sensual environment, the group will play with movement, breath, sound, dreams, and ritual.

This is a time for contact with nature and wilderness, inside and out. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance. $675

The Core Self: The Heart of the Matter

Ron Alexander

Resources for healing such as spontaneity, curiosity, trust, creativity, and joy, are found in the Core Self. Time also heals and helps activate these resources. This workshop will assist participants — especially health professionals — in their process of healing and acquiring new experiences and skills in microanalysis of mind/body process. Participants will be encouraged to cultivate a friendly relationship with their unconscious in order to heal old patterns and create heal their pathways for new learnings connected to living, loving, working and relating.

The goals of this work are: to enhance self esteem, to become free of trauma and self images of the past, to become conscious in the present moment, to communicate well, to become empowered as a leader and to develop a cohesive personal vision. The tools we will use to nourish and nurture ourselves will include: gestalt practice, self psychology, metaphor, insight (Vipassana) and Zen meditation, breathing skills, guided imagery, dream work, deep music, group process and immersion into nature.

This workshop is limited to thirteen people who will be chosen on the basis of personal letters sent to Spalding Gray, c/o Esalen. The letters should explain why you feel it is important for you to take the workshop. Please send no fees until you are notified by mail of your acceptance. $675

Iyengar Yoga

Cle Souren & Nanda Peek

The Yoga of B.K.S. Iyengar, has brought about a revitalized spring of healthy life into the ancient art of yoga, making it accessible to those of us living in the twentieth century.

Iyengar yoga is an active stretching and extending of all the parts of the body in which a strong and active usage of the joints is crucial. It focuses on physical and mental awareness, clarity, harmonizing the over-stretched and strained parts of the body, and stimulating the stiff and previously impenetrable parts into aliveness. Supple joints and a strong harmonious functioning of the muscles gives freedom to the body and mind.

Participants will be constantly monitored, corrected, and adjusted. Where necessary, props will be used in order to grasp the asana (posture). Intelligence in the body is developed by cultivating insight and understanding of the movement, possibilities and difficulties of the body. Postures are never merely done for the sake of the posture itself. This is what distinguishes the Iyengar method from other approaches in Hatha yoga.

Although Iyengar Yoga is vigorous and physically and mentally demanding, it is accessible to all. $350

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive

Ayala Pines

When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. Unfortunately, more often than not, with the effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, and it is not caused by major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfactions, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find their own romantic images they shared at the beginning of their relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

Recommended reading: Pines, Keeping the Spark Alive (St. Martin's Press). $350

Mountains of Myth, Symbols of the Spirit

Edwin Bernbaum

Mountains have an extraordinary power to evoke a sense of the sacred. Because of the overwhelming sense of wonder and awe they awaken, they have come to reflect the highest and most central values of religions and cultures throughout the world.

Through a combination of slides and personal experience, Edwin Bernbaum will explore the rich and varied symbolism of mountains expressed in different cultures through their religion, philosophy, literature, history, and art. The workshop will focus on relating these expressions of human longings to the issues and concerns facing us today. Comparisons with traditional views of sacred mountains will highlight the singular role that mountains have played in our efforts to preserve the environment, both wild and civilized.

Through discussion and exercises, participants will explore the ways in which sacred peaks can open us to the experience of a deeper, more meaningful reality and promote our spiritual growth, even in cities far from the sight of the mountains themselves.

Making it Float

There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float. — Conroy

Robert Hall writes: "And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you're willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt/group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you're interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we'll not only make it float, we'll take a ride in it."

When Success is Not Enough

Peller Marion

If I had known what it would be like to have it all, I would have settled for less.
— Lily Tomlin

Since 1950, materialism has sky-rocketed in the United States. Indeed, many of us are wealthy beyond the wildest dreams of our ancestors, and yet we struggle more than ever for self-esteem and meaning in our lives.

When alternative measures of success are not available, the human need to be valued and respected by others is acted out through consumption. Buying things becomes both a means of self-esteem and social acceptance. "The avarice of mankind is insatiable," wrote Aristotle, who believed that as soon as one desire was satisfied, another would appear to take its place. If our wants are insatiable, there is simply no such thing as enough.

Peller Marion has designed a weekend that explores the questions: How much is enough? What is an achievement junkie? What is my definition of success at this time in my life? How do I create my own personal philosophy of life? How do I live by my own agenda?

Participants will have a supportive environment where they can experience and explore the paradox of success in their own life. A variety of experiential processes will be drawn from readings and discussion, games, dance, gestalt, imagery, and meditation.

Recommended reading: Marion, Crisis Proof Your Career (Carol Communications, 1991). $350

Mirrors in the Dark: A Gestalt Dream Workshop

Christine Stewart Price & Gestalt Staff

I believe that in a dream, we have a clear existential message of what's missing in our lives, what we avoid doing and living. — Fritz Perls

A dream is a wish your heart makes when you're fast asleep. — Cinderella (per Disney)

Using the approach of Gestalt Practice, this weekend will be spent exploring dreams, and whatever they bring to light. This approach encourages us to see every image and situation in a dream as a projected part of ourselves or of our choices in life. The process involves entering each image or role and, by becoming it fully, experiencing and owning the possibilities and energy reflected within it. Although the leader will work with some individuals, the emphasis will be on learning how to explore our dreams by ourselves or with other group members, in order to develop the skills to continue this process after the group is over. This workshop is not intended to be introductory. Registration is limited to people who have previously worked with the leader, attended a Gestalt Practice workshop, or have a sturdy background in gestalt process work. Participants may want to prepare by keeping a written journal of their dreams in the weeks preceding the workshop. $350

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods to improve their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop will be of value to anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility — painlessly and immediately.

A Weekend with David Schiffman

The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning. $350

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self lives the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for: people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $675

An Ongoing Workshop
Sponsored Jointly by Esalen Institute and Aikido of Tamalpais

George Leonard, Michael Murphy, Annie Styron Leonard & Erik Riswold

In his new book, The Future of the Body (to be published in May 1992 by Tarcher), Michael Murphy raises the possibility that by gathering data from many fields — including medical science, anthropology, sport, the arts, psychical research, and comparative religious studies — we can identify extraordinary versions of most, if not all, our basic attributes. Murphy's research has shown that the most reliable path toward the realization of these extraordinary attributes involves regular, disciplined practice. He defines a transformative practice as a coherent set of activities designed to produce positive changes in a person or group. For a practice to be integral as well, it must aim to cultivate the physical, vital, cognitive, volitional, affective, and transpersonal dimensions of human functioning in an integrated way.

Beginning Saturday, January 4, 1992, Esalen Institute and Aikido of Tamalpais will jointly sponsor a weekly two-hour workshop devoted to the development of integral transformative practice. The workshop will be held at the Aikido of Tamalpais studio in Mill Valley, California, and will relate Murphy's findings to the practice of Leonard Energy Training (LET) and other mind-body disciplines. LET is a integral transformative practice inspired by the martial art of aikido.

Through LET and other practices, participants in the workshop will have the chance to explore personal development in the twelve aspects of human functioning outlined in The Future of the Body: perception of external events, somatic awareness, communication abilities, vitality, movement abilities, capacities to manipulate the environment directly, feelings of pain and pleasure, cognition, volition, sense of self, love, and bodily structure. Participants will be offered the opportunity to engage in an extended bodily transformation experiment (see George Leonard, The Silent Pulse, Dutton, 1986, p. 159ff), and there will be discussion of the applications of integral transformative practice to society at large.

Recommended reading: Murphy, The Future of the Body (Tarcher, in press), Leonard, The Silent Pulse (Dutton), The Transformation (Tarcher), and Mastery (Dutton).

March 1–March 13
Emotional Healing: From Co-Dependence to Aliveness

Karen Paine-Gernée & Terry Hunt

Children who grow up in alcoholic, abusive, or otherwise unhealthy homes often develop certain disabilities which last through their lifetimes unless they are deliberately addressed, among them: an inordinate need to control, an over-developed sense of responsibility, fear of authority figures, inability to trust, difficulty having fun, compulsive behavior, fear of abandonment, and chronic lack of self-esteem.

Alcoholism is a disease of denial. ACAs tell themselves that it really wasn't so bad, and they learn not to feel what they cannot tolerate. As they deny pain, they screen out joy, and their adult lives are often filled with depression and loneliness. ACAs are often survivors, though, and most have emerged as successful-appearing adults. Yet they often spend so much energy managing and controlling work and relationships that they have little left for themselves.

A necessary part of recovery is moving from the state of being co-dependent in one's life toward a state of emotional sobriety. Through self-exploration, participants will have the opportunity to access, express, and release blocked emotions that they still carry from childhood and to tap the aliveness that was sacrificed when they buried their anger, fear, and grief. Points of focus for this workshop will include:

- Emotional Sobriety: Having a personal sense of balance and physical boundaries from which to find peace and a capacity for genuine sharing and pleasure.
- Pleasure/Addictions: Learning that true pleasure is a life-affirming, non-addictive experience.
- Sexuality: Separating the unmet needs of the wounded child from adult intimate sexual relationships; learning basic tools for nurturing and sustaining healthy relationships.
- Boundaries: Looking at the tendency to alternate between fusing with another and then completely isolating oneself.
- Spirituality: Learning to have faith despite the horror experienced in childhood.
- Self-Esteem: Realizing that self-doubt is oftentimes based on old mental patterns, not on reality.
- Learning New Behaviors: Identifying and overcoming old ways of reacting.
- Looking Beyond the Label: Knowing when to stop calling oneself a co-dependent.

Certification in Clinical Hypnosis

Marc Lehrer, Maggie Phillips, Norman Katz & Adam Burke

This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian and Direct Hypnosis, Neurolinguistics and Biohypnotic Monitoring. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the MFCC and complies with the California State Requirement for Hypnosis Certification, and is designed to help develop hypnotic skills for counseling, medicine, nursing and other health areas, education, and body work. This program is also an opportunity for personal growth and transformation for anyone interested in hypnotic phenomena and the uses of suggestion in daily life.

Hypnotic suggestion, advanced imagery, and relaxation methods will be explored. There will be daily presentations, numerous practice sessions, video examples of Erickson and other practitioners, and extensive written support materials. A hypnosis library will be available for in-depth learning of advanced topic areas and there will be an opportunity to explore personal goals with trance and biofeedback equipment.

The scientific basis of hypnosis as well as the ways hypnosis can be applied will be emphasized. Topic areas will include: induction methods, hypnotic testing, symptom and habit removal, individual and family counseling applications, pain control and psychosomatics, non-verbal and pendulum methods, biomedical hypnotic monitoring, metaphor and story-telling methods, hypnosis with children, regression and uncovering, redecisioning and reframing, self-concept enhancement, stress management, fears and phobias, early trauma, hypnotic dream programming, imagery conditioning, NLP methods, enhancing performance in sports, music, and sensation, self-hypnosis methods, teaching self-hypnosis classes, and other topics related to therapy, health, and personal growth. Selected ongoing exercises drawn from Aikido, Feldenkrais, movement, massage, and shamanistic traditions will complement the traditional topic areas.

Since each of the leaders will present for a number of days, there will be an opportunity to model different ways of deepening your own hypnotic potential, trance induction, and utilization skills. This month-long experience with various faculty members gives each participant an in-depth opportunity to develop vivid personal imagery, make lasting self suggestions, and relate more completely with the unconscious mind.

The certification offered through this program is equivalent to a University modified tutorial course. You complete readings, assignments, and a paper for the hypnosis certificate. Certification is granted based upon the competency demonstrated to the faculty in applying hypnotic techniques with an ethical and professional approach and satisfactory completion of all Great Western University C.E.U. course requirements. The paper and assignments are due no later than four months following the completion of this program at Esalen. Heads, Hearts, and Tails

Harriet Goslins, Hugh Milne & Mark Bender

Physical injury, emotional trauma, and ongoing stress can all evoke protective responses from the body. As a result, patterns of armoring can show up as fatigue, depression, or loss of clarity and direction. Often we are not aware of these habitual, postural patterns that were once developed as survival tools, but slowly have begun to limit our options. As these body imprints are released, it is possible to sense one's self beneath the armor.

Based on the work of Harriet Goslins and Hugh Milne, this workshop is for those who want to access deeper levels of personal competence in body awareness, touch, communication, and insight. Carefully structured and sequenced movement patterns and floor lessons, based on the Feldenkrais Method® and Cortical Reeducation®, will be used to help rediscover some of the grace and fluidity of childhood.

Participants will also work with each other, using a system of healing touch called Shaman's Cranial, based on craniosacral methods. Focusing from head to heart to tail, methods will be shown through which touch can complement movement to encourage wisdom and healing in the body.

For those who teach, counsel, or facilitate growth and healing verbally or through touch, this can be an opportunity for personal growth and reflection. Through healing touch, meditation, movements, and processing in circle, both the joyful and painful places can be reached. The releases and insights gained from this process can offer new freedoms from old, restrictive patterns, and provide greater options for a more fulfilling way of life.

C.E. credits available for nurses and dentists; for more information see pages 47-48.

Standard Accommodations: $1665
Bunk Bed Room, if available: $1155

Massage Practitioner Certification Program

Esalen offers a California state-approved massage program. Upon completion of a 130-hour massage practitioner workshop (see March 13-April 10), and after giving 30 additional massages elsewhere, graduates will receive their certificates. This program provides at least 130 hours of instruction, including anatomy, supplemented by study in body-mind disciplines such as yoga, gestalt awareness work, and movement, fulfilling the state requirement.

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring Project offers outreach, education, and referrals that extend Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent, service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring operates a global referral system, linking visitors to Esalen with body workers, counselors, and teachers from their home areas. There are ongoing programs at Esalen and a traveling workshop service in the U.S. and abroad. Instructors teach self-healing, Esalen body work, yoga, breath and body awareness, dance and centering movement, and meditation. Many instructors have experience in gestalt practice and movement continuum.

The Healthspring Library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, philosophy, yoga, nutrition, and organic gardening which may be borrowed by seminarians for a two-week period while at Esalen. Donations of books or periodicals are greatly appreciated.

For access to the referral system and traveling workshop program, write to Laurie Lioness Parizek at Esalen, c/o Healthspring.

■ WILDERNESS PROGRAMS

Esalen Wilderness Programs Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The standard refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered. To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, we require a deposit of $200. The balance of the fee is due 14 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited.

May 1–9
Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center

Steven Harper & Kim Pickett

Nature can provide opportunities to stretch one's limits and explore one's inner wilderness. By living in a natural environment it is possible to expand and realize a deeper sense of self and richness of being.

The group will spend a day and a night at Esalen, leaving the next morning to hike through the Ventana wilderness. Participants will travel "light," with instruction in minimum impact camping, ecology, geography, and cultural history of the area.

Wilderness will be a mirror and primary teacher as the group lives simply and in direct contact with nature. Participants will explore their feelings and sensations as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice and group process. Taking inspiration from natural and native purification practices, they will create a time of cleansing and contemplation, culminating in a 24-hour period alone. The group will hike on to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center, deep in a rugged wilderness valley with natural hot springs, for their last night together. Meditation instruction will be available at Tassajara for those who wish it.

Backpacking experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

■ WORK STUDY PROGRAM

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program. Two programs are planned for each month. Those scheduled thus far for 1992 include:

JOYCE LYKE

December 15–January 12, 1992
David Schiffman will lead a month for people who are facing major changes in career, relationships, or matters of the spirit and are interested in breaking new ground in areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

Dianne Laurence and participants will use acting, writing, theater, and painting to create a communal performance that will be presented at month's end.

January 12–February 9
This month with David Streeter will give students the opportunity to incorporate the subtle art of contemplation in a community atmosphere. Yoga, massage, and gentle emotional release — along with silent meditation — will be included in the curriculum.

Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita) will focus on embodiment and vision, utilizing the Bates vision method, movement and breath, meditation, earth ritual, and the creative use of the Spoken Word.

JOYCE LYNE

February 9 – March 8
Vicki Topp and friends will lead this program of massage, meditation, and integrative body process.

Mary (Devarani) Goldenson's program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, Radix®, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

March 8–April 5
Harriet Goslin will teach Cortical Re-education® and the Feldenkrais® Method. For a description of this work, see January 19-26.

John Soper's group will focus on ways to improve the quality of life. The work will start with the individual and grow to include the environment.

April 5–May 3
Phyllis Shankman offers a month of in-depth group process/gestalt work using the creative arts, as well as meditation, massage, and movement for self-exploration and healing.

Robert Nadeau will emphasize functional centering using grounding, energy awareness, aikido, and movement work. The physical, mental, and spiritual aspects of centering will be explored.

May 3–May 31
Design your own program, alone and with other participants, using your intuition, intelligence, and imagination. Find surprising resources; harvest and recycle your energies. Facilitated by Janet Lederman.

Karuna Licht will lead a month-long journey using the creative processes of art, ritual, and guided imagery as the language of the heart.

May 31–June 28
Diane Lawrence and participants will use acting, writing, theater, and painting to create a communal performance that will be presented at month's end.

This month with David Streeter will give students the opportunity to incorporate the subtle art of contemplation in a community atmosphere. Yoga, massage, and gentle emotional release — along with silent meditation — will be included in the curriculum.

June 28–July 26
Beverly Silverman will lead a dialogue between body and spirit using Rolfing®, gestalt, and psychosynthesis.

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy offers exploration of ancient and contemporary meditation practices; centering through movement, sound, and breath; and contact through massage.

Institute of Transpersonal Psychology Offers External Master's Degrees

Work students now have the opportunity to integrate their work study experience at Esalen with the external degree program of the Institute of Transpersonal Psychology. The external degree format enables students to study at any location. Work students will be able to continue the dynamics of personal growth fostered at Esalen while earning master's degrees in transpersonal studies or in transpersonal psychology.

Inquiries and applications should be made directly to ITP. Contact:

A deposit of $350 in U.S. currency is required with your application. The cost of all 28-day Work Study Programs, except the two-month body work program, is $700 the first month, $650 the second month, $600 the third month. Work students may be invited to remain for a second or third month depending on space available and community needs. There are no scholarships available for the Work Study Program.

For more information contact Bette Dingman: (408) 667-3010.

The Future Of The Body

By Michael Murphy

If you read the table of contents to Michael Murphy's forthcoming The Future of the Body (see page 5), you will see that the book surveys many kinds of human activity. But The Future of the Body is more than a survey. In it, Murphy combines speculative philosophy, a wide range of evidence for extraordinary human capacities, and guiding principles for transformative practices.

This book grows out of Esalen's fifteen-year research project on exceptional functioning and the Institute's long experience with somatic, affective, and moral education. The Future of the Body is published by Jeremy P. Tarcher, Inc., Los Angeles, and can be ordered through the Esalen bookstore.

Margaret Livingston
Catalog Editor

Growing acquaintance with once-foreign cultures, new discoveries about our subliminal depths, and the dawning recognition that each social group reinforces just some human attributes while neglecting or suppressing others, have stimulated a worldwide understanding that all of us have great potentials for growth. Perhaps no single culture has possessed as much publicly available knowledge as we do today regarding the transformative capacities of human nature.

Unfortunately, however, professional specialization and divergent belief systems, along with the information explosion, make it difficult to bring such knowledge into a single purview. Like the unassembled pieces of a great jigsaw puzzle, discoveries about our developmental possibilities are scattered across the intellectual landscape, isolated from each other in separate fields of inquiry. In The Future of the Body, I bring some of these pieces together to see what picture of human possibility they present.

More specifically, I argue that by gathering data from many fields—including medical science, anthropology, sports, the arts, psychical research, and comparative religious studies—we can identify extraordinary versions of most, if not all, of our basic attributes, among them: sensorimotor, kinesthetic, communication, and cognitive abilities; sensations of pain and pleasure; love; vitality; volition; sense of self; and various bodily processes. These grace-laden analogues of our normal attributes, which arise spontaneously or as products of particular practices, can be cultivated. Indeed, the evidence assembled in this book suggests that we harbor a range of capacities that no single philosophy or psychology has fully embraced, and that these can be developed by practicing certain virtues and disciplines and by building institutions to support them. Though every enduring religion has affirmed something analogous to Judeo-Christian doctrines of grace, none has acknowledged the larger spectrum of grace that a collection of this kind begins to reveal.

Furthermore, these many extraordinary attributes exhibit an apparent continuity with features of animal nature. I suggest that they are part of a richly complex development that began with the earliest forms of life, and that they point toward further human advance. Their cultivation, in other words, would carry forward the earth's evolutionary adventure.

In summary, I propose that:

- there exist extraordinary versions of most, if not all, human attributes. I elaborate this idea by focusing upon perceptions of external events, somatic awareness, communication abilities, vitality, movement abilities, capacities to manipulate the environment directly, feelings of pain and pleasure, cognition, volition, sense of self, love, and bodily structures.
- metanormal capacities, when viewed in their entirety, point toward extraordinary types of embodiment.
- a widespread realization of extraordinary capacities would constitute an evolutionary transcendence analogous to the rise of living species from inorganic matter, or of humankind from its hominid ancestors.
- all or most instances of significant human development are produced by a limited number of identifiable activities such as disciplined self-observation, visualization of desired capacities, and caring for others. These activities can be incorporated into transformative practices.
- a wide range of extraordinary capacities, though produced by specifiable activities, arise without benefit of formal discipline.
- metanormal capacities and experiences are mediated by superordinary agencies or processes (which in Christianity are called the "graces of God," in Buddhism "the workings of Buddha Nature," in Taoism the "way of the Tao").

- transformative practices can produce imbalanced development, inhibiting certain capacities while promoting others. All human capacities and virtues depend on one another, either directly or indirectly.
- the evidence for extraordinary human attributes supports some sort of panentheism. Panentheism (in distinction to pantheism) is the doctrine that Divinity is both immanent and transcendent to the universe.
- a balanced development of our various attributes is possible through integral practices.

My general proposals about human possibility are presented in Part One (see Table of Contents). In Part Two, evidence supporting those proposals is arranged according to a spectrum of activities that runs, roughly, from sickness to healing to religious and other life-encompassing practices. I employ this scheme of presentation to show: first, that dramatic transformations of body and mind occur in all sorts of conditions, from disease to saintly living; and second, that significant changes all along this spectrum of experience are mediated in part by specifiable activities, or transformative modalities, that are commonly utilized in programs for human growth. In Part Three, I discuss these constituent elements of transformative discipline, suggesting ways in which they can be joined to promote balanced human development. Here is an excerpt from Chapter 26.

Guiding Principles For Integral Practices

They must be suited to each practitioner's makeup. All transformative disciplines must be adapted to their individual practitioners, even in groups with narrow ideas about human development. The most dogmatic martial arts or contemplative teachers must bend their methods to some extent to accommodate the different capacities of those in their charge. But the need for flexibility is especially pronounced if our aim is integral transformation. A multidimensional approach requires methods adapted to each of its practitioner's shortcomings, strengths, and stage of growth. For that reason there can be no single or "right" kind of integral discipline with a universally applicable and strictly specified set of techniques. If experience has shown that flexibility is necessary to accomplish narrow ends, it emphatically teaches us that a many-sided development of human nature requires rich, diverse, and adaptable practices.

They promote a simultaneous development of our various faculties. Because they involve all dimensions of human activity, integral practices develop through a complex series of outcomes, each of them produced or nurtured by specific methods such as those listed above. Such methods embrace the entire mind-body complex, illuminating volitions and cognitive processes, enriching emotion and relations with others, promoting many virtues, giving the body new power and beauty.

They generally require several mentors, rather than a single guru. Since integral practices engage our various capacities, they depend upon teachers of many kinds, including meditation masters, somatic and psychological educators, and instructors in cognitive skills. People turning today to diverse programs for growth reflect a general interest in many-sided development as well as a general dissatisfaction with various shortcomings of particular religious or therapeutic approaches. Though such eclecticism can encourage shallowness or lack of commitment, it often comes from a drive toward wholeness and a hunger for many-sided fulfillment.

They require a strong and developing autonomy. Only by assuming responsibility for our own development can we learn from our mistakes, sharpen our discrimination, and establish an identity strong enough to sustain the difficulties of high-level change. If we give such responsibility to a guru or group, we may limit our discipline and overlook our particular strengths and shortcomings. If we do not measure guidance from others by our own experience and discernment, we can diminish our unique resources and weaken our personhood. Only through healthy ego-strength can we transcend ourselves.

And even when we surrender to agencies beyond our normal functioning, we must hold to a final reference within. That reference is gradually transformed into an identity beyond the ordinary constructions of self, but it remains an identity nevertheless, not the clone of another creature.

They are facilitated by personal traits that promote creativity in general. Frank Barron, Henry Murray, and other psychologists have identified personality traits commonly possessed by creative people, among them:

- tolerance of ambiguity
- openness to experience (including altered states)
- willingness to temporarily set aside reality testing
- nondefensiveness in relation to strong feelings or unusual ideas
- independence of judgment
- attraction to complexity and asymmetry
- capacity for creative regression
- capacity for right-brained, or nondominant hemispheric functioning that mediates holistic thinking
- flexibility of perception and ego boundaries
- the ability to create order from disorder and to see similarities in the dissimilar
- the capacity to perceive obscure figures or gestalts
- a flair for rendering novel forms from complex stimuli
- unusual capacities for intuition
- psychological risk-taking
- emotional sensitivity
- a strong drive to find patterns and meaning
- feelings of oneness with others

Though these traits have generally been identified among artists, scientists, and others who produce works separate from themselves, they also facilitate practices that develop human nature itself. They help to catalyze new richness of awareness and broader repertoires of behavior. They help bring new enjoyment, beauty, and creativity to our relationships and into our everyday life.

These traits are evident, too, in hypnotic responsiveness, which may be drawn upon to promote certain kinds of exceptional functioning, in the capacity for transformative imagery, in meditation, and in sports (witness the unpredictable moves of great basketball players, the surprising ring strategies of inspired boxers, the novel movements of great gymnasts and dancers). The development of metanormal capacities requires receptivity to unusual experience and a willingness to substitute novel for habitual responses. The realization of new states and behaviors often necessitates a temporary suspension of reality testing. To explore the terra incognita of our latent capacities, we must love adventure, complexity, and strange territory. Integral practices reorder elements of body and mind as if they were artistic materials, into new forms of power and beauty, and for that reason require those personality traits that promote creativity in general.

Though they encourage individual autonomy, they require surrender at times to transformative agencies beyond ordinary functioning. In the ego-transcending love and knowing at the heart of integral development, indeed in all metanormal activities, a power or presence beyond our familiar faculties sometimes inspires us. This superordinary activity alters our sense of autonomy, annihilating and fulfilling it at once as it improves our various capacities.

They require patience and the love of practice for its own sake. In his book Mastery, George Leonard describes some ways in which human growth is subverted by unwillingness to persevere in self-discipline. There is an antidote to such failure, though, in the recognition that improvements usually come in spurts after long periods of little or no advance. By enjoying the long plateaus of the learning curve and practice for its own sake, we are most likely to persevere in transformative disciplines than if we constantly demand immediate results.

They utilize inherited all-at-once responses, or psychosomatic compliance for high-level change. Meditation elicits many beneficial changes. Similarly, a simple running program produces several dozen kinds of hormonal, cardiopulmonary, and muscular improvement. These general, all-at-once responses can facilitate transformative practices, making them more efficient and comprehensive at once. Like a good business deal or fertile scientific theory, they produce great return on investment. Paraphrasing Freud, we might call these simultaneous and manifold changes instances of "psychosomatic compliance for high-level change."

Indeed, every significant change involves a huge number of psychological and somatic events, so that distinguishing general from specific responses can be misleading. Nevertheless, the distinction can help us think about transformative practice. Even if it is only a relative distinction, the difference between general and specific responses can help us improve our strategies for integral development.

They utilize the manifold changes catalyzed by images and altered states. Images and altered states can facilitate complex developments of human functioning. They can activate intricate webs of psychophysical events for healing or growth, help integrate different body parts, and lift various capacities to extraordinary levels. In doing this they resemble all-at-once responses derived from our animal ancestors, but whereas inherited responses act in well-established ways, images and altered states can overrule homeostatic reflexes to produce truly novel abilities. In their more radical effects, they resemble the subsumptive processes evident in much evolutionary advance.

They enlist more than one mediation to achieve particular outcomes. Swami Rama, a yogi whom Elmer Green studied in his laboratory at the Menninger Foundation, could alter his heart rate at will. The swami could do this in at least three ways: by the Valsalva maneuver, by direct control of the vagus nerve, or by "immediate influence upon the cardiac muscle." In this versatility, he exemplified a principle evident in other kinds of self-mastery, namely that particular behaviors can be modified through various physiological pathways, by different processes, using more than one type of meditation.

To explore the terra incognita of our latent capacities, we must love adventure, complexity, and strange territory. Integral practices reorder elements of body and mind as if they were artistic materials, into new forms of power and beauty.

They surpass limits by negotiation rather than force. Any significant improvement in physical functioning requires a reordering of bodily processes. Distance runners must alter their metabolism as they reach new levels of fitness; body builders must break down muscle fibers to rebuild their physique; gymnasts must stretch tendons to improve their flexibility. And qualities of heart and mind, too, are restructured by transformative practice. The psychic exhaustion experienced by athletes and martial artists, the initiatory sickness of aspiring shamans, the dark night of the soul described by Christian mystics, the pain of Zen meditation retreats, and the Sufis' annihilation in God all result to some extent from breakdowns that facilitate self-surpassing. But such breakdowns can be too severe. To succeed, transformative disciplines must strike a fine balance between deficient and excessive effort, respecting limits while they aim to surpass them. For that reason, successful athletes and realized contemplatives alike are frequently connoisseurs of their own condition. A distance runner may feel his poor training, for example, in the missing glow after a half-hearted workout, or—conversely—in the taut restlessness of excessive fatigue; while an experienced meditator knows the difference between firmly held mindfulness and the jaundiced aura of driven concentration. Discipline is negotiated best with a skillful, as well as a determined will.

Such negotiation requires experience, because limits change according to circumstance and the organism's fluctuating disposition. Accomplished athletes, martial artists, shamans, and contemplatives must be existentialists, as it were, centered in the now as they move forward in practice, accommodating their efforts to their psychological and physical conditions of the moment. Because the target of transformative practice is always moving, disciplinary skill requires adaptability, patience, and a willingness to stay on the long plateaus of the learning curve as negotiations with limits to growth continue.

In this, of course, limits stretch as well as fluctuate. Our first constraints, whether psychological or somatic, can yield to skillful practice. At the same time, our aspirations must bend to accommodate homeostasis. Self-cultivation involves alterations of our ideals as well as our present makeup. Such accommodation is evident, for example, in the use of imagery for skill acquisition. Though imagery practice can improve performance, the spontaneity required by a scrambling quarterback or driving point-guard can be interrupted by images inappropriate to the situation at hand. The delicacy required for a tricky golf shot can be impeded by obsessive mental pictures. Imagery, like muscles, must conform to requirements of the moment. And a similar malleability is needed, too, in those rarer activities I have termed metanormal. In deep meditation, we sometimes apprehend images of extraordinary presences, partly visual, partly kinesthetic, or even auditory, which have to give way as something still greater happens. Or in aikido, images vanish as our body moves in ways we have not imagined. In all dimensions of growth, in all aspects of our functioning, inspired images must yield at times to greater inspirations. Even our most luminous mental pictures are subject to the negotiations of transformative practice.

Thus in practice we look two ways at once, toward those elements wanting change and toward our ever-developing intimations of a greater activity in us. By simultaneously embracing our ideals and actualities, both of which continually develop, we can begin to effect their marriage. And this holds for the philosophies and mythologies that attend our aspirations for growth. The imagery contained in this book, for example, must develop in the light of further experience if it is to have any usefulness for speculation, research, or practice.

The depend upon improvisation. Any successful discipline remakes us to some extent. It alters habits, eliminates outworn routines, changes psychic and physical structures. This is especially true for practices that simultaneously embrace our cognitive and physical parts while respecting our unique makeup. Although some disciplines with relatively limited aims have well-marked stages, methods, and results, integral practices make their way in new territories. Though they can draw upon experience from many fields, they have no detailed maps for all their activities, and few clearly established lines of progression. For that reason they depend upon a certain amount of trial and error, the love of adventure, and improvisation.

They utilize images of unity. Meditation on symbols of oneness are part of both ancient and modern transformative practices. Because our various parts tend to mirror one another, such practices facilitate internal unity and our sense of solidarity with others.

They require (and facilitate) conscious transitions between different states of consciousness. The cultivation of continuous awareness in sleep has been taught in various yogic traditions. Sri Aurobindo wrote:

It is even possible to become wholly conscious in sleep from beginning to end or over large stretches of our dream-experience; then we are aware of ourselves passing from state after state of consciousness to a brief period of dreamless rest, and then returning by the same way to the waking consciousness.

It is also possible to promote conscious transitions between the ordinary waking state and altered consciousness other than sleep. Some Indian Tantric schools, for example, have permitted the use of alcohol as part of their discipline, encouraging their followers to maintain self-awareness while intoxicated. Dervishes hold their inner eye steady while dancing at the edge of exhaustion. Gurdjieff taught self-observation during manual labor, intense exercise, or other conditions where attention typically falters. The Tibetan Book of the Dead gives instructions for the maintenance of consciousness through stages of death. By extending unbroken awareness through all our activities, such practices open connections between our dissociated parts, give us more command of habitual behaviors, promote access to our subliminal depths, and deepen realization of a subjectivity beyond all mental or physical happenings.

They depend on a developing awareness that transcends psychological and somatic functioning. Such awareness can disidentify itself from all images, thoughts, impulses, feelings, and sensations by noninterfering self-observation. It comes into its own, so to speak, through a choiceless awareness in action or repose that relinquishes attachment to particular events, either psychic or physical. It provides a growing freedom from mental, emotional, and physical habits, as well as brief moments of joy and recognitions of a deeper freedom still. With cultivation, it opens onto larger vistas and becomes a boundless subjectivity that realizes unity everywhere.

This fundamental awareness is its own reward and one of the supreme results of transformative practice. It is also necessary for practical success in both the early and later stages of integral development. Only its regenerative freedom can mediate the shocks, disintegrations, readjustments, and restructurings required for high-level change. Only its comprehensive embrace is spacious enough, clear enough, and constant enough to sustain a radical reconstruction of the human organism, so well adapted to life on Earth. Only an awareness beyond our particular parts can outlast our homeostasis.

The Sanskrit language of illumined states is suggestive in this regard. Nirvikalpa samadhi, for example, a supreme unitive state in which our fundamental identity shines, has no (nir) parts (kalpas). Of its own fundamental necessity, it transcends formations that arise within it. With its extraordinary perspective, this essential awareness sustains negotiation of internal conflicts more effectively than limited parts of the mind. Even when we resist or reject particular impulses and reflexive behaviors, it helps balance our feedback-laced systems. This, of course, is a secret of the best modern therapy and the ancient practice of witness meditation. From this undivided, all-inclusive, buoyant awareness, we can bring our disparate elements into contact and eventual integration.

They orient all our capacities and somatic processes toward the extraordinary life arising in us. Integral practices orient us toward the full spectrum of grace. To do this, they must be sustained by a philosophy that embraces our many parts, by an aspiration for many-sided development, and by surrender to an existence greater than the one with which most of us are presently familiar. They place us on a path toward extraordinary life, which, I believe, includes types of love, joy, and embodiment beyond our present abilities to conceive.

■ ESALEN NOTES

PLEASE NOTE:

Shortly before the publication of this catalog we considered raising prices starting July 1. Like many of you, Esalen is feeling the effects of the recession, and of operating costs that continue to rise. After much thought and debate, we decided not to increase our rates at this time. Instead, we are examining other ways to reduce our expenses. A price increase will be our last resort.

■ BIG HOUSE PROGRAMS

As featured in the May-October 1991 catalog, we are now scheduling workshops in our newly renovated Big House. This facility is available to groups of individuals who work together and would like to design their own Esalen program, drawing on our leaders and other resources. Thirteen bedrooms accommodating up to twenty individuals, ten bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, and living room make it possible to house group members together, thereby enhancing the retreat environment.

To schedule or discuss possible formats, please contact Pat LeWine, program coordinator at (408) 667-3038.

■ NEW PROGRAM ON HUMAN POTENTIAL AND ECOLOGICAL DESIGN

The Farallones Institute has been creating models of ecologically stable, resource-conserving environments for twenty years. Its Integral Urban House in Berkeley and Rural Center in Occidental have pioneered models demonstrating new concepts in solar design, water conservation, waste recycling, and energy production. Esalen Institute, in cooperation with the Farallones Institute, is offering a series of programs that explore the coevolution of personal and planetary health, culture, consciousness, and design. The next workshop in this series is scheduled for June 5-7. Please turn to Esalen Seminars for more information.

■ FRIENDS OF ESALEN QUARTERLY NEWSLETTER

The Friends of Esalen Newsletter is for and about the extended Esalen community. Published quarterly, it covers current events and other items not covered in the Catalog.

Through contributions, Friends of Esalen members support the scholarship fund, the Friends network and newsletter, and other Esalen projects. In return, they receive the Esalen Catalog three times a year, the quarterly Friends Newsletter, and opportunities to be listed in the Friends Network Directory and to attend the annual Friends Workshop.

Esalen's Friends include people in 22 countries, from Big Sur to Nepal. If you would like to join us, please complete and return the membership form on page 54.

■ MICHAEL MURPHY'S BOOK TOUR

Michael Murphy and Steve Donovan will tour the United States in the spring of 1992 to meet with Esalen Friends and talk about Michael's book, The Future of the Body (Tarcher, May 1992).

Esalen Friends and former seminarians in various cities around the country will be invited to meet Michael and Steve on this tour, and at the same time have the opportunity to meet other Esalen Friends in their areas.

■ INVITATIONAL CONFERENCES

In its continuing commitment to the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Currently scheduled programs and their conveners are listed here.

June 14–19
Russian Culture and World Culture

Members of the Russian-American Institute will hold their second annual Esalen conference. Members of the Institute will discuss Russian culture today and its changing relation to world culture.

July 12–17
The New Older Woman: A Colloquy for the Coming Century

Convened by Patricia Faul, Ilene Tuttle, Peggy Downes, & Virginia Mudd

By the year 2000, for the first time in history older people will outnumber the young. Most will be women—more active, better educated, with longer life expectancies than ever before and possessing singularly independent means and minds. This conference was first held in 1991 when twelve older women who have made significant contributions in their fields came together to discuss options for this new older woman and develop a framework for future dialogue. The conference yielded candid, provocative insights on a new generation. This year another group—of differing backgrounds and disciplines—will be invited to expand the dialogue and investigate further what life holds in store for "The New Older Woman."

WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 52-53. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

With the completion of the Big House renovation in June, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Pat LeWine, (408) 667-3038.

Finally, there are other events that enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. And, there is a community event schedule that is offered; please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Weekend of May 1–3

Enjoying Poetry

Brother David Steindl-Rast

Nature and people at Esalen help poetry come alive. So many have found this to be true that Brother David is offering a new selection of poems in the usual workshop format and setting.

Poems are high-energy food for life's journey. Some of us thrive on this fare: for them, this weekend will provide the delights of a festive meal. Others have been estranged from poetry ever since high school days; they are likely to discover at this workshop rooms of their own house which they never entered before.

Why does school spoil for many young people the taste for poetry? Why does Sunday school turn so many away from religion? These two phenomena are closely related. Yet, it is never too late to discover the divine poet child within us, a child more alive than we ever dared to imagine.

$350

Couples and Creativity

Eva Leveton

Using drawing materials, movement and drama, participants will spend a weekend playing in order to understand how couples relate and to rediscover the well-springs of spontaneity. Emphasis will be placed on reconnecting with the creative sources of relationships, teaching systems, and communication concepts.

$350 per participant

Psychodrama: Exploring the Possible

Maurica Anderson

In an exchange with Freud, J.L. Moreno, the creater of psychodrama, said: "I begin where you leave off. You analyze dreams until they are dead. I give people back their dreams."

Psychodrama is an active and often humorous process which improvises life scenes as a way of identifying and expressing feelings, gaining insight and empathy, improving relationships, and developing creativity and spontaneity. In this workshop participants will have the chance to explore and experience a variety of personal decisions with the option of "choosing not to choose."

The workshop is experiential; the degree of active involvement will be up to the individual. $350

Spring Shake-up

Deborah Medow (Jenkins)

Spring is here and now is the time to get up and move and shake off some of that winter sluggishness! Renew the aliveness of your own body and see how how the way you move often reflects how you feel. Become more aware of your old habits and patterns, and give yourself the opportunity to express new possibilities for change.

This weekend will combine sessions which include elements of dance, yoga, massage, aerobic movement, and theater games for shaping up the outside, with quiet, meditative time for turning inside. The purpose of the workshop: tune in and tune up your Body, Mind and Spirit! $350

May 1–9

Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center

Steven Harper & Kim Pickett

For workshop description see Wilderness Programs page 51. $675

Week of May 3–8

The Art of Touching: The Joy of Being in Touch

Roger Grandy & Brother David Steindl-Rast

Where touching begins, there love and humanity also begin. —Ashley Montagu

Our affluent society has its own share in human hunger: the hunger for touch — no less physical, no less painful, no less dangerous than the hunger for food. This five-day workshop is for those who dare to face and own this hunger and want to do something about it.

Esalen massage staff member Roger Grandy studied in Thailand and will teach a centuries-old method of body work developed by Buddhist monks. Brother David, a Christian monk, has helped many to find a healthy attitude towards the body. Together, both leaders will explore ways to overcome prejudices and inhibitions often encouraged by church and society.

Participants will explore the art of touching in its full range. The strong, gentle, healing touch of the body and the touch of a Presence beyond space and time are merely different levels of touching. In traditional Thai manner, the body work will be done on mats, with participants clothed. In this and a variety of other ways we will practice getting in touch with self, with others, with nature, with God. This will be a five day celebration of the joy of being in touch.

Five-Day Lomi Intensive

Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff

In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality. This loss fosters suffering.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one's authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work. $675

Spirit in Nature: A Shamanic Workshop

Jo Imlay & John Broomfield

For many of our ancestors, the world was a unified, spirit-filled cosmos in which humans were bound in kinship with animals, trees, rivers, rocks and sky. Our contemporary culture is attempting to rekindle the belief that by acknowledging the living consciousness of the earth, we have much to learn from our companions in nature.

This workshop will help participants reconnect with the earth and hear nature's voices once again. To open all the senses, time will be divided between talk and meditative silence, group activities and solo explorations, drumming and shamanic ritual.

Through discussion and videos, participants will be introduced to the spiritual bond with nature embedded in native cultures: Celtic, Himalayan, Arctic, Native American, Polynesian, Australian. From these beautiful traditions, we learn that everything given by the earth must be held sacred. Against this background, participants will explore their own spiritual experiences in nature and pool ideas on ways to live more lightly on the earth.

Much of the week will be spent out-of-doors in the quiet beauty of Esalen's gardens, groves, and seashore, practicing how to truly see and hear. $675

Body, Heart and Soul

Paul & Niyaso Carter

This workshop explores the many aspects of sexual life, with the objective of helping to heal old wounds, unlearning restrictive programs, dissolving fears, and becoming free to appreciate your own sensual-sexual nature. The five days are structured as a series of initiations beginning with conception and going through childhood, puberty, adolescence, into the mature union of sexual energy and open-hearted love. The goal of the workshop will be to help bring back into your life:

- a heightened sense of well-being in your body
- a lighter and more open heart
- the ability to communicate without fear
- deeper intimacy in your relationships

When we are free to appreciate our sensual aliveness, when our sexual energy is integrated with the energy of our heart, and when we can let our bodies, hearts, and souls experience their own natural flow, true intimacy can happen in our lives. Touching this space is not only a delight, it can also transforms every aspect of our lives. $675

From the Field to the Table

Diane Joy Goodman, Jesse Cool & Esalen Garden and Farm Staff

To have a passion for exceptional food is to be concerned with the honesty and care with which it is grown and prepared. This workshop is for cooks, gardeners, food professionals, agriculturists, or anyone who loves food and gardens. The leaders include a professional cook and consultant in the field of sustainable agriculture, and co-founder of Flea St. Cafe in Menlo Park, California. Focus will be on the inherent relationship between food and its source, the connection between the character of the food you produce, and the quality of the ingredients you use. Practices that support environmentally and economically sustainable agriculture, such as growing your own food, buying locally and seasonally, and seeking out high quality organic produce, will be illuminated.

In this hands-on workshop, participants will prepare food using new ideas and techniques. They will spend time in the Esalen garden and farm, in the kitchen at the Big House, and at the table. They will create soups, salads, breads, pastas, main courses, breakfasts, sauces, condiments, desserts and sweets from Esalen's spring harvest and other local purveyors.

There will also be time for a group process in which participants can explore their individual relationships to food. At week's end they will leave with information skills, recipes, and perhaps a new vision that celebrates the natural integrity of food. $675

Weekend of May 8–10

Experiencing Esalen

Experiencing Esalen Staff

This workshop is designed for people who have not previously been to Esalen. Its emphasis is on finding those approaches to self-awareness that work most effectively for the individual participant. These may include: sensory awareness, gestalt practice, group process, guided fantasy, meditation, massage. There is also time to explore the natural magnificence of the Big Sur coast.

The Modern Warrier and the Samurai Game

George Leonard
& Annie Styron Leonard

A man or woman with outward courage dares to die;
A man or woman with inward courage dares to live.
—Lao Tzu

The Modern Warrior is not one who goes to war but rather one who exhibits integrity in every aspect of living, one who seeks to attain control then act with abandon. For the Modern Warrior, life is vivid, immediate, and joyful. He or she lives each day to the full, and is fulfilled in serving others. This workshop is based on the premise that to achieve peace in the world and harmony in daily life, it might well be necessary for men and women to reown the warrior ideal.

Through the centering and movement exercises of LET (Leonard Energy Training) as well as through participation in a Samurai Game, you will be invited to get in touch with your own unacknowledged powers, and thus to discover the hidden warrior within. You will practice alternative ways of dealing with conflict and stress. Guidance will be offered on how to apply the warrior ideal to daily life. This workshop will not be physically strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Vision Painting

Helen Malcolm-Neeb

Vision painting is a process through which a personal map of the future is crafted. Each aspect of the person's life is addressed from its highest potential. Through meditation, guided visioning, and play, dreams are evoked and organized into images. The vision painting is an affirmation of the individual in professional, spiritual, and personal life.

This is an opportunity to affirm the spirit within from a place of play, creativity, and strength. The maps we create will use symbols, pictures, color and words. Beginners and artists are welcome. Create a vision of your future as you want it to be.

$350 (plus $20 materials fee paid directly to the leader)

Buddha, Krishna and Christ

Robert McDermott

Through scriptural texts, slides and cassettes, this workshop will create visual and conceptual images of these three spiritual beings. Two of the five sessions will focus on each of these figures as depicted in three texts: Buddha in Burtt, Teachings of the Compassionate Buddha; Krishna of The Bhagavad Gita; and Christ of The Gospel of St. John. Prior reading of these sources is not essential but some familiarity with these books, or with contemporary interpreters (e.g., Thich Nhat Hanh on Buddha, Sri Aurobindo on Krishna and Rudolf Steiner on Christ) will deepen the experience of these figures and their meanings for our individual and cultural lives. $350

Completion

Will Schutz

Incomplete actions, be they personal or social, result in many of humankind's troubles; emotional — replaying early stuck relations; physical — chronic tension from unfinished actions; health — blood poisoning from uneliminated waste products; aging — caused by incomplete events; ecology — waste disposal problems, especially nuclear; spiritual — karma, unfinished business; education — Montessori's insistence on putting toys away; sports — the concept of the killer instinct.

What are the resistances to completion? What must happen to a self-concept to propel it toward completing cycles? These and other questions will be explored via the following concepts: theory of energy cycles, life history completion, health through imagery. $350

Week of May 10–15

Vision Painting for Women

Helen Malcolm-Neeb

This workshop is the same as May 8-10, except that this is a five-day workshop and is for women only. $675

Golf in the Kingdom: An exploration of the inner game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker
& John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart —Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It may be experienced not simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

During these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Recommended reading: Murphy, Golf in the Kingdom (Delta); Gallwey, The Inner Game of Golf (Random House).

On Being a Man

David Schiffman

Many men today seek to embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result, the right to celebrate and honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man's sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own nature which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood, and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and goodwill, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the "wild man" within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

A variety of experiential processes will explore these and similar issues.

Traditional initiation rituals and purification ceremonies using drumming, changing, and a sweat lodge will also be incorporated in this journey. $675

Change and Self-Esteem

Phyllis Shankman

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creatively if one is to sustain a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, enables one to confront resistance and fear, and can increase the willingness to change and take risks.

This workshop includes an in-depth process for finding and allowing self-acceptance and for creatively confronting opportunities for change and growth. Group activities include gestalt process work, discussion, massage, meditation, music, dance, art imagery exercises, and whatever else happens spontaneously. $675

Following the Thread: Revealing the Fabric

David Silverstein & Joyce Lyke

The leaders write: "Most of us go through life ignoring, judging, or rejecting the content of our inner or unconscious life rather than paying attention to the information and messages we are giving ourselves. In our haste to be doing, we have forgotten our Being, and we have surrendered to the conditioning that limits a fuller experience of who we are.

"By attending to whatever is emerging in the moment, with interest and curiosity, we can begin to follow the thread of our inner life, detach ourselves from our conditioned responses, and perhaps discover that which is most essential, the fabric of our Being.

"The purpose of this workshop is to bring us closer to ourselves. We will combine meditation, breath exercises, sound, movement, and personal work in this week of inquiry. Through various awareness practices we will work and play with what emerges without coercion or judgment." $675

Weekend of May 15–17

The Limits of Art and the Edges of Science

Terence McKenna

Every culture has assumed that its models were excellent approximations of ultimate truth. The naivete of such tribal chauvinism cannot fail to provoke a small smile. Join us for a weekend of discussion and insight that carries us outside the cheerful envelope of such myopic assumptions. Can archaic values based on shamanism and the psychedelic experience give meaning to the now apparently inevitable dissolution of our ages-long link to this green and watery world? How can great works of art facilitate our departure from the cave of forgetting and our immersion in the real politic of membership in the galactive collectivity of mind? We will cuss and discuss who we are, where we come from, and where we are headed as a species. Come share in a collective act of opening our mind to a universe that is stranger than we can suppose.

Healing, Meditation, and Dzogchen

Sogyal Rinpoche

In the stillness and presence of meditation, we discover a pure awareness beyond the ordinary thinking mind and catch a glimpse of our true nature, something long lost to the busyness and turmoil of our lives. The core of meditation practice is the releasing of heart and mind in deep ease and relaxation, dissolving tensions, and connecting with a tremendous source of healing within. Health is a state where all aspects of body and mind are in balance. Through meditation practice, the mind's natural freedom begins to shine through whatever arises in everyday life, bringing us confidence and skillfulness in our action.

At the heart of the Buddha's teachings lie the ancient meditation practices of Dzogchen, taught by Sogyal Rinpoche, heir to the 2,500 years of wisdom of Buddha. Rinpoche blends teaching with meditation, exploring the expansive Dzogchen view and showing how it can be integrated into everyday living. This weekend will be a valuable introduction for beginners and of special interest to those who have attended Rinpoche's previous workshops and wish to deepen their practice. $350

Lacey Fosburgh

Is your writing not going as well as you'd like? Have you reached a plateau? Is there something you're trying to write, but you feel blocked? Does your writing lack something but you don't know what? Or maybe you want to become an even better writer but don't know how?

This workshop will explore such issues as voice, point of view, style, conceptualization, significance, and especially, your personal relationship with your material. This will be done with an eye toward discovering the way, the vision, that works for you. The goal will be to develop an understanding of what you're trying to write and finding further resources and inspiration that will free your creative energy. When a breakthrough comes in the creative process, your power and talent are liberated.

Each person in the workshop will receive individual attention and discussion. We will spend time writing and then read each other's work. An aware, psychological approach to writing and the writing process allows you to understand more clearly what attracts you to your material. You can also then discover what may be holding you back from wherever it is you want to go.

The workshop is open to any kind of writing project. $350

Burnout: Causes and Cures

Elliot Waker Aronson & Ayala Pines

This workshop is designed for people who give service to others and are experiencing burnout. It will explore the impact of burnout on both the service provider and the client, ways of finding and recognizing support resources on the job, and positive methods of dealing with burnout and life's tedium. Through lectures and group discussions, participants will have the opportunity to increase their understanding of those aspects of their own work and life that could cause burnout. In addition, they will be provided with the tools and opportunity to learn how to handle these problems in order to increase the productivity and creativity of their relationships with clients and colleagues.

The Subtle Self

Judy Blackstone

All spiritual traditions refer to an essential dimension of existence, calling it unity consciousness, emptiness, universal consciousness, and many other names. This dimension is not an abstract concept. It is the core of our own true nature and can be experienced by anyone who is willing to approach it with patience and openness. Unity consciousness is experienced as clear, mirror-like space, pervading our body and our environment, transcending the duality of self and object. It is deeper than the physical and energetic levels of our being, and beyond our psychological defenses, projections, images, and archetypes. Subtle Self Work is a precise method for attuning to the clear space of unity consciousness.

In this workshop we will explore how to relate to others in this clear space, how to commune with nature, how to experience and live in the inner depths of our body. Participants will use daily sitting meditation, sounds to stimulate the subtle channels in the body, subtle movement exercises, and verbal and movement process work to stabilize and expand our sense of unity consciousness. In this essential dimension of ourselves, we can find the source of our love, clarity, vitality, and peace.

A Week with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $675

Understanding Differences: A Myers-Briggs Perspective

Maggie Seeley & Mark Seidler

Differences in personal preference create excitement, attraction, and synergy. They can also be the source of great tension and misunderstanding between friends, lovers, colleagues, and family members. Understanding differences can transform these relationships.

Based on the work of Carl Jung, the Myers-Briggs Type indicator is a user friendly personality test which reveals personal likes and dislikes about almost everything (food, lovers, jobs). The personality types include extraverts/introverts, sensors/intuitives, thinkers/feelers, and judgers/perceivers. Although these pairs appear to be opposites, they are both parts of the whole of ourselves—light and dark, conscious and unconscious, feminine and masculine.

Participants will take the MBTI and then be treated to an in-depth exploration of how the 16 personality types are energized, and examine their tendencies to collect and process data, make business decisions, choose mates and friends, select careers, resolve conflict, create spiritual paths, and improve organizational life. Exploring our many sides can provide us with new options for personal growth and freedom. $675

Letting Go – Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Beliefs, fear, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate — in the moment — to ourselves, to our work, and to those we love.

The workshop includes periods of intense body work for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dream work, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge. This workshop will have no more than 30 participants. $350

Leonard Shlain

The origin of the word "physics" means nature. Both artists and physicists are engaged in an ongoing attempt to describe nature's reality. The artist uses chiefly image and metaphor; the physicist, number and equation. This seminar will explore the connections between the conceptual ideas inherent in revolutionary art movements and the visionary breakthroughs that have occurred in physics.

Throughout history, but particularly in the modern era, the artist sees the world in a new way. Later, the physicist discovers a new way to think about the world. When these two opposing viewpoints are superimposed on each other, their images and insights are seen to have an uncanny similarity. In this workshop, Leonard Shlain will explore the idea that they are but two different aspects of the same reality.

The changing view of three basic constructs — space, time, and light — in various periods of art, science, and culture will be the basis for a slide show and discussion that explore the reciprocal nature between cubism and a new concept of space, futurism and a new concept of time, and fauvism as a new concept of light. From there, attention will turn to a theory of consciousness which posits the split brain model in the individual as the source of the art/science division in the general culture. Stressing the need to combine the two hemispheric viewpoints, we will examine the benefits that accrue when art is seen in terms of its precognitive ability, and when the imagery of modern physics is understood.

There will be no equations and one need not have a background in either art of physics to enjoy and participate in this workshop. The only prerequisites are a sense of wonder, curiosity, and an open mind. $350

Acting is Doing

Stephen Book

Remove the restrictions, both inner and outer, which suppress the spontaneity of any human being, and his/her natural spontaneity will show itself as artistic creativeness. In this workshop, complicated theater techniques are transformed into simple game forms which produce spontaneous behavior through playing. True playing is spontaneous and requires focus — the absorption in what one is doing, to the exclusion of other thoughts.

This experiential workshop, which is designed for the layperson, emphasizes playing and focusing. Participants will heighten and focus energy, increase communication skills, extend powers of observation and concentration, and improvise imagined realities. $675

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

Couples Workshop

Jack Rosenberg
& Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead, they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

A Course in Miracles

Julian Silverman

"A Course in Miracles" is a curriculum which uses the mind to empower, inspire, and enjoy oneself. In it, conventional problem-oriented human thinking is regarded as an oppressive force, a force which needs to be understood and then neutralized. The method and perspective of the course is based on the following goals:

- Upgrading our ordinary ways of making sense of things
- Learning how to recognize life's trials as opportunities to heal ourselves, and how to take advantage of these opportunities
- Learning to re-cognize and to recollect routinely and to fulfill our essential value and purposes as human beings. $675

Ishta: The Yoga of Empowerment

Rod Stryker

Every human being is a uniquely gifted individual. We are each endowed with physical, intellectual, emotional, energetic, and spiritual capacities that, when honored and cultivated, direct us to limitless achievement. Yoga can show us how to awaken these powers and discover our own way to self-mastery.

Participants in this workshop will practice the tools of Ishta Yoga, a tradition which combines the Yogas for body, mind, and energy cultivation. To unlock our individual potentials we will use yogic postures to strengthen and relax the body; breathing, chanting, and meditation to still and open the mind; and visualization to awaken the psyche's untapped resources. Open discussion and sharing will be used to help personalize our processes and find deeper enjoyment in keeping these ancient traditions alive.

All levels are welcome; the only requirement is the desire to grow. In order to begin our daily practice on an empty stomach, morning sessions will be held from 8:00 to 9:30 instead of the customary 10:00-12:00. For further information please contact the leader at (213) 393-5150. $350

Imagery and Healing

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

The imagination is a perennial, yet newly celebrated, healing resource. It is a bridge between body and mind, a manifestation of the human spirit. The image forms the creative juices and allows transcendence.

This workshop will explore, beyond the confines of modern medicine and psychology, the potent realm of imagination as healer. The potential for self- and transpersonal healing will be experienced through sound, image, meditation, and other tools to shift consciousness. A rationale for the use of mind in the crisis of illness will be given, using information on the forefront of science.

The presenters, pioneers in the study and practice of imagery, will introduce their ideas, practices, and visions for the future. The workshop may be of interest to persons who are working or studying in the health professions and to those who are confronted with chronic or catastrophic illness.

Introduction to Gestalt Practice

Joyce Lyke

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless,
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear —
And when used — is inexhaustible.
—Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form — nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is *intra*personal rather than *inter*personal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomlishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Minding your Health

Nicholas Hall

There is convincing evidence that chronic stress has an impact on cardiovascular disease, and mounting evidence to shows its effect on the immune system as well. Current research is discovering that the components of "health" are varied — diet, exercise, vitamins, relaxation, imagery, animal bonding, and social support, can all possibly help reverse the adverse effects of stress and disease.

This workshop will explore some of the research being done by Nicholas Hall, Director of the Division of Psychoimmunology at the University of South Florida School of Medicine, and his research team. The research involves, for example:

- cancer patients using guided imagery to boost their immune system
- actors and actresses using performance to induce personality changes which have been correlated with measures of the immune system
- studies of stress behaviors and communication patterns in whales and dolphins

Stress assessment and management techniques will be explored and discussed. Participants will have an opportunity to hear and participate in discussions about the latest theories in health research, and how these ideas and possibilities might apply to their own lives.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vispassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clear," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continual change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness through the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life. $350

Opening the Feelings

Dale Cummings

Participants will employ Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants. Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexuality intensify and merge. $675

Dreaming: The Magic Mirror that Never Lies

Jeremy Taylor

Participants will share and work with their dreams, drawing upon timeless mythological/archetypal images that shape our contemporary individual and collective lives. Although the focus will be dream interpretation in a collective context, the methods are designed to give participants the ability to engage in their own dream work upon returning home.

Those people who are just beginning to explore the world of their dreams, as well as professionals who work with dreams, are welcome. As Jeremy Taylor comments, "Only the dreamer can say with any certainty what meanings his or her dreams may hold, and dream work is one of the few activities that puts beginners and experts on an equal emotional footing from the outset."

Crazy Wisdom: A Weekend of Philosophy and Laughter

Wes "Scoop" Nisker & Paul Krassner

What a fine comedy this world would be if one did not play a part in it. —Diderot

This is more like a *play*shop than a workshop, but that doesn't mean there is nothing important to be gained here. Perhaps there is nothing more useful these days than to cultivate the art of play and laughter, and to learn how not to take ourselves so seriously.

This weekend is designed to help people develop both their comic and cosmic perspectives. Through talks, discussion, writing exercises, and theater games, participants will explore their own sense of humor as well as their philosophy of life. Sessions will include the presentation of Zen and Taoist wisdom tales (the lighter side of enlightenment), trickster stories, Mark Twain's dark writings, some poetry and jokes, and audio- and videotapes of some of the great satirists and comedians, including Charlie Chaplin, Lenny Bruce, Nichols and May, Robin Williams, and Woody Allen. There will be discussion of the uses of humor in the helping professions and in people's everyday lives. This popular Esalen workshop will not necessarily help you to be funny, but should help you to see funny. At least one belly laugh is guaranteed.

Waking up at Midlife

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

In the middle of their years many sense their habitual concerns mediocre and their lives not glad enough. Whence the endless summer day? Inexorable evening cannot be ignored. The chill advances. A crisis occurs. At the farthest point of excursion into ordinariness, and not yet falling back again toward the center, there is a stop. In an instant of suspended movement all seems uncannily strange. What was self-evident yesterday? Today it has become repugnant. Events appear to be repeating a recipe or leading nowhere while experiences of great import hover just out of reach.

We will dedicate this weekend to the reexamination of our ideals and our actual life circumstances. Others appear to know some secret of orientation or happiness. What is it? Come prepared to question, to explore, and above all to confront yourself. Bring your journal. We will have the help of philosophers and the succour of great music but — as Auden put it — "look if you like, but you will have to leap."

Eco-Design

Sim Van der Ryn

Eco-design is an emerging discipline that transcends traditional boundaries. If we are to have a future, we must take responsibility for being part of nature; and this participation must not be as conqueror, but as a coevolving, harmonious force that synergyzes biosphere and technosphere using the approach and tools of eco-design.

In this workshop, we begin with examining the ideas and work of the patron saints of eco-design: Mumford, Bateson, Fuller, Wright, Steiner, and others. We will survey the history of success and failure, and examine today's state-of-the-art and future potentials for sustainable and regenerative alternatives for eco-design. $350

Susan Harper & Steven Harper

Nature is a primary teacher of movement, creativity, and awareness. Being outdoors in the richness and beauty of the natural world awakens our outer senses. Continuum movement takes us inward, heightening the awareness of our inner senses. These five days will combine both practices, integrating the subtle inner explorations that Continuum movement inspires with the activity of day-hiking in the magnificent Big Sur backcountry.

The day-hikes will introduce participants to basic and increasingly-refined awareness practices to enhance their sensitivity to all that wilderness and being out-of-doors offers. In doing so, not only will there be contact with the natural world, but it will be an opportunity to reawaken those elements of wilderness within.

In the indoor sessions, participants will explore movements which express and embody what they have taken in during their walks, enlivening their ability to feel what they see in nature, as well as their own inner nature. Engaging with this sensual environment, the group will play with movement, breath, sound, dreams, and ritual.

This is a time for contact with nature and wilderness, inside and out. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance. $675

Iyengar Yoga

Clé Souren & Nanda Peek

The yoga of B.K.S. Iyengar has brought a revitalized spring of healthy life into the ancient art of yoga, making it accessible to those of us living in the twentieth century.

Iyengar yoga is an active stretching and extending of all parts of the body in which strong and active use of the joints is crucial. It focuses on physical and mental awareness, harmonizing the over-stretched and strained parts of the body, and stimulating the stiff and previously impenetrable parts into aliveness. Supple joints and a strong harmonious functioning of the muscles gives freedom to the body and mind.

Participants will be constantly monitored, corrected, and adjusted. Where necessary, props will be used in order to grasp the asana (posture), so even the difficult ones are never avoided. Intelligence in the body is developed by cultivating insight and understanding of the movement, possibilities and difficulties of the body. Postures are never merely done for the sake of the posture itself. This is what distinguishes the Iyengar method from other approaches in Hatha yoga.

Although Iyengar Yoga is vigorous and physical and mentally demanding, it is accessible to all. $350

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive

Ayala Pines

When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. Unfortunately, more often than not, with the effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, or major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfactions, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find their own romantic images they shared at the beginning of their relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive in their relationships and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

Edwin Bernbaum

Mountains have an extraordinary power to evoke a sense of the sacred. Because of the overwhelming sense of wonder and awe they awaken, they have come to reflect the highest and most central values of religions and cultures throughout the world.

Through a combination of slides and personal experience, Edwin Bernbaum will explore the rich and varied symbolism of mountains expressed in different cultures through their religion, philosophy, literature, history, and art. The workshop will focus on relating these expressions of human longings to the issues and concerns facing us today. Comparisons with traditional views of sacred mountains will highlight the singular role that mountains have played in our efforts to preserve the environment, both wild and civilized.

Through discussion and exercises, participants will explore the ways in which sacred peaks can open us to the experience of a deeper reality and promote our spiritual growth, even in cities far from the sight of the mountains themselves.

Making it Float

Robert Hall

There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float. —Conroy

Robert Hall writes: "And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you're willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt/group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you're interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we'll not only make it float, we'll take a ride in it." $675

When Success is Not Enough

Peller Marion

If I had known what it would be like to have it all, I would have settled for less.
—Lily Tomlin

Since 1950, materialism has sky-rocketed in the United States. Indeed, many of us are wealthy beyond the wildest dreams of our ancestors, and yet we struggle more than ever for self-esteem and meaning in our lives.

When alternative measures of success are not available, the deep human need to be valued and respected by others is acted out through consumption. Buying things becomes both a means of self-esteem and social acceptance. "The avarice of mankind is insatiable," wrote Aristotle, who believed that as soon as one desire was satisfied, another would appear to take its place. If our wants are insatiable, there is simply no such thing as enough.

Peller Marion has designed a weekend that explores the questions: how much is enough? What is an achievement junkie? What is my definition of success at this time in my life? How do I create my own personal philosophy of life? How do I live by my own agenda?

Participants will have a supportive environment where they can experience and explore the paradox of success in their own life. A variety of experiential processes will be drawn from readings and discussion, games, dance, gestalt, imagery, and meditation.

Mirrors in the Dark: A Gestalt Dream Workshop

Christine Stewart Price
& Gestalt Staff

I believe that in a dream, we have a clear existential message of what's missing in our lives, what we avoid doing and living. —Fritz Perls

A dream is a wish your heart makes when you're fast asleep. —Cinderella (per Disney)

Using the approach of Gestalt practice, this weekend will be spent exploring our dreams and whatever they bring to light. This approach encourages us to see every image and situation in a dream as a projected part of ourselves or of our choices in life. The process involves entering each image or role and, by becoming it fully, experiencing and owning the possibilities and energy reflected within it. Although the leader will work with some individuals, the emphasis will be on learning how to explore our dreams by ourselves or with other group members, in order to develop the skills to continue this process after the group is over. This workshop is not intended to be introductory. Registration is limited to people who have previously worked with the leader, attended a Gestalt Practice workshop, or have a sturdy background in gestalt process work. Participants may want to prepare by keeping a written journal of their dreams in the weeks preceding the workshop. $350

A Workshop for Couples: Independence and Intimacy

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, "There is room for both of us." Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs.

In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken expectations they project onto each other, heal past hurts that create distance, and learn new ways of communicating. They will have a supportive environment where they can experience themselves as courageous and able to take risks. Experiential processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation. $350

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods for improving their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop is valuable for anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility — painlessly and immediately.

Vision and Embodiment

Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)

This is an educational introduction to vision fitness, integrating inner vision and outer sight. The focus is on discovering 1) how to relax, clear, and reeducate the eye and the self to see, and 2) how one's present reality is distorted or shaped by attitudes, beliefs, and feelings.

Participants will utilize the Bates method of eye relaxation, movement, breath, guided meditation, earth ritual, and the creative use of the Spoken Word. Together they will explore, discover, experience, and expand their vision of possibilities for themselves and the world in which they live.

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self lives the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; and individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $675

Awakening Vision Through Conscious Photography

Jeff Berner

Here was room for the imagination to work.
—Mark Twain

Whether you are a beginning or advanced photographer, explore nature, people, land, and wildlife through the "mirror with a memory." Jeff Berner will show you how to follow the path of photography as a meditation, a hobby, a sport, and an art.

As the author of five books in the field, including The Nikon Touch Photography Guide and The Photographic Experience, the leader can help discover each individual's talent, and provide a continuous flow of "Aha!" experiences with an informal and spontaneous teaching style.

Easy-going assignments will include: Looking at Seeing, The Psychology of Lenses, The Selective Eye (Composition), Depth of Field, A Still Life is Still Life, The Click that "Kills," Creative Accidents, Visual Meditation, and Uses of Color. We'll shoot and talk by day, and show and tell by night.

The workshop will emphasize the use of color slide film, but participants can also use print film. Any 35mm camera is adequate for the workshop, but a single lens reflex camera (SLR), such as a Pentax or Minolta, is preferable. The final evening will feature a group celebration of the projected results in a multi-media show with music. $675

Meeting the Shadow

Jeremiah Abrams

Shadow-work is a process through which we can become whole. By making conscious and integrating the dark aspect of our psyche, we gain the aspect of wholeness. The shadow is the keeper of the gate, the guardian of the threshold. Befriending the shadow allows us to gain the friendship of the self. It is here, in what we don't accept about ourselves, that we can achieve a more balanced personality by recognizing our projections onto others, defusing negativity, releasing guilt and shame, healing our relationships, and reclaiming our unlived creative energies.

In this workshop we will work to recover what has been repressed or denied, and try to find meaning in those parts of us that often remain hidden. Through awareness of the shadow personality, we can dissolve its unconscious power over our choices and mediate the tension between shadow and ego. We will learn to re-collect and attempt to integrate shadow projections that corrupt our relationships and our connection to the world. The leader will utilize dreamwork, trance induction, active imagination techniques (writing, drawing, and clay), bioenergetics, ritual, and the dialogues that evolve from the group's time together. $675

A Retreat for Women of Experience: Mid-Life and Beyond

Lenore Lefer & Anne Yeomans

The gifts of woman are many. They have too often been undervalued and made invisible until we sometimes cannot see them ourselves. Today, more than ever, the earth needs these gifts.

This is an opportunity for women in midlife and beyond to come together to explore the issues that are on our minds and in our hearts. What are the challenges we each face? How can we support each other in reclaiming and honoring our passion, our tears and our outrage, our laughter, and our beauty? How can we express our deepest values at this time in our lives?

The retreat will include time to speak and tell our stories, and time for silence. Each day will include periods of hatha yoga, walking meditation, and group process.

Themes to be explored will include:

- cultural perspectives on the older woman
- issues of loneliness and companionship
- the wisdom of the body
- sexuality and intimacy
- menopause
- power and self-expression
- self-care in the midst of responsibilities
- spiritual questions of mid-life

It is our hope that these days together will strengthen our trust and renew our spirit, so that we can return to our lives with more joy, more tenderness toward ourselves and others, and more boldness towards living all that is important to us. $675

Annual Children's Safari: A Music and Dance Festival for 7-Year Olds and Up

Babatunde Olatunji & Ensemble

Through storytelling, chanting, and learning African rhythms in drumming and dancing, children will work toward a performance guided by Babatunde Olatunji and his ensemble of musicians and dancers who teach musical ritual world-wide.

Olatunji's message is more than musical: it carries a dedication for the future: "We hope that children's programs will become the concern of all who work diligently for a peaceful world, full of love, for those who take our places tomorrow. Omelere — children are the reward of life."

Coordinated by Lia Thompson-Clark and Ivy Mayer, this workshop is open to children whose parents are attending a concurrent seminar. $350

Journey Home

Eli Jaxon-Bear

The leaders write: "The Journey Home is not for beginners on the path. There are too many unsettling paradoxes along the way. For instance, it is a journey of no leaving, and you can't get there from here.

"The Journey Home is not sentimental. It is not about hope. Hope is a way of avoiding what already is in the moment. The Journey Home is a way of recognizing the truth of each moment. The Journey Home is an awakening from a long dream.

"The ego wants desperately to fix life and make it more comfortable, make it better, make it more spiritual. In these five days, we will utilize and then abandon ego-strengthening methods. The inner child will try to be rescued and abandoned along the way. The habits of character fixation as a way of avoiding one's true nature will be examined and worked with in detail." $1025

Living in the Body, Living in the Moment

Richard Strozzi Heckler

For over 20 years Lomi School has done pioneering work in the field of mind/body disciplines. The techniques of touch, breathe, and movement will be used to center us in fully living each moment. $350

Practical Intuition: Introduction

Laura Day

We are all psychics. Every time we draw a conclusion, we work with intuition as well as linear and emotional processes. Identifying how our intuitive faculty works enables us to use it selectively for effective decision-making. A predominantly linear process may be preferable when clear, empirical information is available. When little data is at hand or if the question relates to how current choices might affect future results, an intuitive process may be more efficient and appropriate.

Practical Intuition, an experiential workshop, introduces intuitive methods for gaining empirical information. Participants will give and receive several present and future intuitive readings a day, focusing on predicting and retrieving verifiable data. Different intuitive styles, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, and telepathy, will be taught, along with exercises for continued training at home.

Participants are requested to bring a few photographs of themselves and people they know well, their personal and business questions, and a willingness to work as if they already knew how to do something that they in fact already know how to do. $350

The Art of Leadership: Excellence in Business, Management, and Communication

while in the Experts mind there are few."
—Suzuki

Ron Alexander & Bruce Gregory

- Discovering and addressing blind spots in self-esteem
- Development of creative strategies for building support systems that facilitate the transformation of Visions into Realities.

Some of the group processes will include: feedback on communication and leadership styles, role-playing, problem-solving exercises for real life work situations, and developing way to use the unconscious to solve problems creatively.

Zero Balancing: Basic I & II

Fritz Smith

Zero Balancing is a simple method for aligning body structure with body energy. Western science has shown that energy and matter are fundamentally coupled; advances in psychology have shown that the body and mind are also interconnected. Zero Balancing is born out of these perceptions, with roots in both Eastern and Western concepts of body function and structure. It is based on the experience that the balance of energy and structure within the body has a direct effect on the physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual health of an individual.

The structural/energetic interface of the body is beneath conscious awareness; when imbalances occur at this level, the body tends to compensate around them rather than resolve them directly. These imbalances often lead to loss of vitality, chronic body pain, and decreased potential for vibrant health. Zero Balancing can assist in overcoming these imbalanced patterns through touch.

In this workshop, anatomy, physiology, and skills of touch will be reviewed. Eastern concepts of chi energy, its movement in the body and the chakra system, will be discussed. Zero Balancing methods will be presented, including those for evaluating and balancing the structural/energetic interface of the body. The workshop will be both didactic and experiential, with emphasis on new body work skills, and is open to all people in the healing arts. It is approved for C.E. credit for acupuncturists (and nurses —see below), and as Z.B. I or II in the Zero Balancing certification program.

Partnerships of Love and Work: The Enneagram of Relationships

Helen Palmer

The logic and integrity of different styles of relating is modeled by an ancient typology called the enneagram. This typology identifies nine personality types and the ways in which they interact. The outer study of the system correlates well with current psychological thinking, but describes optimal ways of relating rather than pathological trends. No way is better than another, but they differ radically in their point of view. At a deeper level of understanding, the preoccupations of thought and emotion that characterize each type are revealed as a continuum of experience that leads us to aspects of type such as empathy, omnisience, and love.

We will review the nine types from panels drawn from the class, and in so doing experience the styles of other seminar participants without interference from our own relationship bias. Adopting the view of a close companion breeds compassion and allows us:

- to see ourselves through the eyes of others, and feel the pressure of their emotional life
- recognize those "irreconcilable differences" that are simply the result of different internal logic
- understand different views on relating
- transform our tendencies into their higher attributes

Emphasis will be on inner material, not personal process work. This is a highly interactive format. Bring your current relationship questions. This intensive can be applied as one of the requirements for the Enneagram Professional Training Program. Previous work with the enneagram is required. If you would like to discuss your background with this material, contact the leader at (415) 843-7621. Workshop is limited to 40 participants.

Body Rejuvenation

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is to start to rejuvenate the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body. Transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain. Work on changing the despondent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat one.

The recipe for beginning to rejuvenate a body in one session will be demonstrated to the group, and then experienced and performed by each participant.

This seminar is recommended for everyone. The older you are, the more stuff you have to work with. Class size is limited (two students per table). Bring a swimsuit — two piece for women.

Recommended reading: Leigh, A Zen Approach to Bodytherapy, From Rolf to Feldenkrais to Tanouye Roshi (University of Hawaii Press). $350

High Performance: Making Allies of Our Conflicting Forces

Jerry Fletcher, Edward Hinkelman & Kelle Olwyler

A well-known, but little understood, aspect of high level human performance is that contradictory behaviors seem to exist simultaneously. Everyone has contradictory and paradoxical qualities, but most people do not know how to synthesize and reconcile them. High levels of performance are not reached through a compromise between contradictory qualities, but rather through their integration. An entrepreneur at his or her best is not half "conservative" and half "risk-taker" — a sprinter at his or her best is not half "relaxed" and half "sprinting." There is instead a state of "flow", in which the two states are fully present and merged in a way that optimizes one's ability for maximum performance.

This workshop will help individuals identify and learn to use their seemingly contradictory qualities to produce high performance results, particularly in activities that are not as satisfying and productive as they could be. A significant portion of the workshop will be devoted to individualized applications, as well as to the problem of managing conflicting external demands with a balanced, effective, personal response. $350

A Workshop for Couples

David Schiffman

This workshop will focus on reawakening and developing positive, mutual supports that are at the root of satisfying couple relationships. The emphasis will be on creating clear and truthful expressions of loving behavior and personal integrity. Participants will re-examine their beliefs and habits through the use of intuitional sensing, risk-taking structures, guided imagery, and gestalt awareness methods.

CoHousing: Creating Your Own Community

Kathryn McCamant & Charles Durrett

Dramatic demographic and economic changes have created a mismatch between today's household and most conventional American housing. Households experience this mismatch as they face a child-care crisis, deepening isolation, and a chronic time crunch. Things we once took for granted — family, community, a sense of belonging — must now be actively sought out.

CoHousing addresses many of these needs. Developed by the residents themselves, communities are made up of private dwellings complemented by extensive common facilities, such as a dining hall, children's play area, workshop, guest rooms, and laundry facilities. Each dwelling is autonomous, yet the common house, with the opportunity for shared dinners and childcare, is a focal point of the community.

This workshop gives participants an overview of organizing, planning, and designing a CoHousing community from site acquisition through construction and management. Topics will include:

- An overview of the CoHousing development process, from initial meetings to moving in
- Development strategies and the advantages/disadvantages of working with a developer
- Forming and working with a group, and organizing for effective decision-making;
- Financial options, ownership structures, money realities
- Designing for community: architectural considerations
- The next steps: your role, the group's role, services of professionals
- What other CoHousing groups are doing: the network and how to plug in.

The Body and Zen

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is twofold: 1) to use body work methods and principles for releasing tension, trauma, and toxins from connective tissue; and 2) to circulate the vital energy in an aligned body. The group will draw from Rolfing® (structure), Feldenkrais® (function), and Zen (energy) to obtain these goals.

This is a hands-on workshop. Participants will give and receive body work and learn methods to recognize, work with, and relieve some types of chronic muscle pain. The class will be limited in size (two people per table). Participants are asked to bring a swimsuit, two-piece for women. Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive body work outside of class.

Painting via Creative Dreams

Rachel Heller

Rachel Heller is an Israeli artist who has developed a method that links the creative process in painting with the creative aspect of dreams. The workshop begins with one participant relating a dream. The other members of the group paint their version of the dream — using water-based acrylics, crayons, and pastels — through their own inner processes and feelings. The leader facilitates a dialogue between participants so that the creative process of the dreamer is linked to the creative process of the painters; this is done in part by enlarging, projecting, and connecting the dream to events of the previous day. The result is a single large-scale painting by the dreamer and a series of small paintings by the other participants. Both artistic strengths and individual creative processes come forth in this interplay.

Participants are asked to record a recent dream and the events of the preceding day to be used as raw material in the class. Five dreams will be chosen for the week; one will be presented each day. Prior painting experience is not necessary. Materials are provided; please note materials fee below.

$675 (plus $70 materials fee paid directly to the leader)

Sexual Abuse Survivors: Strategies for Body, Mind and Spiritual Healing

Carolyn Braddock

Countless numbers of children consider the exploitation of their bodies part of their formative experience. Trusted adults assault, neglect, and sexually abuse them, leaving physical and emotional scars. Professional counselors and others need special skills to work with these victims/survivors, and the survivors themselves need special skills to overcome the physical and emotional consequences of being abused.

The primary focus of the workshop will be to empower both the practitioner and the client to work from both cognitive and body-oriented approaches. The workshop will offer a new body-focused dimension to traditional strategies in dealing with sexual abuse. Participants will discuss the victim survivors' body, mind and spiritual belief systems, and the physical and behavioral manifestations of moving beyond these experiences. The importance of understanding the various dimensions of a person's reactions to sexual abuse — especially body reactions — is the key to developing predictive tools and guidance for the intervention process.

The leader will present specific intervention strategies and will detail patterns of child abuse and neglect, family dynamics, and body reactions. Much of the work will be experiential. Participants will participate in intervention demonstrations, case presentations, and discussions of ethical and legal issues. The focus will be on individual and group process. Breath work, sound, movement, gestalt, body work, Tai Ji, role-playing, and creative cognitive work will also be used.

Time will allow for some individual work within the seminar and for scheduling massage and other body work.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 49-50. $675

A Week with David Schiffman

To make effective, creative, choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

In this week, participants will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Exploring Dimensions of Healing

Elizabeth Stratton

The desire to heal and be healed is a deep need within every human being. Seeing someone we love in pain brings out the instinct to touch that person in a compassionate way. Feeling or being ill ourselves can lead us to explore both spiritual and scientific dimensions of healing that we would otherwise not be open to.

Psychic healing, with its focus on the laying on of hands, understanding the meaning of the illness, and seeing into the heart of the person who is ill, brings a spiritual dimension to healing that can be a valuable adjunct to modern medicine and its high technology.

This five-day workshop will provide both theoretical and practical tools to awaken the healer within. Self-healing methods such as opening the energy centers (chakras), communicating with the body, and guided healing imagery will be explored to assist participants in taking charge of their own health. In addition, participants will begin to learn to work with others in a healing capacity through laying on of hands and psychic scanning.

Movement from the Martial Arts

Yoshi Sakuyama & David Streeter

This weekend workshop will offer participants a wonderful opportunity to absorb the spirit of Shorinji Kempo, a Japanese martial art that is rooted in Zen Buddhism. Yoshi Sakuyama, a sixth-dan master from Japan, will introduce a basic exercise system that is the foundation for many martial arts strategies.

These powerful yet simple katas or dance-like movements amplify vital intrinsic energies that flow from the center of the body.

It means telling the truth and seeing life and the self through the eyes of compassionate truth.

This workshop provides an opportunity for those individuals who are in the recovery process to develop the healing skills necessary to create a new life. Creating a New Life

Elizabeth Stratton

Recovering from addiction often requires spiritual strength — the recognition of the healing power of our relationship with God. It gives the recovery process meaning and the individual a will to live.

Creating a new life during recovery is a challenging process. To let go of the past while recovering from it means to see life through new eyes. Beginning each day anew requires dedication, courage, and compassion for the self that is being reborn. It means telling the truth and seeing life and the self through the eyes of compassionate truth.

This workshop provides an opportunity for those individuals who are in the recovery process to develop the healing skills necessary to create a new life. Experiential work will include: establishing and nurturing a relationship with God; self-forgiveness and forgiving others; telling the truth and releasing fear; turning anger into the will to live; healing the physical body from years of abuse; opening the inner energy system through meditation and imagery; developing psychic strength and protection from other people's negativity and addictive behaviors; and experiencing bliss through spiritual substance rather than substance abuse.

Healing the Wounded Heart: The Art of Re-bonding

George Kohlrieser

From cradle to grave, life involves a changing script of "affectional bonds." These bonds are different from dependency and are essential for growth, health, and happiness. Attachment theory is a way to conceptualize the tendency of humans (and other mammals) to make strong affectional bonds with particular others, a way to explain many forms of physical, emotional, and spiritual distress, including emotional detachment, depression, and burnout. Life energy is connected to the quality and depth of emotional bonding.

This experiential workshop will focus on the patterns of forming, maintaining, breaking, and renewing affectional bonds. Methods include guided affective imagery, emotional release, group process, and bonding work to understand, create, and celebrate positive emotional attachments.

Reawakening the Inner Child Through Film

Francis Lu and Brother David Steindl-Rast

Return to the beginning: Become a child again. — Tao Te Ching.

The child's delight in the movies can be reawakened in our adult life. There is a magic power to cinema. Through image, sound, and action, film can portray with unique power the joys and sorrows of childhood. It can help renew within us innocence, wonder, and creativity. This may open our eyes for surprising discoveries.

Central to this seminar will be the discovery of the child within each one of us. Many have been helped by finding the right film at the right time. Should this help be left to chance? Like reading a novel, viewing a film is an art. Practicing this art for five days can heighten our enjoyment and deepen our insight.

For the third time, this annual gathering will bring together film enthusiasts, be they professionally connected with cinema or merely private movie buffs. In leisure we shall view and discuss timeless classics as well as hard to obtain and little known masterpieces of the screen. All this in the incomparable setting of Esalen: A film festival and more than that! $675

Intermediate Craniosacral Workshop

Hugh Milne

This class is dedicated to a more specific understanding of the scope of craniosacral work, building upon the foundation of the introductory class. The focus is on cranial dysfunction patterns in the mouth, the spheno-basilar and the temporo-mandibular joints. An amplified technical repertoire of coupled holds and spanning techniques will be explained and demonstrated. Further work on non-verbal perception and diagnosis will complement and balance the analytical approach. The challenge is to perceive the way that the head communicates as an intelligent, somatically articulate realm of body consciousness, acted on and responding — instinctually or intelligently — to tension, trauma and joy.

Transitions

Elliot Waker Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg

Disorganization is a natural part of transition and facilitates reorganization. People are almost constantly in a state of transition — whether it be getting married, beginning a new career, becoming a parent, letting go of a relationship, or moving on to the next stage in the life cycle. These changes can be exciting and, at the same time, can cause us to lose our sense of internal balance. The result can be loss of self-esteem, confusion about one's identity, and doubts about one's perceptions. New feelings and ideas are fragile during these periods of transition and require special nurturance.

The goal of this workshop is to gain perspective on the process of making transitions. Through guided fantasies, self-exploration, and didactic presentations, participants may develop ways of enhancing their understanding of themselves and increasing their overall effectiveness.

Illness and Awareness: Applying the Enneagram to Healing

Marlene Cresci Cohen, France Doyle & Irene Terestman

Illness presents an opportunity to increase awareness and self-expression. People can become healthier precisely because of illness; illness makes self-defeating patterns more visible and opens us to change and healing. It can also give us a clearer perspective on what really matters in our lives.

The Enneagram offers a window through which patterns of attention that limit awareness can be observed. It is a system that identifies personality types and styles of communication and illuminates issues of self-preservation. A useful adjunct to Western concepts of personality, the Enneagram can assist the person experiencing medical symptoms as well as the healthcare practitioner in identifying self-obstructive behavior and improving communication in the healing process.

This workshop is for participants who have both an interest in the Enneagram and in health. It is suitable for physicians, nurses, psychologists, social workers, healthcare teams, and academic and clinical educators in these fields. The workshop is also for people who want to increase awareness of their own patterns of attention and can see the possibility of using their medical history as a springboard to self-recognition.

Panels of exemplars of the nine types represented in the Enneagram will be used to help participants identify opportunities for intervention. Modalities including meditation, Eidetic Imagery, and hypnosis will be presented as they apply to self-care. Participants should have some previous training or familiarity with the Enneagram.

The Awakened Mind: Brainwave Training

Anna Wise

Inside each person there lies a wealth of knowledge, capabilities, and power rarely transmitted to the conscious mind. Brainwave training combined with meditation and biofeedback monitoring helps develop these deeper resources, allowing access to greater creativity, reduced stress, and a deeper awareness and understanding of your inner self.

By assessing the brainwave patterns of hundreds of people who function unusually well, C. Maxwell Cade of the Institute for Psychobiological Research in London began to see similarities in the patterns of optimal states of mind. Drawing upon Cade's work, Anna Wise has developed a training program to help access these optimum states.

Different methods of meditation, visualization, and psycho-physiological relaxation affect our brainwaves in particular ways, as do specific acts such as tongue, eye, and body positions. In this workshop you will learn techniques for brainwave development and management, and begin to determine which methods of practice are best for your particular brainwave pattern.

You will also address how you can use these optimum states once they are achieved for your own creativity, mental flexibility, self-healing, problem solving, and spiritual development. The Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns, and each participant will be able to use an Electrical Skin Resistance Meter to measure the depth of arousal or relaxation of the nervous system.

Techno-animism: Mysteries of Virtual Reality

Britt Welin & Ken Adams

Is information immortal? What unexplored realms of spirit will we encounter with amazing new computer and electronic media? As cyberspace and synthetic realities evolve, we can anticipate an emergence of unnamed opportunities and challenges.

New myths will be needed; new secrets will be experienced. How can ancient models of mind such as shamanism, Hinduism, and voodoo help us comprehend silicon consciousness? Why are neuroenhancers crucial to so many computer innovators? Can couples share an erotic relationship with a machine spirit?

Rose *X is a partnership between Britt Welin and Ken Adams devoted to exploring the psychedelic applications of videographics and sound design. They have produced "The Experiment at Petaluma with Terence McKenna" and "Chaos*Gaia*Eros: A Post-Savage Oracle with Ralph Abraham."

This workshop will offer a hands-on opportunity to examine some of these new possibilities with computers and electronic media. Discussions and demonstrations from the weekend will be "sampled" electronically and woven into a "video Oracle" to document and embody the event. Copies of the resulting video tape will be provided to all participants. $350

Creative Bonding: Changing Destructive Detachment

George Kohlrieser

Recent medical and psychological research validates the idea that "no man is an island" and that bonding behavior to people, pets, places, things, and goals is central to physical, psychological, and spiritual well-being. Disruption in the bonding-grieving cycle can lead to destructive detachment, victimization, and chronic loneliness which can shorten one's life and limit the quality of genuine aliveness.

Through presentations, guided imagery, emotional release, and group process, participants can explore, reinforce, or establish new and more effective ways to keep the bonding process alive and healthy.

Fathers and Sons

Michael Barnett

This workshop will strive to create a group ritual that will herald a new beginning in the relationship between fathers and sons. We will pursue eclectic techniques of drawing, visualization, and group process to look at the past and present father/son relationship. These same techniques will then be used to mutually create a vision for the future. Our group ritual will be a celebration of this new direction. Group size will be limited to seven fathers and sons. A father may bring as many sons as he wishes.

All group members are requested to bring: 1) pictures of themselves as a child; 2) any clothing, musical instrument or artifact that has symbolic meaning; and 3) a heart to move in a new direction. $350

Expanding Self-Expression

Paula Shaw

Many of us become inhibited when we find ourselves around a group of people. Whether we know them or not, our sense of freedom and intimacy, and the confidence to be ourselves simply disappears, and we disappear in the process. What happens to our sense of self and the integrity of our communication ability? Why do we feel threatened or insecure? Why is it so difficult to express who we really are?

This workshop will explore these issues and provide a safe space to experience the feelings and fears that keep us inhibited. We will experiment with personal risk-taking in a way that makes it exciting, challenging, and appealing. Our goal will be to unlock ourselves in order to find clarity and joy in our self-expression with others. Acting and creative communication games, physical and vocal exercises, and individual and groupwork will be used to find our way through inhibitions to joyful self-expression. The process will also be fun and playful, so be prepared to enjoy the group!

Request: a one- to three-minute memorized performance piece of any kind — monologue, passage, poem, song — original or not. $675

Spiritual Healing: Laying On of Hands

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman & Alfred Pomerleau

This workshop will present practical methods of using the hands as instruments for physical and spiritual healing. The emphasis will be on intentionality and personal clarity as fundamental tools in any healing art.

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman studied and lived at Esalen for nine years. She currently studies with healers in Brazil and has a private practice in Rio de Janeiro where she applies Brazilian and North American approaches to healing.

Living Meditations

Judyth Weaver

In our busy lives we do so much — but how do we do it? Are we fully aware of our actions and the consequences of what we do? Are our actions as appropriate and response-able as they could be? Could our lives be easier or more energetically economical? What are we doing to/with ourselves, and how does that affect us and others, our health, our relationships, work, longevity, our well-being?

This workshop encourages participants to "tune in" and become more aware on many levels of how they live. The work is experiential; through awareness of breath, self, and each other, and by focusing on everyday activities such as walking, sitting, standing, and touching, participants develop a fuller sense of mindfulness. This direct study of one's experience provides a practice ground for change and can suggest ways to facilitate it. Increased awareness of personal needs and desires can expand the possibilities for becoming a fuller, more realized, happier, and healthier human being.

Rituals for Healing

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

Rituals give meaning, richness, and structure to life's passages. They are for communication and celebration, for solemnity and deep inner silence. They are a visible manifestation of common human experience. Most of all, rituals are ceremonies of healing.

During this workshop, participants will explore components of healing ritual and discuss why rituals work. Sounds and symbols of rituals from several cultures will be experienced. The group will create and participate in healing rites which incorporate ancient wisdom with the belief systems from modern medicine, science, and psychology. The focus of the ritual work will be the healing power of the imagination.

This program may be of interest to health professionals and others who are on a healing path — seeking harmony, balance, and wholeness.

Writing and the Act of Creation

George Leonard

Participants will be encouraged to break through ego-barriers and cultural conditioning that inhibit expression. In so doing, they will have a chance to experience the creativity that is inherent in all of life. There will be little in the way of theoretical discussion and no critiques of past works. Simple movement exercises will serve to reduce stress, free the mind, and focus the will. Participants will have the opportunity to write furiously in the here and now and to get immediate feedback. Before the weekend has passed, they in all probability will have completed a short article or fictional work and will have experienced some of the joys and heartaches that accompany publication. Bring pencils, pens, or portable typewriters — and plenty of paper.

Keeping a Good Relationship Alive

Gerald Smith

How to be close and vulnerable as partners, yet separate and free to grow as individuals, is a major dilemma in keeping a good relationship alive. Because each partner continues to change this dilemma is never quite resolved, but can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship.

During the weekend much of the participants' time will be spent with their partners (separate from other couples). Verbal, nonverbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection will be used, as well as developing skills that help resolve differences in ways that do not produce "scar tissue." And, since playing is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be exercises to rekindle the imagination and the willingness to play together. Limited to 12 couples.

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of , this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance. Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you — singing. $350

Energy, Resources, Environment, Development, and Security

Amory Lovins

Energy policy is well along in a revolution which the leader's 1976 Foreign Affairs article helped to launch. That paper redefined the problem as not simply where to get more energy, of any kind, from any source, at any price, but rather how to find just the amount, type, scale, and source that would do each desired task at least cost. This end-use/least-cost approach has proven fruitful in examining a wide range of other issues too, ranging from efficient use of water and minerals to the interlinked problems of sustainable, economic development (from local to global), redefining security, rethinking agriculture, and protecting the earth.

Understanding the links between these subjects often makes it possible to solve many problems at once. Efficient energy use, for example, can simultaneously help the poor, displace insecure (or all) sources of oil, abate global warming and acid rain, stem nuclear proliferation, save wildlands, cleanse air and water, create wealth, and preserve the interests of our descendants.

This seminar will begin with energy — chiefly its efficient use and renewable supply — both as factual background and as a conceptual launching pad for related issues. It will then branch out in the directions of most interest to participants, emphasizing interconnections and a vision across boundaries between various disciplines. Modest acquaintance with numbers and with technical and economic fundamentals will be helpful, though not essential, as the seminar is equally concerned with social, political, and ethical issues and with practical methods of implementation — drawing on the participants' diverse perspectives and experience. $350

Embodiment and Vision

Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)

The perception of wholeness is the consciousness of healing. —Ernest Holmes

Laura DeNuccio writes: "This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

"Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Learning to listen from within can lead back to the ancient wisdom of the Earth — returning us to our sacredness and wholeness. Participants will use breath, sound, and movement as meditations for enlivening the vitality of cells and tissue, for dissolving energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind. The sound meditations have the potential of moving the individual past the limitations of language, creating openings for new thought and inspiration. The emphasis will be on self-care, renewal, and nourishment.

"The group will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one's inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What is meaningful and significant to you? What's truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth. While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group can experiment with co-creating community, an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore this ever-unfolding adventure of spirit."

Mid-Life Crisis as Spiritual Emergence

Karen Turner

Participants will view mid-life transition in the framework of spiritual emergence and renewal, a time when the old systems the individual has used as foundations seem stripped away, leaving chaos and challenging long-held beliefs. It is a time of soul-searching; of confronting both inflated and deflated self-concepts; of surrendering to deeper, more expanded states of awareness; of learning to trust inner guidance as absolute authority in one's life.

This workshop will be a rite of passage for both men and women going through this transition. Together they will have the opportunity to discover each participant's unique self, and how each is in relationship to self, each other, the world, and spirit. Tools for self-exploration and awareness gathered over 25 years from psychology, mysticism, and shamanism will be presented, with time for discussion and sharing. Each workshop is uniquely designed to meet the needs of those attending.

The Tai Chi Ruler

Master Share K. Lew

Workshop participants will be taught the Tai Chi Ruler, a set of 8 non-strenuous breathing and movement exercises, which date back to the Sung Dynasty (960 A.D. — 1127 A.D.). These exercises are performed while holding a wooden "Tai Chi Ruler" and includes one exercise performed while sitting, and one done lying down. The Tai Chi Ruler balances the energies of the internal organs, increases flexibility, and promotes an active long life.

Practice of the Tai Chi Ruler increases the quality of the circulatory system (which traditionally is seen as benefiting conditions such as arthritis and aiding recovery from illness), and is an excellent addition to any body/spirit awareness discipline.

Master Lew says that anyone who practices all the exercises properly will feel their chi moving within a week. Master Lew will also tell stories from his life in the monastery, and will be available for private health consultations.

The Spirit of Creativity as a Catalyst For Change

Char Pias Brenner

The creative spirit is alive in all of us. But the expression of creative form requires access to our unconscious and the awakening of our subliminal forces. The process of bringing creative form to consciousness can, like the seasons in nature, have many moods and cycles. Sometimes it can strike with the force of a hurricane, and other times it can feel like the sweet fruits of a cool autumn. However we experience it, creative process can directly effect our ability to move, speak, touch, make decisions; and it can change the way we see ourselves and our environment.

This workshop is designed to free the energy of expression and help participants access their Creative Source, experiencing the various aspects of its vitality. Releasing barriers to liberate our creative self-expression will be symbolically expressed in the improvisational dances we create. Expression of each participants' metaphor of release and emergence can help give new form and direction to personal decisions and choices.

Utilizing expressive movement, the power of the voice, imagery, improvisation, drawing, and music making, we will enact the creative process in order to bring to consciousness our most imaginative selves.

Metaphors We Live By

George Lakoff

Metaphor is the means by which we understand what we experience. As we grow up, we acquire hundreds of standardized but largely unconscious metaphors that are built into our language. We think, act, and even dream using these metaphors. We have metaphors for comprehending everything from time and causation to emotions, morality, love, and even the nature of life and death.

Our unconscious capacity for metaphor is awesome in power. It is liberating in that it permits both abstract thought and the workings of our imagination; it can be stultifying when it limits our possibilities. As long as it remains inaccessible to consciousness, we can neither appreciate its magnificence nor see where it confines us.

This workshop has several goals: first, to help participants become conscious of the metaphors that govern their thoughts and actions; second, to reveal how these everyday metaphors are manifest in poetry and myth, and how they vary in other cultures; third, to develop skills in using metaphor to make new sense of their lives.

Living on Purpose

John Caple

"When I was growing up, "Lili Tomlin says, "I really wanted to be somebody. Now I realize I should have been more specific." This workshop is for those who want to be more specific about who they are, what they bring to the world, and where they want to go with it. It is for those who want to be somebody, and for those who just want to be. It is also for those in life transitions and those who want to develop transition management skills. It is for those who want more meaning in their lives, and for those who want the lightness, freedom, and joy that a sense of purpose offers.

Relationships: Turning Toward Joy

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared — by their family backgrounds or society — to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $350

The Soul's Theatre: Improvisation, Storytelling and Play

Corey Fischer

This workshop will address the soul's hunger for images that nourish. We will explore our own lived experience as a vital source of creativity.

A major vehicle for this work will be improvisation — entering into the unknown with the innocence of "beginner's mind". Our intention will be to create a community of trust that will enable us to risk giving up our internal censors.

The work will include solo and ensemble experiences. We will use theatre games, guided fantasy, free writing, storytelling, vocal and physical exploration to locate the stories, dreams, memories, and voices that are inside us. In this way we will seek to restore value to that which has been ignored, supressed, and neglected.

As the workshop unfolds we will also address issues of form and structure in order to understand how personal material can be shared through performance.

No previous theatrical experience is necessary. Workshop is limited to 12 participants. $675

Movement, Touch, and the Healing Process

Patrick Douce

This workshop will approach the concept of a free, effortless body through Moshe Feldenkrais's work in movement and touch. Balinese and other Indonesian systems of working with the human body's energy field will broaden the Feldenkrais work.

Participants will be introduced to the complexity and simplicity of the spinal column. They will use soft, conscious movement to increase their sensitivity for safe, hands-on explorations. Moving away from the notion of a straight, stiff, rod-like back, they will find that posture and overall flexibility of the spine improves.

This program is designed for both beginners and professionals interested in movement and touch. Individuals with chronic tension or stress, and those with lower back, neck, shoulder, or hip pain may find alternatives through learning more about the human body's possibilities. $675

Cross-friction massage, trigger point work, and Esalen massage will be the means of touch. This workshop is designed for those individuals with a serious interest in massage practice.

Creating Exact Moments of Healing

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, life-long commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for the necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself; developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of chronic trauma;
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills wile securing healthy boundaries;
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation and toward stability and abundance;
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and body work. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. Eros and the Eschaton: Living at the End of History

Terence McKenna

The ever faster ingression of novelty into the human world has created a unique opportunity for understanding. Time's river moves ever more swiftly, and we and our planet are carried in its mighty flow. The broad stream of cultural evolution has become a raging torrent of chaotic change. A distant roar grows steadily louder. It is the thunder of the cataracts at the end of time, now not so distant as you might wish to be assured. Now is the time to row to the nearest shore, but where is that shore and what will it look like?

Every culture assumes that its models are excellent approximations of ultimate truth. The naivete of such tribal chauvinism cannot fail to provoke a small smile. Can archaic values based on shamanism and the psychedelic experience give meaning to the now apparently inevitable dissolution of our ages-long link to the earth? Join us for a lively weekend of discussion and insight that carries us outside the cheerful envelope of ideology as usual. We will cuss and discuss who we are, where we come from, and where we are headed as a species. Come share in a collective act of mental opening to a universe that is stranger than we can suppose. $350

Fun with the Violin: For Adults Who Always Wanted to Play the Violin and Never Have

Diane Egli

Are you one of the many adults who always wanted to play a musical instrument but never have? Or maybe you used to play but haven't since childhood. This workshop will give you the opportunity to learn to play or re-play the violin and have fun with the learning process.

Participants will increase their awareness of how it feels to learn a new skill — the challenge, the excitement, the frustration, and the success of accomplishment. Included in the workshop will be various activities to enhance violin playing/fiddling, such as movement, music, and rhythm exercises. There will be time for listening to various types of music such as classical, jazz, and bluegrass, and we will do some music meditation and visualization.

Drawing with Freedom

Leigh Hyams

Artwork comes straight through an open mind — and with it often comes clarity of vision, increased awareness of oneself in relation to the environment, and a deepening understanding of the world of art and its meaning in one's life.

Without freedom one cannot respond fully to the experience of drawing. The leader's unique teaching methods help students to draw immediately — fearlessly, exuberantly, sensitively, and observantly. Participants will be introduced to a variety of media and techniques, with the second day of the workshop devoted to drawing with color.

This is a workshop for people who want to revitalize their connection with art and the environment, as well as those who have had no previous experience. The only prerequisites are curiosity about the creative process and a willingness to explore the rich possibilities inherent in the act of drawing.

The Hazards of Being a Psychotherapist (Or Being Married to One)

Ofer Zur

Surgeons wear gloves during operations to avoid getting infected, construction workers wear hard hats on the building sites, painters use masks to protect themselves from inhaling toxic fumes. Therapists walk into well decorated offices dressed appropriately and carrying a briefcase. Are they protected from what is coming their way?

The education and training of therapists has systematically failed to address the hazards of the profession. And the hazards are numerous: long days in isolation with people who are in pain and often very demanding; clients who are intrusive and dissatisfied; feelings of depletion, hopelessness, depression; and a sense of emptiness. Often a therapist is left feeling that there is nothing more that he/she can give to anyone else, especially loved ones at home.

Carl Jung warned us to watch for "psychic infection." We feel omnipotent and grandiose when our patients idealize us, we feel despair when they sabotage us, and intruded on when they cross the boundaries we set. The way we cope with these complications varies. Denying them is the most dangerous approach. It leads not only to ineffective therapy but can also account for the high rate of divorce, burnout, addiction, depression, and suicide among psychotherapists and mental health workers. It also interferes with a therapist's ability to sustain intimate relationships with spouses and children.

This experiential and didactic workshop will help participants develop healthy ways of dealing with the hazards of the profession. It is designed for therapists, counselors, caregivers, and their significant others. It is open to both individuals and those who wish to attend with partners.

Living Dance

Anna Halprin

In early times, dance was the mother of all art forms and a way for people to connect with the natural world, integrate as a community, and affirm personal and tribal values. Ancient peoples expressed the most important experiences of life not with external materials, but with their own bodies. They danced to make sense of the mysteries of their existence — to celebrate victory, mourn loss, bring rain, initiate the young. Today, in an everyday world set apart from nature, people still need to tap into the deep sources of their bodies, moving and dancing to renew, inspire, teach, create, heal.

Through an approach Anna Halprin calls the Life/Art Process, participants will create dances from their own lives, deepening their life experience through expanded art expression. This workshop will range from structured practice to spontaneous, dramatic, and zany group interactions. Visualizations, music, and outdoor environments will be incorporated.

Men and women with diverse background and a sense of humor are welcome. Potential students for the Tamalpa Trainings may find this a valuable orientation. For information on recommended reading and videotapes, contact Tamalpa Institute, P.O. Box 794, Kentfield, CA 94914. $675

Polarity Training

Deborah Medow (Jenkins)
& Esalen Staff

Polarity is the art and science of balancing the currents of life force which naturally flow through the body. Based on a holistic approach towards healing, the practitioner and recipient work with thoughts and attitudes, nutritional needs, special exercises (called polarity yoga), and the polarity treatment itself.

Participants in this workshop will be instructed in the basic concepts of the polarity system as applied to the human energy field through touch. Emphasis will be on theory, polarity points and counterpoints, energy balancing methods, nutrition, and "polarity yoga." A three-hour class session will be held in the morning and afternoon. Evenings will be for practice and occasional group meetings.

This workshop is designed for the interested layperson, the professional bodyworker, and health care providers. It also serves as a good review for anyone who has previously taken a polarity workshop.

The Application of Altered States

Ronald Wong Jue

This workshop is for psychologists and health professionals who are interested in integrating transpersonal dimensions and strategies into their clinical practice. Participants will explore: how to move into a state of consciousness that allows the client a deepened awareness of his or her dynamics; the functionality of trance and the clinical application of altered states of consciousness in working with repressed memories; accessing spiritual resources of the client.

Utilizing David Bohm's theory of explicate and implicate order and Karl Pribram's holonomic theory to explain the phenomenology of trance, participants will delve into subjects ranging from myths and dream metaphors to shamanic journeys. The integration of this material into ordinary consciousness will be addressed. The final experiential portion of the workshop will focus on the healing of the inner child and parental introjects. These components of the psyche and their healing are important considerations in working with co-dependency, incest, rape, and addiction. Resource materials will be provided.

Couples in Creative Dialogue: Creating New Worlds of Experience

Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

This workshop is for couples who as individuals want to expand and enrich the spontaneity of their interaction. We will investigate certain patterns of unconscious interaction that generate and maintain limiting and defining forms that relationships can embody. Rather than open us to the creative originality inherent in both people, these systemic patterns distance us from vital emotional contact that engenders spontaneity and freedom.

By investigating these interactions from a systemic perspective using principles and techniques from Ericksonian hypnosis, we will seek to disrupt the more confining patterns, and mobilize the unconscious resources needed to construct new forms of behavior. The goal will be to help couples create more satisfying and original interaction, and develop a more flexible range of connections that lead to deeper forms of intimacy. Group interaction, structured trance experiments, and discussion will support the workshop process.

Prerequisites are a willingness to expand your tolerance for closeness and distance, and an openness to experience humor in ways you may never have before. $675

Recovery for Adult Children and Co-Dependents

Julie Bowden & Richard Balaban

This week-long journey will be a healing of the "child within" in an atmosphere of safety and respect. Experiencing and integrating the past allows us to live in the present, no longer tyrannized by previous pain and outmoded behaviors. We can be freed to exist more fully in relationship with ourselves and others. Issues specific to both men and women will be explored. Treatment providers and people in all stages of recovery are welcome.

Massage Intensive for Couples

Deborah Medow (Jenkins)
& Lawrence Hall Jenkins

This workshop is for partners who want to learn to massage each other. Emphasis will be on "hearing" with the hands, de-stressing the home, asking for what we need, and giving to those we love. Sessions will include demonstrations and hands-on guidance. Individual concerns will be addressed so participants can continue their practice at home.

Healing the Healer: A Workshop for Helping Professionals

Peter Finkelstein

Working in the field of health care brings the practitioner into contact with sorrow and death. And although health care professionals accumulate great emotional burdens, many do not pay enough attention to staying whole, integrated, and non-depressed while doing this work. Often, in fact, institutional arrangements foster the opposite: isolation, dehumanization, withdrawal. Hence, it remains for the practitioner to find a personal approach in which to process sorrow, frustration, and fear, both wisely and well.

The heart of this workshop will be the telling of stories from the world of health care. Each participant will have the opportunity to share an event from their practice, one that deeply moved them, and receive feedback from the group. Through such telling we can reveal and heal those sometimes invisible wounds that interfere with our own growth and ability to continue helping others. Dream interpretation, didactic material, and group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Special attention will be given to creating a setting of trust.

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder of meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and movement are one." $675

Caring and Conflict

Joel Dweck Isaacs & Anne Clark Isaacs

The leaders write: "Our goal in this workshop is to help each person touch their deepest placing of longing to be whole. Starting from this inner place, we will strive for group interactions of the same quality. Together, participants and leaders alike, the risks we take in knowing and revealing ourselves can create an intimate community.

"Feelings provide self-knowledge, depth, and pleasure, especially when they flow freely. Relating to others is most gratifying when these feelings are expressed openly and directly. We will work to realign the point of balance where the hope for contact and love is often countered by the fear of being engulfed or abandoned. We will explore ways to expand our options beyond isolation or giving up oneself to be close."

Chives growing in the Esalen Garden

The leaders have worked together for over a decade, sharing a commitment to relationship and community. Their training in numerous disciplines allows them to tailor each workshop to the needs and desires of the participants. They use Reichian emotional release, group process, play, nurturing, confrontation, and healing energy, and have an appreciation of the spiritual nature of self and relationship. When asked to characterize intimate relationship, one of them exclaimed, "It's heaven and hell?" This workshop aims toward easier access to heaven and shorter time in hell. $675

Organizations of the 1990s: Managing with Heart

Maggie Seeley & Thom Allena

Human needs, environmental values, and spiritual concerns are finally being acknowledged as integral parts of organizational life. "Corporate soul" is a new buzz term in management circles and signifies the need for organizational life to become more human and cooperative. People are motivated to make a difference, and in today's corporate world these differences now consist of psychological and spiritual considerations as well as economic concerns.

Organizational leaders now practice "power with" rather than "power over" employees and use quality circles, teamwork, and a "win-win" ethic as conflict resolution techniques; and employee ownership incentives are helping employees find their work more satisfying, productive, and profitable. Now that organizational life has been given a "heart", new ideas are constantly evolving to change the way management operates.

This workshop will provide tools, techniques, and experiential work for those who wish to —

- improve their leadership effectiveness and organizational vision
- find more intuitive ways to develop a "kinder, gentler" empowering management style
- learn to balance profitability and productivity with human concerns
- express their personal vision by working "spiritually smarter" rather than through workaholic or technoholic strategies
- learn ways to integrate humor, creativity, and play as part of a more productive environment
- experience team building and partnership models based on the integration of masculine and feminine behaviors
- examine theories X, Y, Z, then create a new management paradigm
- create a workbook and develop a personal plan of action

This workshop is for leaders, managers, directors, supervisors, and other people who wish to work "spiritually smarter," and improve their own and their organization's consciousness and business practices.

The Power of Voice

Arthur Samuel Joseph

This course introduces a method called Vocal Awareness, which includes vocalizing, sound meditation, movement, song study, and development of the speaking voice as a mean for deepening contact with the Self. Participants will work individually and in groups exploring breathing, toning, a capella and accompanied vocalizing with poetry, sonnets, and songs.

Vocal Awareness is an art form that addresses in precise ways how language affects the brain. It is now well-known in the field of psychoneuroimmunology that endorphins are released by the brain in response to verbal cues and visual imagery. Research also points to a strong correlation between language, breath, and psycho-physical response. Knowing this, developing one's own language becomes a means for self-integration.

The aim of this workshop is to explore the voice as metaphor, to tap into issues of self-expression and self-esteem, and to have fun while developing vocal abilities. It is valuable for lay people and professionals alike, and is open to beginners through advanced. Tape recorders are required.

A Week with Paul Rebillot

Paul Rebillot writes: "Within each of us there lives a demon — our own personal critic — whose greatest joy comes from criticizing, denigrating, and destroying every experience we have. We're either too early or too late, too old or too young, too fat or too thin, and when we fall in love, we're never good enough. This demon, who commands us to be who we aren't in order to satisfy someone we can never satisfy, is the demon that we will seek to experience during this workshop.

"Why not take the chance of looking inside ourselves and finding the completeness of who we are, instead of limiting ourselves with who we think we should be and who we hope we are not? When we find the truth about ourselves, our natural response is to want and to work for the best that we can be.

"People in the helping professions who have experiencing this form have found it adaptable and useful in their own work." $675

Inner Sound and Voice

Jill Purce

This is a workshop of practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the Self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psychophysical effects of breathing, chanting, mantric and sonic meditations, learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance, to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures, including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other methods. $350

Spiritual Autobiography

Dan Wakefield

Participants will use drawing to evoke memories of former eras of their lives, to look at past experience in a new way, to write about it and share their stories with others. Insights from childhood and adolescence, singular experiences of their lives, and the role of a friend or mentor will provide the material for creation in pictures and words. Such re-experiencing can offer fresh understanding and appreciation of the richness of one's life; connections emerge as the story of crucial turning points is told.

A concluding exercise will show participants how to draw a road map of their journey that can serve as a guide for continuing to write their on-going spiritual autobiography. The "right to reticence" and confidentiality will be honored in the process; the workshop offers acknowledgment and appreciation rather than criticism of writing or experience. $350

Open Seat with Paul Rebillot

An "open seat" is just that: it is a place of total acceptance. Whatever lives in you — joy and sorrow, need and power, fear and desire — everything is encouraged, through gestalt process, to express itself so that your being can find its own true balance and discover its resources.

This work is especially beneficial to people who are feeling stuck, unable to move out of old patterns, to direct their energy into new life forms. When we are stuck we are usually trapped in unresolved issues from the past or limiting self-concepts that block our way into the future. Gestalt process, enhanced by elements of ritual and drama, allows people to work with their subconscious material, such as dreams and fantasies, in order to bring new energies and awareness to their ways of living and dealing with day to day problems. Discovery of the true self gives people the courage and the capacity for authentic expression in their personal lives, in their communities, and in the cultural or political movements to which they feel committed. $350

Life Energy Process℠

Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process (LEP) is a spiritually-oriented approach to self development and professional growth based on Eastern and Western energy dynamics. Specially designed subtle and intensive moments (microments) increase energy flow and lead to the discharge of non-essential processes in your body (e.g. repressed emotions, chemical toxins, etc.) Each of us has an energy frequency that can be felt when attuned through LEP. This unique vibration helps us center and ground ourselves as well as find clearer direction and meaning in daily life. Each participant will have a chance to feel their unique energy process and explore it afterward in process inquiry.

Life Energy Process includes: dance, theater, massage, pool work, and various other forms. The workshop is of particular interest to professionals and laypersons who are excited by the integration of theory, pleasure, and hands-on application of energy concepts.

Balancing Values and Work: From Inner Purpose to Outer Action

Sue McKibbin & Patricia Moore

Lack of alignment between one's inner values and purpose and one's work in the world can result in frustration, hopelessness, boredom, and cynicism. But when people shift from outer- to inner-directedness and bridge purpose and action to their life, they find that meaning, empowerment, and well-being can emerge.

Participants will explore these issues through processes ranging from meditation and journey work, to questionnaires and self-assessment instruments. Individual and group exercises related to each participant's work situation will be used. Five themes will be explored:

- Purpose, values, and vision
- Personal transition processes
- Balancing individual and organization polarities
- Practical tools for the inner journey
- Sources for personal transformation and organization paradigm shifts

Participants will have the option of an individualized assessment for an additional $100 fee. This would include an individualized work preference analysis and report. Leaders will contact participants about this option.

The Medicine Wheel Way

Carol Proudfoot-Edgar & Bob Edgar

This workshop will draw on the Native American Medicine Wheel ceremonies and teachings as resources for personal growth. Just as Western psychological theory provides a framework for describing human stages of development, so does the Medicine Wheel offer a framework for self-individuation. Both systems embody steps for healing. A primary difference, however, is that the Medicine Wheel way of living views humans as sacred beings and maintains that each individual must find their own balance of spirit, body, emotion, and mind.

The Medicine Wheel way has guided many peoples through their journeys of self-discovery. It illuminates the relationship of all things, each direction on the wheel having its particular meaning and pointing to aspects needed for integration. With this tool, information can be brought forth from the memory so that essential elements for balance are not ignored. Ceremonies and rituals mark the passage of seasons and significant events of individual and group life, and connect the individual to the great mystery of life.

This experiential workshop will use these ancient teachings, providing a supportive means for participants to continue their process of self-development and to deepen their relationship with the natural world. Activities will include learning the Medicine Wheel, learning about shamanism and the shamanic journey method, finding totem animals as guides, assessing one's current situation or season in life, and gathering one's resources for the next cycle of change. Drumming, chanting, and rituals will be used in a climate of trust and acceptance within which we will also be increasing our appreciation and respect for the natural world. Participants are encouraged to bring journals, drums and rattles (if you have them).

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

"Create like a god; work like a slave."

Constantin Brancusi pasted these words on the steps to his sculpture studio. Even he had to renew his courage every day, for the creative life is and must be a heroic life.

Why is it so easy to immerse oneself in routine work and so difficult to find and do what we really want to do? Many original ideas flit through awareness every day, but most fizzle into nothing. The flow of creativity is a human birthright, yet conditions must give it rise and foster its growth. Then comes the 99% cultivation that raises the raw germ of an idea to fruition.

Artistic self-expression demands intrepid hope, self-esteem, and dedication, especially when bills must be met with everyday employment. Everyone who works and also creates after hours fights a valiant battle against stagnation. How to make friends with one's deep self ? How to give it utterance? How to find the medium? Detect the message? Live by the real priorities?

Many have made creativity a form of spiritual discipline in daily life — so can we. Not only Constantin Brancusi, but hosts of others who have had to earn money while creating can help us. Wallace Stevens and Franz Kafka worked in insurance. Pearl Buck was a missionary in China; Karen Blixen ran a coffee plantation. John Masefied clerked in a customs office; Albert Einstein in a patent office. Bernard Malamud wrote short stories after lunch at the Census Bureau; T.S. Eliot was a banker. Anton Chekov, John Keats, Somerset Maugham, William Carlos Williams and Arthur Schnitzler were all physicians who managed to produce literature as well. Their examples can guide us and give us faith.

This workshop is designed for those whose lives, however successful, are (or ought to be) divided between paid professional activities and some form of satisfying expressive project or serious personal interest. We will use meditation, journaling, interpersonal interaction and Gestalt to help ourselves and each other rise above the humdrum. Bring an open mind, a journal, and the glimmer of an idea for your own creative life. $350

Self-Transformation: The Art of the Actor for Everyday Life

Jane Marla Robbins

Transforming feelings of anxiety and insecurity into feelings of self-confidence and joy is a miracle that can happen in all areas of one's life — physical, emotional, spiritual. This transformation can help us fulfill our potential for the roles we have chosen to play — whether it be child, parent, artist, shaman, charismatic speaker, sensualist, or spouse.

Some of the techniques to be explored and discussed include: the actor's physical preparation; vocal preparation; mental and emotional preparation; spiritual preparation; relaxation; sense memory; the magic "as if"; personalization; substitution; playing a character; animal exercises; overcoming self-consciousness; perfect props; unspoken mantras; speaking the truth; breathing; the inner walnut; and the psycho-physical action.

Participants can learn how to replace old fears and paranoid projections with self-manufactured pleasures and positive projections. Many "real-life" situations ordinarily fraught with worry can easily be transformed using the Actor's Imagination. The power and pleasure of being able to create a sense of well-being and self-confidence at will can be experienced by everyone, and, once it has been discovered, it cannot be easily shaken.

No previous acting experience is necessary. $350

Finding My Place: A Workshop for Men

Jerry Johnson

"After twenty years of women's liberation, men are the new continent." Coming from Nancy Friday, an American feminist writer, this is a provocative statement. However, many American men are asking, "If this is true, what does it mean for me?"

The media has begun to confirm that many old patterns and definitions of masculinity are no longer valid. Films show male friendship and bonding without war; magazines explain new roles for men in parenting and other aspects of life that were previously the exclusive domain of women.

Participants will try to explore the often repressed parts of their masculinity which can form the basis for new self-identity and relationship. The workshop will combine universal male themes, ancient spiritual rituals, and experiential exercises to help men create a new mode of feeling. Themes will include:

- How does my absent father continue to shape my self-image?
- Do I have an inner guide to masculinity?
- How do I move beyond competition and fear in relating to other men?
- Is there a way to respond to contradictory messages from women about being sensitive and/or strong?

This workshop is for men who want to grow beyond old, traditional definitions of manhood but don't know where to begin, and for men who would like to explore the isolation they feel from the lack of meaningful relationships with other men $350

The Practical Art of Creative Risk-Taking

David Schiffman

To make effective, creative choices, you need courage, imagination, and the willingness to know your heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of our natures, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

During this week we will focus on how to develop a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, we will explore our capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Self-Acceptance Training: Basic

Richard Olney & Heather Burch

This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. It is defined as "the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgment, self-criticism, or self-evaluation." The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual's relationship with the universe.

Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cognitive examination of the individual's "pretends" and illusions that obstruct self-acceptance. Limited to 25 people. $675

Advanced Feldenkrais® and Cortical Reeducation

Harriet Goslins & Michael Meyer

This workshop is open only to those who have previously worked with Harriet Goslins. The major emphasis will be on new, advanced floorwork that leads toward grace, agility, and clearing up remaining areas of chronic dysfunction. Participants will attend to issues of further discovery, attempt to let go of that which no longer serves them, and learn how to hear and trust the body's inner voice.

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants are given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

Sessions will include sitting meditation, chanting, a thorough physical warm-up, opening the voice, and exercises designed to integrate sound and movement. Participants will also have opportunities for developing technical performance skills, but the focus of the week will be improvisational expression of impulses, feelings, and ideas as they arise moment to moment.

Daughter – Mother Dialogue

Mary Catherine Bateson & Sevanne Kassarjian

In this weekend workshop conducted by Mary Catherine Bateson and her daughter, Sevanne Kassarjian, enrollment is limited to mother-daughter pairs or close analogues. There is no maximum age, but a minimum age of sixteen is suggested, and mothers wishing to bring infants should bring their own mothers as well.

A variety of techniques of life history narrative and dramatic improvisation will be used to explore the cross-generational relationship, to enrich communication, and deepen understanding of the inevitable tensions and rewards. Women who are already mothers will have the opportunity to explore their self-understanding as daughters, and daughters who are not yet mothers to think about future parenthood. The group will explore the symbolism of mothering and nurturence for its positive and negative aspects in our society, and examine the mythological basis of the relationship between mothers and daughters.

Action Theater: Really Pretending

Ruth Zaporah

When we were children, we frequently created our reality through pretending. We played freely in a spontaneous world. But in our adult world, we are often left with only a memory of this freedom. The Action Theater process rekindles this spirit of play, of being open to change and present to life.

Action Theater is a system of exercises and games that integrates mind, body, and spirit and leads toward free and spontaneous experience. Sessions begin with simple movement improvisations; participants come into, feel, and stretch their bodies. From this orientation they play within forms that increase awareness of movement and vocal verbal expression. Range of emotion expands; images, characters, and situations emerge from the territories of awareness, memory, and the imagination.

Each Action Theater event serves as a mirror. In the realm of awareness, there is little distinction between the theater and the street. Who we are, how aware we are, how we process our perceptions and reactions is the same everywhere. In the studio, we improvise within forms relevant to movement and theater, but the lessons affect our daily lives.

The workshop accommodates the novice, the explorer, and the practiced. $675

Chakra Integration and Esalen Bodywork

Laurie Lioness Parizek & Dean Marson

Chakras are vital life-enhancing centers that have their roots in the physical body, along the spine and deep in the brain. When open, they blossom like energetic flowers; balanced, they refine the mainstream current of energy in the central nervous system and help to integrate the physical, spiritual, and energetic life of each individual.

This workshop will use meditation, sound, supportive hands-on work, and sensitive touch to balance the chakras and the mainstream spinal current and gently and consciously open the channel that connects the earth to the heavens in each of us. Experiences will be both private and shared.

A flowing bodywork style, deep pressure point release, healing visualizations, gentle, energetic touch, and a diet that nourishes the spiritual as well as the physical will be explored and integrated. The leaders will emphasize centering, grounding, and breath practices.

Participants will be given guidelines for developing their own hands-on chakra balancing session. Some hands-on experience is necessary. Please bring your favorite musical instrument and personal healing tools.

Self-Acceptance Training: Advanced

Richard Olney & Heather Lynne Burch

Please note: Due to he time given to the didactic material in this advanced workshop, not everyone will have a chance to work personally with the leaders. $675

Giving and Receiving

Gabriele Hilberg

Giving and receiving are fundamental, nourishing interactions between people which affirm our sense of worthiness and belonging. While at an integrated level giving and receiving are one and the same, most of us do not easily experience the transcendent quality inherent in this process.

Children intuitively defend against manipulative ways of being cared for. They can sense their parents own unfulfilled needs, which eventually makes them unable to appropriately respond to the child's needs. They sometimes form a nourishment barrier, which, in adulthood, can disable them from receiving love and support from others.

Participants will examine their own nourishment barriers and patterns of inappropriate giving through exercises and group interactions. The technique of family sculpturing will be introduced, which will allow underlying family dynamics to emerge. Such work facilitates awareness of the relationship between present behavior and childhood beliefs. With such awareness, we can then move beyond the barriers that prevent us from appropriate giving and receiving. $675

A Weekend with Joseph Chilton Pearce

For the last three decades, Joseph Chilton Pearce has been synthesizing scientific brain research in physics, biology, and psychology in an effort to understand and map nature's plan for the development of human intelligence. He writes:

"The intelligence of the heart is the only force that can pull our garments of self together; it is the nurturing power so many of us missed right from the beginning of life, that unconditional love which alone would have assured us of the evolutionary progress nature intended. That progress is nothing but the progression of love toward its own source, and that source is the heart."

In this seminar, Pearce will share his findings on the three-part human brain and how each art has its own language, its own development cycle, its own purpose. He will talk about the difference between intellect and intelligence, the ego's inability to self-analyze, and the physiological connection between the heart and the brain that prevents our triune brain from being continually at war with itself.

Joseph Pearce's discourse will offer participants a glimpse of their own developmental cycle — where it was rich, where lacking — and give them tools for enriching the inner journey to their own hearts. $350

Endarkenment

Will & Ailish Schutz

Sometimes in our search for enlightenment we become humorless, and our search becomes tedious. Growth demands a respite from intensive struggle.

This workshop can provide a vehicle for the turn downward. We shall explore: how to establish and maintain meaningless relations; what to worry about while meditation; advanced covert blaming and inducing guilt in loved ones; how to become the most sympathetic victim/martyr in your social group; guilt without sex. This approach, similar to Feldenkrais's "live the disasters" and the "homeopathic principle" (Will Schutz, Body Fantasy), can be as valuable for attaining enlightenment as the direct route — and more fun. In addition, participants in this workshop will have opportunities to explore, play with, and celebrate the shadow — that which we usually hide. $350

The Nature of Movement: Aikido and Wilderness

Steven Harper & Wendy Palmer

In this week-long workshop, participants will work indoors with energy awareness and principles derived from aikido, and outdoors on short day-hikes into Big Sur's backcountry to explore the movement that nature inspires. Both aikido and hiking are moving meditations which, when done well, require the individual to be in harmony with the natural world. There will be an opportunity to take what is learned on the aikido mat out into the natural world and bring what is learned from nature onto the aikido mat. Participants can then begin to integrate what they learn from aikido and from nature into their lives.

All evenings and most meals will be at Esalen. Participants need not have previous experience in aikido or hiking. $675

Meditation: The Living Dance

David Streeter

The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation. This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way.

In our retreat atmosphere we will prepare the body-mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. We will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama), and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a silent listening hike in the wilderness, group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery, and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life, and that crystal-clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

Their experience with thousands of workshop participants over the past 27 years has led Anne and Jim Armstrong to believe that everyone is intuitive — that intuition is part of humankind's standard equipment. The goal of this workshop is to have everyone experience their own innate intuitive ability, using it at will, on demand. This will be accomplished through exercises and meditation, with a minimum of discussion in order to allow each individual to recognize his or her own particular style of perception, and to trust the intuitive input one receives. Anne will use her intuitive abilities developed over the past 30 years to guide the participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

The spiritual and ethical aspects of the intuitive/psychic process will also be addressed, as well as the leaders' belief that intuition development is the gateway to Divine Wisdom, and should be the outgrowth of a healthy spiritual practice. We will demystify the intuitive/psychic process, and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives — personal, professional, and spiritual. Real life situations presented by participants will be selected for psychic/intuitive practice. $675

Along with his wife Anindo Abukutsa, from Kenya, and his instructor from Ghana, Nanc C.K. Ganyoi, Tamakloe will present the West African world view through dance, song, drumming, and the religion and history that these cultural art forms embody, and relate them to the universality of humankind. $350

Watercolors, Nature and the Self

Sim Van der Ryn

Watercolor sketching is a quick, fluid, and fun way to capture the essence of a place. As an expressive medium, it teaches us many things about ourselves and our responses to place. We will start with simple beginning techniques, using a minimum of equipment so you can begin to explore your own individual possibilities and style. The rich and varied Esalen site offers all kinds of inspiring watercolor possibilities which the leader can help you to see and paint.

$350 (plus an $85 materials fee paid directly to the leader. It includes brushes, pigments, palette, and papers which will last you for many painting sessions after the workshop).

Finding Inspired Work in Mid-Life

Peller Marion

At 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns recently said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people usually don't live to be 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them, largely because their life seems effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop, drawing from the conceptual base of adult development theory and models of aging, will explore these issues. Through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as: What's my dissatisfaction? Who am I? What's my definition of success? The leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to revaluate one's work and relationships to gain clarity, focus, and direction toward one's life contributions. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 49-50. $350

Ethics and Affect: Confronting the Virtues

Price Cobbs & George Leonard

Participants in group process work are urged to express feelings rather than opinions, to avoid making judgments and giving advice. The question remains as to whether such honest, non-judgmental expression of feelings can be applied to larger ethical and social considerations.

In this workshop, Ethnotherapy founder Price Cobbs and human potential pioneer George Leonard will seek to join the realm of feeling with that of ethical action. This will be an all-out, no-hold-barred encounter, in which the traditional virtues will be subjected to the test of the affects, and vice versa. Cobbs and Leonard will assist participants in avoiding denial, self-deception, self-righteousness, and an unthinking reliance on political correctness. Participants will be encouraged to experience and understand how their inner feelings influence their opinions and their actions in the world. Empassioned participation will be encouraged. $350

Trigger Point and Esalen Massage

Arthur Munyer & Esalen Massage Practitioners

The human body is a rich source of information and intelligence. Trigger point, the movement of myofascial tissue through soft, deep contact with pressure points, and Esalen massage are methods of working with the body that can help the practitioner communicate with stressed, blocked, and chronically troubled areas. This workshop will combine these modalities, along with joint release, movement, and studies in anatomy. It will also address concerns of burnout, depression, creativity, and peer support for those who have chosen a demanding profession. It is especially suggested for body workers, physicians, physical therapists, chiropractors, and other health care practitioners who want to expand their hands-on skills.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 49-50. $675

A Confluent Somatic Approach

Steven Vasquez

This workshop is about the nuances involved when illness, injury, or pain become resolved beyond the conventional expectations of medical science. Information from people who beat the odds of recovery from "terminal" illness, "incurable" diseases, or difficult injuries will be reviewed. The role of belief, attitudes, and relationships in affecting the body will be experientially explored.

This confluent somatic approach synthesizes medical research, cross-cultural concepts, ancient spiritual practices, and modern psychology. It combines methods drawn from Ericksonian hypnosis, Focusing, and family systems theory with hands-on work to reduce physical symptoms. Abstract concepts like state-dependent memory, psychoneuroimmnology, and chakra systems are broken down into practical applications.

Workshop material will be experiential and didactic. Processes for tracking unconscious personal myths that underlie medical conditions will be demonstrated. Complex medical jargon, psychological processes, and esoteric energy methods will be simplified into functional uses that can affect health recovery in conventional psychological and medical settings.

The Writer's Way: A Personal Adventure Through Writing

Nancy Bacal

The Jewish High Holidays offer people of all denominations an opportunity for community and reflection. This is an invitation for anyone with an open heart to turn this holy time into a satisfying ritual of creativity. Using the pen, we will explore together our individual stories. Beginning with a series of writing exercises designed to bypass judgment and self-criticism, we will tap our reservoir of experience. Daily excursions on the page will encourage each participant to transform the burdens of our lives into stories, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. Guidance will be specific enough to excite the imagination yet loose enough for each of us to experiment with form and image and remain open to surprise.

This workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the would-be writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, walks, meditation, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The intention will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, stimulating relationship with our work.

Taoism and the Shen

Master Share K. Lew

Traditional Taoist concepts of health, longevity, and harmony with nature will be introduced by Master Lew, a temple-trained Taoist priest from southern China. The core of the workshop will be instruction in "the Shen," a set of twelve non-strenuous exercises (six standing, six sitting), whose primary purpose is self-healing. These exercises also develop concentration, increase visual and auditory acuity, and enhance sensitivity to oneself and others. Master Lew will discuss the use of everyday foods and Chinese herbs in healing and tell stories from his life in the monastery.

Master Lew, now 74, first began to teach Taoist internal cultivation to non-Chinese in 1970. His monastery style, Tao Ahn Pai, dates back 1300 years to Lui Tung Pin, a historical personage of the Tang Dynasty and one of the Eight Immortals of Taoism.

The Vision and Practice of Human Transformation

George Leonard

It may be argued that, in potentia, every human being is a genius, and that the ultimate creative capacity of the human brain/body is, for all practical purposes, infinite. Each of us is a prodigious learning animal, and our ultimate destiny may well be to evolve capacities that would now be termed extraordinary. Perhaps it is only due to me limitations imposed by faulty notions of childrearing and schooling, along with the failure of national vision and practice, that we rarely develop even a small fraction of our potential.

In this hands-on workshop, human potential pioneer George Leonard, informed by his work with Michael Murphy in the development of integral Transformative Practice, outlines a new human vision and provides a practical map with which you can begin your journey toward the realization of your inborn genius and creativity. The workshop will involve discussion, demonstration, and the gentle movement and imaging exercises of Leonard Energy Training (LET), a practice inspired by the art of aikido.

Chakra Psychology

Nancy Rosanoff

The chakra system is generally known to be an ancient Hindu concept of spiritual energy centers located along the spine, which are awakened or energized as individuals progress spiritually. This course gives participants a modern understanding of how to use the chakras as guides in their quest for psychological and spiritual development.

Awakening the chakras allows people to observe the interaction between the body, mind and spirit. The chakras can thus become tools to balance daily life within the context of a greater spiritual reality, with such practical applications as: enhancing self-understanding, improving loving relationships, changing unwanted behavior patterns, and unblocking creative energy.

Participants will work with their chakra spirit guides, yoga stretches, chants, meditation, breathing and awareness exercises, drawing, and writing to explore their chakras and themselves, open blockages, and heal past pains.

Pushing, Pulling, and Lifting: Feldenkrais in Daily Life

Laurence Goldfarb

This workshop introduces the Feldenkrais Method®, and its application to the movements of everyday life. The focus will be on finding the gentle strength inherent in our physical design and using it to make pushing, pulling, and lifting easier and more comfortable. We will focus on the following questions:

- What is the human body's blueprint for motion?
- How does this plan determine what is safe? Efficient? Comfortable?
- What interferes with optimal movement?
- Can learning new ways of moving help us overcome limitations?
- How can easy, light, painless movements improve our abilities?

Participants will be verbally guided through a series of movement sequences composed to experientially answer these questions. Interactive group exercises designed to enhance observational abilities and lecture-discussions designed to clarify the how and why of the Method will supplement the movement lessons.

Although this course is open to anyone interested in improving his or her ability to move (and understanding of movement), it will be of particular interest and benefit to those who work with others in recovering from chronic pain, rehabilitating from disability, preventing work and sport injuries, and improving human performance. This includes physical and occupational therapists, doctors and nurses, dance teachers and coaches, bodyworkers and movement therapists, ergonomists and injury prevention specialists. $350

New Competences for an Age of Uncertainty

Donald Michael

Because we live with unprecedented levels of complexity and uncertainty, an abiding crucial challenge for each of us is learning how to be better learners. The old answers and questions are increasingly ineffective. Yet conventional definitions of competence encourage each of us, as well as organizations, to avoid learning by denying or disguising uncertainty so that we appear to know what we are doing. The result is increasing stress, anxiety, and inadequate personal and organizational performance.

This seminar will introduce a set of interlocking skills or "new competences" necessary for making humane and effective decisions when uncertainty can provide the occasion for learning — in work places and in interpersonal and family situations. These skills include: acknowledging and specifying high levels of uncertainty, error embracing, being future-responsive, boundary spanning, interpersonal communication, and self-knowledge.

The approach will be both cognitive and experiential. Participants will have the opportunity to become more comfortable with the vulnerability that accompanies facing their uncertainties; to question the need to act cautiously out of fear of making a mistake; and to reexamine the incentives for those defensive posturings that make it so hard to act responsibility and compassionately. As a previous participant said, "This seminar is for those who are ready to move beyond the personal and want to effect change in public and private organizations." $350

Story Magic and Jewish Intuition

Rabbi William Cutter & Stephanie Waxman

In the beginning was the word —John 1:1

Why are people still telling stories that are thousands of years old? What makes a story Jewish? How can we use Jewish stories in our own lives, even it we aren't Jewish?

Jews have always seen stories as the "unfolding of God." These stories reflect an attempt to understand the spiritual possibility in the commonplace event. This workshop combines the theological insights of the rabbinical tradition with the story-telling techniques of theater improvisation. Through non-verbal interpretation, personal memories, and collective dreaming, we will probe the essence of various Jewish stories, from the Bible to folktales, to the stories of the Baal Shem Tov and Nachman of Bratzlav.

Climbing inside these tales uncovers their deeper meanings which have resonated for centuries, and can still speak to our own everyday lives. $350

Liberate your Creativity: Improvisation in Life and Art

Stephen Nachmanovitch

All children share the quality of free play, open access to their own spontaneous creativity and imagination. Although each of us carries that essential source of creativity within ourselves, as we grow older we develop layers of inhibition and judgment that shut us off from this source. Whether or not we are artists, we have a need to express ourselves, but much of the time we feel blocked and frustrated. Our capacity for critical judgment makes a wonderful servant but a terrible master.

Learn to utilize the power of improvisation in busting blocks that inhibit the flow of creativity. Improvisation, that spontaneous balancing of technique and inspiration, is the key to all creativity. All artwork begins with that first moment the pen touches the empty page, the bow touches the violin, the brush touches the empty canvas.

Working with a Zen approach to creativity, we will try to liberate the freedom to create in the moment that comes from being in touch with our spiritual center, and explore ways of touching that center as a matter of daily practice.

The leader will present practical techniques and exercises for unblocking the flow, using the power of limits, the power of mistakes, and the material at hand to facilitate the opening of our creative voice. This workshop is for artists in any medium and those who wish to develop their creative powers. Whether you sing, paint, compose, write, or dance, you will create a new work each day of this workshop.

The Aesthetic Self

Luc Brebion

To take part at all deeply in the experience of art requires a particular quality of concentration, a particular stillness of mind, and a particular openness to receive. Immersed in contemplation, we can enjoy the rare privilege of being in the presence of the artist and of letting him or her show us how to reach for what is essential within.

Luc Brebion, a native of France, has combed the museums of Europe in search of artistic treasures. In this year's Aesthetic Self workshop, he will again use a multimedia approach and an experiential method to help participants penetrate works of art and become absorbed by them. Their aesthetic sense will be developed through a uniquely designed presentation of selected masterpieces of painting, music, and literature. Thus trained, they will be given the opportunity to learn the recognitional skill required to truly perceive the substance that real art can offer. $350

Jerry Fletcher, Edward Hinkelman & Kelle Olwyler

Most people have had the experience of having something they were doing "take off" and go surprisingly well, much better than expected. Yet most people assume such times are lucky accidents, that it is not possible to create or sustain such performance deliberately or without stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout.

The results from more than ten years of research and testing by the workshop presenters demonstrate that these times of exceptional performance are not accidental. Each individual has a pattern of actions that produces his or her best results. Once people learn their personal high performance patterns, they can carry out activities in a way that suits them and produce better results for the same effort over sustained periods of time.

This seminar takes participants through a process in which they identify their individual high performance patterns and learn to apply them to their life and work. Developed through years of work with successful managers, executives, professionals, and work teams, it offers an approach to high performance that can be sustained. It is a clear alternative to the stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout that accompanies constantly forcing oneself to peak periods of high output in order to achieve high performance. $675

Biodrama:
Know Your Self, Live Your Self

Lorenzo Ostuni & Katriona Munthe

Biodrama is a method for developing human potential and for personal renewal. It employs dream, body language, poetry, imagery, symbols, and music; it is both contemplative and active work. Its roots go back three-thousand years to the spiritual culture of ancient Greece, uniting the Orphic and Eleusinian Mysteries with present-day psychological research.

Participants will be invited to undertake a mystic journey in which to experience fundamental moments of their lives; birth, love, and death. They will work on visions and emotions of preceding states of consciousness and may find that this representative process helps integrate their individual mystery with the collective experience of humankind. This life performance, the first part of Biodrama, often elicits a regenerating experience for the protagonist. Ostuni's commentary on this performance/experience is the second part of Biodrama and will be tape-recorded for each participant.

This ritual performance workshop will be conducted in Italian and English. $675

Cortical Reeducation® and The Feldenkrais Method®

Harriet Goslins & Mark Bender

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. Be reeducating the brain-muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk or injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back, to improve their posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

An Exploration of Childhood Sexual and Physical Abuse Issues for Healers

Jessica Moore Britt

This workshop is for healers working with survivors of childhood abuse. Our exploration will include: 1) your attitudes, feelings, and experience and how this effects you personally and professionally; 2) at the meeting of healer/client what is needed to facilitate the healing process.

Since sexual and physical abuse impacts the body directly, we will examine this impact on a person's sense of self and how our work can recognize and include the body.

Specifically, we will address the questions of boundaries, the sado-masochistic process, splitting and how to deal with the powerful effects of the superego. We will address the special issues of clients with new or uncertain memories, and the similarities and differences between physical and sexual abuse and the profound effects when both are present in the same client.

We will inquire into how the process of disidentifying from the abusive past is aided when the work is grounded in a spiritual perspective and practice.

This workshop will be both didactic and experiential, and we will be working with each other. Individual and group process will be available as needed.

Jessica writes: "As a survivor I have been working in the healing profession for 20 years, working with abuse issues for the last 12 years. I especially extend an invitation to healers with their own abuse histories."

A hypnosis library will be available for in-depth learning of advanced topic areas and there will be an opportunity to explore personal goals with trance and biofeedback equipment.

The scientific basis of hypnosis as well as the ways hypnosis can be applied will be emphasized. Topic areas will include: induction methods, hypnotic testing, symptom and habit removal, individual and family counseling applications, pain control and psychosomatics, non-verbal and pendulum methods, biomedical hypnotic monitoring, metaphor and story-telling methods, hypnosis with children, regression and uncovering, redecisioning and reframing, self-concept enhancement, stress management, fears and phobias, early trauma, hypnotic dream programming, imagery conditioning, NLP methods, enhancing performance in sports, music, and sensation, self-hypnosis methods, teaching self-hypnosis classes, and other topics related to therapy, health, and personal growth.

Outside dining area of the Esalen Lodge

Selected ongoing exercises drawn from Aikido, Feldenkrais, movement, massage, and shamanistic traditions will complement the traditional topic areas.

Since each of the leaders will present for a number of days, there will be an opportunity to model different ways of deepening your own hypnotic potential, trance induction, and utilization skills. This month-long experience with various faculty members gives each participant an in-depth opportunity to develop vivid personal imagery, make lasting self suggestions, and relate more completely with the unconscious mind.

The certification offered through this program is equivalent to a University modified tutorial course. You complete readings, assignments, and a paper for the hypnosis certificate. Certification is granted based upon the competency demonstrated to the faculty in applying hypnotic techniques with an ethical and professional approach and satisfactory completion of all Great Western University C.E.U. course requirements. The paper and assignments are due no later than four months following the completion of this program at Esalen. Course fees for the Hypnosis Certificate are $300 (12 C.E.Us), payable to Great Western University upon beginning the program at Esalen. It is also possible to obtain four transcripted Graduate Psychology courses rather than C.E.Us (requires additional fees to Great Western University and you must have at least a B.A. degree. Contact Marc Lehrer, Chairman, Dept. of Psychology, Great Western University, (415) 397-4929 for further details).

Space is limited for this program so early registration is recommended. Reading lists and information about certificate and graduate credit will be sent upon request or registration.

C.E. credit available for nurses; for more information see pages 50-51.

Standard accommodations: $2975
Bunk Bed Room, if available: $2140

Heads, Hearts, and Tails

Harriet Goslins, Hugh Milne & Mark Bender

Physical injury, emotional trauma, and ongoing stress can all evoke protective responses from the body. As a result, patterns of armoring can show up as fatigue, depression, or loss of clarity and direction. Often we are not aware of these habitual, postural patterns that were once developed as survival tools, but slowly have begun to limit our options. As these body imprints are released, it is possible to sense one's self beneath the armor.

Based on the work of Harriet Goslins and Hugh Milne, this workshop is for those who want to access deeper levels of personal competence in body awareness, touch, communication, and insight. Carefully structured and sequenced movement patterns and floor lessons, based on the Feldenkrais Method® and Cortical Reeducation,® will be used to help rediscover some of the grace and fluidity of childhood.

Participants will also work with each other, using a system of healing touch called Shaman's Cranial, based on craniosacral methods. Focusing from head to heart to tail, methods will be shown through which touch can complement movement to encourage wisdom and healing in the body.

For those who teach, counsel, or facilitate growth and healing verbally or through touch, this can be an opportunity for personal growth and reflection. Through healing touch, meditation, movements, and processing in circle, both the joyful and painful places can be reached. The releases and insights gained from this process can offer new freedoms from old, restrictive patterns, and provide greater options for a more fulfilling way of life.

C.E. credits available for nurses and dentists; for more information see pages 50-51.

Standard Accommodations: $1665
Bunk Bed Room, if available: $1155

Integrative Body Practice (IBP) Professional Training Program

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

This will be a 12-day residential training program in Integrative Body Practice. IBP emphasizes breathing as a vehicle for the integration of body, mind, emotions, and spirit, and views the body as the foundation for psychological and transpersonal growth. Object relations developmental theory will be integrated with body work. This workshop is for licensed professionals and graduate students in related fields. The leaders will be assisted by Andrea Juhan and the staff of the Rosenberg-Rand Institute of Venice, California.

Massage Practitioner Certification Program

Esalen offers a California state-approved massage program. Upon completion of a 130-hour massage practitioner workshop, and after giving 30 additional massages elsewhere, graduates will receive their certificates. Workshops for certification are offered twice a year, usually in November and April. This program provides at least 130 hours of instruction, including anatomy, supplemented by study in body-mind disciplines such as yoga, movement, and gestalt awareness work, fulfilling the state requirement.

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring Project offers outreach, education, and referrals that extend Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent, service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring operates a global referral system, linking visitors to Esalen with body workers, counselors, and teachers from their home areas. There are ongoing programs at Esalen and a traveling workshop service in the U.S. and abroad. Instructors teach self-healing, Esalen body work, yoga, breath and body awareness, dance and centering movement, and meditation. Many instructors have experience in gestalt practice and movement continuum.

The Healthspring Library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, philosophy, yoga, nutrition, and organic gardening which may be borrowed by seminarians for a two-week period while at Esalen. Donations of books or periodicals are greatly appreciated.

For access to the referral system and traveling workshop program, write to Laurie Lioness Parizek at Esalen, c/o Healthspring.

■ WILDERNESS PROGRAMS

Esalen Wilderness Programs Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The standard refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered.

To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, we require a deposit of $200. The balance of the fee is due 14 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited.

May 1–9
Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center

Steven Harper & Kim Pickett

Nature can provide opportunities to stretch one's limits and explore one's inner wilderness. By living in a natural environment it is possible to expand and realize a deeper sense of self and richness of being.

The group will spend a day and a night at Esalen, leaving the next morning to hike through the Ventana wilderness. Participants will travel "light," with instruction in minimum impact camping, ecology, geography, and cultural history of the area.

Wilderness will be a mirror and primary teacher as the group lives simply and in direct contact with nature. Participants will explore their feelings and sensations as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice and group process. Taking inspiration from natural and native purification practices, they will create a time of cleansing and contemplation, culminating in a 24-hour period alone. The group will hike on to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center, deep in a rugged wilderness valley with natural hot springs, for their last night together. Meditation instruction will be available at Tassajara for those who wish it.

Backpacking experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

August 1–8
A Gentle Trip in the High Sierra

Maurica Anderson & Les Wilson

During this seven-day workshop in wildflower season, participants will hike eight miles to a clear mountain lake (9,600') in the Ansel Adams Wilderness on the western side of the High Sierra. Just south of Yosemite, the area is off the main trails and is surrounded by other lakes, grassy meadows, and cold streams fed by the surrounding snowfields. Our water will be supplied by a pure and icy spring.

MULES WILL CARRY IN ALL OF THE PERSONAL GEAR AND FOOD, so participants need carry only lunch, rain gear, and water on the hike in. The food will be exceptionally good — fresh or frozen meats, fruits, and vegetables. The group will camp by the lake for six nights, taking short day-hikes, and working with meditation, massage, psychodrama, gestalt, and gentle encounter. There will be some strenuous but optional side hikes, swimming, a sauna, and some time for doing nothing. Participants will be encouraged to concentrate on the sights, sounds, and smells of the high country, on getting to know the mountains and each other, and on just simply laughing and relaxing as much as possible.

Mountaineering experience is not necessary and most people are in good enough shape to make it in, but participants should be capable of hiking uphill at altitudes up to 11,000', and should come equipped with a good sense of humor.

For a detailed information sheet, contact Maurica Anderson, 1112 Curtis Street, Albany, CA 94706; (510) 526-5814. Participants will meet at a pack station in the Sierra on August 1. Fee includes food, wine, permits, and pack mules in and out. $705

View looking south from Esalen

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program. Two programs are planned for each month. Those scheduled thus far for 1992 include:

May 3–May 31

Design your own program, alone and with other participants, using your intuition, intelligence, and imagination. Find surprising resources; harvest and recycle your energies. Facilitated by Janet Lederman.

Karuna Licht will lead a month-long journey using the creative processes of art, ritual, and guided imagery as the language of the heart.

May 31–June 28

Diane Lawrence and participants will use acting, writing, theater, and painting to create a communal performance that will be presented at month's end.

This month with David Streeter will give students the opportunity to incorporate the subtle art of contemplation in a community atmosphere. Yoga, massage, and gentle emotional release—along with silent meditation—will be included in the curriculum.

June 28–July 26

Beverly Silverman will lead a dialogue between body and spirit using Rolfing,® gestalt, and psychosynthesis.

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy offers exploration of ancient and contemporary meditation practices; centering through movement, sound, and breath; and contact through massage.

July 26–August 23

Design your own program, alone and with other participants, using your intuition, intelligence, and imagination. Find surprising resources; harvest and recycle your energies. Facilitated by Janet Lederman.

Mary Goldenson's (Devarani) program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, Radix,® dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

August 23–September 20

Seymour Carter, longtime gestalt teacher at Esalen and in Europe, combines studies in sensory awareness, Zen buddhism, aikido, and other body-oriented practices into a group process which provides a safe setting for self-exploration.

This month with David Streeter will give students the opportunity to incorporate the subtle art of contemplation in a community atmosphere. Yoga, massage, and gentle emotional release—along with silent meditation—will be included in the curriculum.

September 20–October 18

Katriona Munthe and Anita Eubank Donovan offer movement, metaphor, and myth as a means for understanding the universal symbols of mankind. Mime and dramatizing dreams will be used for self-exploration and as tools for developing human compassion.

Steve Harper will lead a group exploring "inner" and "outer" nature. With Big Sur's wilderness as a primary teacher, the group will draw from various somatic and contemplative traditions that enhance personal awareness to further explore ourselves and nature.

October 18–November 15

Jackie Rosen and Kay Brownfield offer a month of psychosynthesis to explore the nature of essence. Meditation, guided imagery, music, movement, art, and individual process work will be used. Professionals are invited.

A month with John Soper will focus on ways to improve the quality of life. The work will start with the individual and expand to include the environment.

Institute of Transpersonal Psychology Offers External Master's Degrees

Work students now have the opportunity to integrate their work study experience at Esalen with the external degree program of the Institute of Transpersonal Psychology. The external degree format enables students to study at any location. Work students will be able to continue the dynamics of personal growth fostered at Esalen while earning master's degrees in transpersonal studies or in transpersonal psychology.

A deposit of $350 in U.S. currency is required with your application. The cost of all 28-day Work Study Programs now includes an additional fee of $20 for coverage under our student health and accident policy. ■ Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

SLEEPING IN THE FOREST

I thought the earth remembered me, she took me back so tenderly, arranging her dark skirts, her pockets full of lichens and seeds. I slept as never before, a stone on the riverbed, nothing between me and the white fire of the stars but my thoughts, and they floated light as moths among the branches of the perfect trees. All night
I heard the small kindgoms breathing around me, the insects, and the birds who do their work in the darkness. All night
I rose and fell, as if in water, grappling with a luminous doom. By morning
I had vanished at least a dozen times
into something better.

The Voice of the Earth

by Theodore Roszak

Theodore Roszak's book The Voice of the Earth has been described as a "wake-up" call for contemporary society. In the words of James Hillman, it "lays the groundwork for the theory and practice of psychotherapy for the coming century." The following is adapted from The Voice of the Earth (Simon & Schuster, 1992, available through the Esalen Bookstore). Theodore & Betty Roszak will *be giving a workshop December 4-6. Ecopsychology: A Reconnaissance

In 1901 Sigmund Freud delivered a famous series of lectures titled "The Psychopathology of Everyday Life." His purpose was to acquaint the public with the new and still mysterious science of psychoanalysis. He went about this in a clever way. He used jokes, double-entendres, and slips of the tongue to show how these familiar experiences reveal the repressed sexual and aggressive drives of the unconscious mind.

Today, a similar series of lectures might draw its material from reports of ozone depletion, toxic waste, and the greenhouse effect. These commonplace environmental problems have become the psychopathology of our everyday life. They reveal a condition of the soul for which Freud would have had no name.

In the century since psychology was first staked out as a province of medical science, we have learned a troubling lesson. The sanity that binds us one to another in society is not necessarily the sanity that bonds us companionably to the creatures with whom we share the Earth. If we could assume the viewpoint of nonhuman nature, what passes for sane behavior in our social affairs might seem madness. But as the prevailing reality principle would have it, nothing could be greater madness than to believe that beast and planet, mountain and river have a "point of view." We think that sanity — like honor, decency, compassion — is exclusively a social category. It is an attribute of the mind that can only be judged by other minds. And minds exist, so we believe, nowhere but in human heads.

While sex and violence continue to smolder in the depths of minds that do reside in human heads, the anguish of what I will call the "ecological unconscious" has emerged as a deeper imbalance. At this level, we discover a repression that weighs upon our inherited sense of loyalty to the planet that mothered the human mind into existence. If psychosis is the attempt to live a lie, the epidemic psychosis of our time is the lie of believing we have no ethical obligation to our planetary home.

These days we see the prefix "eco" affixed to many words: ecopolitics, ecophilosophy, ecofeminism, ecoconsumerism, even ecoterrorism. The result is not always graceful, but the gesture is nonetheless significant as a sign of the times. This tiny neologistic flag flies above our language like a storm-warning meant to signal our belated concern for the fate of the planet. Its often awkward connection with words from many sources — politics, economics, the arts — reveals our growing realization of how many aspects of our life that concern will have to embrace.

The goal of an "ecopsychology" is to bridge our culture's long-standing, historical gulf between the psychological and the ecological, to see the needs of the planet and the person as a continuum. In search of a greater sanity, it begins where many might say sanity leaves off: at the threshold of the nonhuman world. In a sense that weaves science and psychiatry, poetry and politics together, the ecological priorities of the planet are coming to be expressed through our most private spiritual travail. The Earth's cry for rescue from the punishing weight of the industrial system we have created is our own cry for a scale and quality of life that will free each of us to become the complete person we were born to be.

Once upon a time, all psychologies were "ecopsychologies." Those who sought to heal the soul took it for granted that human nature is densely embedded in the world we share with animal, vegetable, mineral, and all the unseen powers of the cosmos. Just as all medicine was in times past understood to be "holistic" — a healing of body, mind, and soul — and did not need to be identified as such, so all psychotherapy was once spontaneously understood to be cosmically connected. It is peculiarly the psychiatry of modern western society that has split the "inner" life from the "outer" world — as if what was inside of us was not also inside the universe, something real, consequential, and inseparable from our study of the natural world.

Turn, for example, to the modern psychiatrist's constant companion, The Diagnostic and Statistical Manual. The DSM is our society's canonical listing of all officially designated neuroses, universally employed for every medical, legal, and insurance purpose. In the DSM, one finds such exotic categories as "Schizoaffective Disorder in a Narcissistic Personality," or "Childhood Onset Pervasive Developmental Disorder." The categories for drug dependency are especially refined-"Hallucinogen Affective Disorder," Hallucinogen Delusional Disorder," Hallucinogen Hallucinosis." But with the possible exception of "Zoophilia" (bestiality, as it might once have been called) there is not a single recognized disease of the psyche that connects madness to the nonhuman world in which our environmental responsibility is grounded.

The alchemists of the ancient world had a teaching, "As above, so below." Four words that contain an entire cosmology. In the alchemical tradition, the heavens above, the Earth below including its living cargo were seen as a grand cosmic unity, a harmony resounding in the mind of God. Centuries later, modern science would substantiate that teaching in several ways. We too perceive a unity to the word. We know that the stuff and logic of the universe are everywhere uniform. The same atomic rudiments, the same chemical constituents, the same laws and principles extend from the cellular substance of our blood and bone to the farthest galaxies. We have learned that our planet and all the life upon it are made from elements that were forged in the fiery heart of primordial stars. As the alchemists believed, the baser stuff of the world can be transmuted into previous elements; commonplace hydrogen can be changed into gold — if it is cooked in a stellar core to temperatures far beyond anything their primitive furnaces could achieve and for eons longer than they could imagine.

If the alchemists were right about that much, we assume it was simply a hunch. By our standards, their studies penetrated matter too shallowly to yield exact physical knowledge. But then they may have had something else in mind: a knowledge not of fact, but of the meaning behind the facts. For them, "above" was the macrocosm, the world of heavenly spheres, the angelic hosts, and Dame Nature vast as all the planet Earth. "Below" was the microcosm, the human soul. Between these two — celestial intelligence and the inner being of man—there was said to be a vital link. Macrocosm spoke to microcosm; microcosm reflected macrocosm. The two were in living dialogue. Understanding the universe was a matter of listening, having ears to hear the music of the spheres, the voice of the Earth. Wisdom meant connecting.

For the better part of two-hundred years, keeping these two realms divorced and not even on speaking terms has been the single endeavor of rational thought and sound science. Matter to one side, mind to the other. Out there, the objective; in here, the subjective. The one a secure realm of mathematical certitude, the other a murky terrain of shifting emotion, dream, hallucination. Thoughts are not things, things are not thoughts. For us the "macrocosm" has become the province of the exact sciences, the greatest collective intellectual enterprise of modern times, no longer one pursuit, but many fields of study: physics, astronomy, chemistry, biology, each now subdivided into numerous specialized disciplines. And "microcosm," the sphere of the mind, soul, emotion, means psychology, the study of human experience as it can be gleaned from confessions made on a psychiatrist's couch, or possibly from the introspective revelations of novelists or poets.

Ecopsychology bridges the gulf between the psychological and the ecological. It sees the health of the living planet and the health of the psyche as a continuum. In a sense that weaves science and psychiatry, poetry and politics together, the ecological priorities of the biosphere are coming to be expressed through our most private spiritual travail.

Thanks to that separation, the scientists have given us a wealth of knowledge about the structure and function of nature; similarly, the artists and psychologists have discovered startling insights into the human heart. But the divorce of inner from outer, above from below, could never be more than a temporary expedient, a way of getting on with fact-gathering. Ultimately science is a creator of continuities, sometimes in spite of itself. Specialization narrows, but theory, which is the great adventure, reaches out; it aspires to wholeness, though cautiously. More and more the discoveries of sciences unite the myriad diverse areas of inquiry. Today, scientists have high hopes of achieving a Grand Unified Theory, a "theory of everything." Some even labor to include the cultural, the psychological, the religious within that project. Their effort is sincere, if tediously piecemeal. What often came to the mystics in a flash of inspiration may have to return to us slowly and painstakingly by way of disciplinary convergence.

The Voice of the Earth undertakes to connect the two realms of being, big and little, high and low, outer and inner. I realize there are scientific purists who object to seeing their intellectual property set upon for such purposes by amateurs, even respectful ones. But great scientific ideas have rarely been allowed to preserve their virginal status for long. Galileo's astronomy, Newton's laws of motion, Darwin's theory of evolution, all were rapidly appropriated by the greater culture; even more so Freud's would-be science of the mind. While pure science is not pursued with an eye to social or ethical significance, my purpose here is quite frankly to span the gap between the personal and the planetary in a way that suggests political alternatives.

This project is overdue. Historians of the future may look back in some astonishment at the last half of the twentieth century, wondering why so few thinkers of this period registered the full importance of the revolution in cosmology that took place in their lifetime. It would be no exaggeration to say that in the course of the last generation, we have passed into a postmodern cosmos as significantly different from the universe of Copernicus, Kepler, and Newton (or even Einstein, Hubble, and Shapley) as theirs was from the cosmos of Ptolemy. Many of the details of that transition may be familiar enough. The discovery of bizarre new astronomical objects like the quasar, the pulsar, the black hole, the measurement of microwave background radiation, the theory of the Big Bang have received the attention of the popular press and occasional television documentary. But it is one thing to explain the

■ ECOPSYCHOLOGY ■

The Principles

Our scientists seek a Grand Unified Theory that will embrace all things, all forces, all time and matter. In the past they have found no place for themselves in that unity. But their painstaking study of nature over the generations — a labor of honest inquiry and intellectual passion — has finally given the questing mind a significant status in the universe. What unity ultimately requires is closure. The circle of scientific theory comes round like the alchemical snake that bites its tail. What is must at last be known. Perhaps that is what underlies the eager unfolding of the natural hierarchy from the Big Bang to the human frontier: substance reaching out hungrily toward sentience. Oddly, this seems to have been better known by pre-scientific humans who worked from myth, image, ritual. If ecopsychology has anything to add to the Socratic-Freudian project of self-knowledge, it is to remind us of what our ancestors took to be common knowledge: there is more to know about the self, or rather more self to know, than our personal history reveals. Making a personality, the task that Jung called "individuation," may be the adventure of a lifetime. But the person is anchored within a greater, universal identity. Salt remnants of ancient oceans flow through our veins, ashes of expired stars rekindle in our genetic chemistry. The oldest of the atoms, hydrogen — whose primacy among the elements should have gained it a more poetically resonant name — is a cosmic theme; mysteriously elaborated billions-fold, it has created from Nothing the Everything that includes us. When we look out into the night sky, the stars we see in the chill, receding distance may seem crushingly vast in size and number. But the swelling emptiness that contains them is, precisely by virtue of its magnitude, the physical matrix that makes living intelligence possible. Those who believed we were cradled in the hands of God have not been so very wrong.

All this belongs to the principles of ecopsychology, but not in any doctrinaire or purely clinical way. Psychiatry is best played by ear. It is after all a matter of listening to the whole person, all that is submerged, unborn, in hiding: the infant, the shadow, the savage.

This list of principles is merely a guide, suggesting how deep that listening must go to hear the Self that speaks through the self.

1. The core of the mind is the ecological unconscious. For ecopsychology, repression of the ecological unconscious is the deepest root of collusive madness in industrial society; open access to the ecological unconscious is the path to sanity.

2. The contents of the ecological unconscious represent, in some degree, at some level of mentality, the living record of cosmic evolution, tracing back to distant initial conditions in the history of time. Contemporary studies in the ordered complexity of nature tell us that life and mind emerge from this evolutionary tale as culminating natural systems within the unfolding sequence of physical, biological, mental, and cultural systems we know as "the universe." Ecopsychology draws upon these findings of the new cosmology, striving to make them real to experience.

3. Just as it has been the goal of previous therapies to recover the repressed contents of the unconscious, so the goal of ecopsychology is to awaken the inherent sense of environmental reciprocity that lies within the ecological unconscious. Other therapies seek to heal the alienation between person and person, person and family, person and society. Ecopsychology seeks to heal the more fundamental alienation between the person and the natural environment.

4. For ecopsychology as for other therapies, the crucial stage of development is the life of the child. The ecological unconscious is regenerated, as if it were a gift, in the newborn's enchanted sense of the world. Ecopsychology seeks to recover the child's innately animistic quality of experience in functionally "sane" adults. To do this, it turns to many sources, among them traditional healing techniques of primary people, nature mysticism as expressed in religion and art, the experience of wilderness, the insights of Deep Ecology. It adapts these to the goal of creating the ecological ego.

5. The ecological ego matures toward a sense of ethical responsibility with the planet that is as vividly experienced as our ethical responsibility to other people. It seeks to weave that responsibility into the fabric of social relations and political decisions.

6. Among the therapeutic projects most important to ecopsychology is the re-evaluation of certain compulsively "masculine" character traits that permeate our structures of political power and which drive us to dominate nature as if it were an alien and rightless realm. In this regard, ecopsychology draws significantly on some (not all) of the insights of ecofeminism and Feminist Spirituality with a view to demystifying the sexual stereotypes.

7. Whatever contributes to small-scale social forms and personal empowerment nourishes the ecological ego. Whatever strives for large-scale domination and the suppression of personhood undermines the ecological ego. Ecopsychology therefore deeply questions the essential sanity of our gargantuan urban-industrial culture, whether capitalistic or collectivistic in its organization. But it does so without necessarily rejecting the technological genius of our species or some life-enhancing measure of the industrial power we have assembled. Ecopsychology is post industrial not anti industrial in its social orientation.

8. Ecopsychology holds that there is a synergistic interplay between planetary and personal well-being. The term "synergy" is chosen deliberately for its traditional theological connotation, which once taught that the human and divine are cooperatively linked in the quest for salvation. The contemporary ecological translation of the term might be: the needs of the planet are the needs of the person, the rights of the person are the rights of the planet. ■ technicalities, another to spell out the living importance of great scientific discoveries.

What the new cosmology lacks is the moral consensus that philosophers and artists once bestowed upon the Newtonian worldview. That consensus held for as long as science grounded itself in divine authority and vouched for the importance of human reason. Nothing has been more futile than our effort over the past few centuries to establish values and define sanity within a cultural context that finds no place for the sacred and views life as a marginal anomaly in the universe. The cosmology that gave us that picture of the human condition has now faded from the scene. The time is ripe for a new dialogue between scientific intellect and human need.

That dialogue is being conducted along two lines, one cosmological, the other ecological. I give fair warning: some of the scientific concepts we will investigate as contributions to synthesis of inner and outer, above and below — concepts like the Anthropic Principle and the Gaia hypothesis — are newly hatched and remain the subjects of lively debate. They border on "wild science," ideas still in the formative stage and susceptible to bizarre formulations. Some may feel the use I make of them here is premature, given their fledgling status. But ideas like these, as divergent as they may seem on the surface, emerge as the culmination of a long-term, indisputably secure trend in modern science that cries out for philosophical elaboration. The trend is our deepening appreciation of hierarchical systems in the universe. Gaia and the Anthropic Principle simply raise our rock-solid insight into the intricately structured unity of nature to the most ambitious level of generalization. In so doing, they carry science forward to the boundary of metaphysics. This is ground where many scientists understandably fear to tread. But sooner or later the greater implications of the ordered and evolving complexity of the universe will have to be faced. It may be that the deep systems of nature, from which our psyche, our culture, and science itself ultimately derive, are the new language through which the Earth once again finds its voice.

Modern Psychology in Search of its Soul: Bart Simpson and the Tiger

I am sitting in a crowded airport waiting to board a plane that will fly me home from a distant city where I have been attending a conference on Artificial Intelligence. The city is Rio de Janeiro, an ailing third-world metropolis whose government and financial masters have been maniacally plundering one of the planet's last rainforests. More than it needs computers and Expert Systems, Brazil needs its jungles. And beyond that, its cities, teeming with violence and cluttered with garbage, need social justice and decent sewers. But almost as if high tech might be the magic wand that will dispel these brutal ills, the Brazilians I have met on this visit have been preoccupied with modems and E-mail and multimedia.

Beside me in the waiting room, a little boy about six years old is casually flipping through an American magazine. He pauses on one page to study the picture of a tiger. The illustration is part of an advertisement for Exxon oil. The boy spends several seconds gazing at the photographed face of the great beast whose image even in this tawdry commercial version preserves a certain lordly dignity. Then he turns the page to confront another advertisement. At once the boy brightens. He recognizes the picture. It is an animated television cartoon named Bart Simpson, the current media rage. Excitedly, the boy turns to his mother to show her the picture, which also happens to be emblazoned across his T-shirt.

I think: by the time this boy is my age, Bart Simpson will have come and gone, replaced many times over by similarly ephemeral fictions. And by then the tigers will also be gone, never to be replaced. There may not even survive in zoos; not all the wild things agree to reproduce in captivity for our convenience and amusement. When they have no real place of their own, they quietly surrender to extinction. Someday children coming upon the picture of a tiger will view it the way we view the dinosaurs, wondering if such creatures ever really existed. But the extinction of the tigers — and the gorillas and the wolves and the whales — will be different. We will have exterminated these species, unthinkingly, without purpose, without remorse.

I have never seen a tiger in the wild. Nor a gorilla or a wolf. But as citified as I may be, something in me nevertheless insists that it is important these beasts should be there sharing some corner of the world with me. If they perish, it closes an episode in planetary history that represents millions of years of evolution. Granted, extinction is a constant theme of life on Earth, one of nature's ways of pruning, improving, and clearing space. But if it is to happen, best that it happen as part of some grand global transformation that has a certain geological, even cosmic grandeur to it. Some think the dinosaurs met their end sixty-million years ago in the wake of a meteoric collision that cast the planet into a worldwide winter. Other species were rendered extinct by the drifting of the continents or the advance of glaciers, only to have their place taken by new types. There is an almost ceremonial magnificence to such processes that matches the magnitude of the calamity. We might consider extinction on such a scale as an "act of God," meaning not only that it happened before our time and beyond our control, but that it happened on whatever we take to be the highest authority.

But the tiger in the Exxon advertisement is not doomed to so dignified an end. The demise of its species will be fortuitously bound up with oil spills like that which Exxon in its money-mad recklessness inflicted upon the Alaskan coast a few years back. Bound up too with this airport where I am sitting, whose planes are fueled by Exxon's oil. Bound up with the devastation of the Brazilian rainforest, which is going on night and day somewhere west of where I sit. And with the high tech which was the subject of the less than necessary conference I have seen fit to travel eight-thousand miles to attend. It is even connected along less visible lines with funny little Bart Simpson, whose fictitious existence is dependent on the technology I have just finished discussing with other experts from all over the world.

All these are expressions of heedless power on the part of a human culture that is running amok, wildly expending its technical cunning and industrial energy in all directions. And for what purpose that is worth the death of a species? Too little of what we do with our affluence is done to feed the hungry, heal the sick, comfort the desperate. Between the fate of the Earth and the luxuries, frivolities, and greedy profiteering to which we devote our technological might there is no sane proportion. Yet we live in this imbalance, degrading the planet without the capacity to hear its cries of anguish and anger.

The little boy turns a page. A species dies. A television cartoon takes its place in his life. He does not know, he does not feel. At his age, I was just as uncaring, a child raised on the entrancing illusions of urban culture.

The words of the semi-legendary American Indian leader Chief Seattle, echo in my mind, a voice that has attained nearly prophetical stature among environmentalists. I know the pronouncement to be apocryphal, but it is nonetheless moving.

What is man without the beasts? If all the beasts were gone, man would die from great loneliness of spirit, for whatever happens to the beasts also happens to man. All things are connected. Whatever befalls the Earth befalls the sons of Earth.

As greatly as they may differ in theory and practice, all schools of modern psychiatry agree that the question of truth lies at the core of madness. We go crazy when we refuse to face painful realities, when we lie to ourselves, hiding from our shameful fantasies. Lust for the mother, hatred for the father — these guilty secrets have long-since been laid bare. But what of the guilt that comes of annihilating whole species of our fellow creatures, not because we must do so to survive, but in ignorance and for the sake of nothing better than ephemeral amusements, petty pleasures, quick riches? We are, after all, in ways that may even be part of our innermost genetic inheritance, tied to the beasts from whom we evolve. At what risk of madness do we break faith with them? ■

Big House Programs

We are now scheduling workshops in our newly renovated Big House. This facility is available to groups of individuals who work together and would like to design their own Esalen program, drawing on our leaders and other resources. Ten bedrooms accommodating up to twenty individuals, ten bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, and living room make it possible to house group members together, thereby enhancing the retreat environment.

To schedule or discuss possible formats, please contact Pat LeWine, program coordinator at (408) 667-3038.

Friends of Esalen Quarterly Newsletter

The Friends of Esalen Newsletter is for and about the extended Esalen community. Published quarterly, it covers current events and other items not covered in the Catalog.

Through membership contributions, Friends of Esalen support the scholarship fund, the Friends network and newsletter, and other Esalen projects. In return, the Friends receive the Esalen Catalog three times a year, the quarterly Friends Newsletter, and opportunities to appear in the Friends Network Directory and to attend the annual Friends Workshop.

Esalen's Friends include people in 22 countries, from Big Sur to Nepal. If you would like to join us, please complete and return the membership form on page 54.

LimeKiln

In April of 1992, Esalen began a five-year lease of a unique and magnificent 750-acre parcel of land 12 miles south of Esalen. The property, currently a 63-site campground, borders the Los Padres National Forest and the Ventana Wilderness. LimeKiln offers miles of private hiking trails in redwood forests, spectacular waterfalls, and historic lime kilns.

Our intention is for LimeKiln to be a wilderness workshop center, and programming possibilities are currently being explored. We hope to combine youth programs, spiritual retreats, ecological conferences, somatic workshops, and other programs with the Big Sur Wilderness to strengthen the individual spirit and effect change in the world around us.

As a parallel to implementing these types of workshops, Esalen is pursuing the acquisition of the property with a multifacted approach — combining preservation and education grants with private donations to accomplish this goal.

Since LimeKiln is a semi-autonomous project of Esalen with its own management and staff, information and reservations are not handled by the Esalen office. All inquires should be directed to the project office at 408 667-2342. For camping reservations call 408 667-2403; mailing address is LimeKiln Campground, Big Sur, CA 93920.

LimeKiln: it's about nature.

INVITATIONAL CONFERENCES

In its continuing commitment to the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Currently scheduled programs and their conveners are listed here.

November 15-20
Russian and American Outsiders Looking In: Perspectives on One Another

Sponsored by The Esalen Institute Russian-American Exchange Center and the Russian-American Institute

Numerous Russians and Americans have visited and written about each other's country, relying upon their own culture as a springboard to understanding the other or "foreign" culture. Members of the Russian-American Institute will come together in November to discuss several prominent accounts by Russians of their visits to America, and by Americans who visited Russia in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. By examining not only the views, but the very approaches, the points of view, the cultural expectations from which these observations came, we hope to achieve a deeper appreciation of the ties that bind our two cultures, as well as of the pre-existing essential differences which have created challenges for that deeper understanding.

Papers prepared for discussion in advance of the conference are to be collected in a volume to be edited by Professor David Bethea of the University of Wisconsin, and introduced by Professor Michael Holmquist of Yale for a special issue of The South Atlantic Quarterly (Duke University), or the Yale Review.

■ WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 52-53. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

With the completion of the Big House renovation in June, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Pat LeWine, (408) 667-3038.

Finally, there are other events that enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. And, there is a community event schedule that is offered; please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Week of August 30–September 4

Introduction to Continuum

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "A human being can be seen as a living process of many activities: neuro-electrical-chemical-muscular, feeling, thinking, remembering, dreaming, and much more than we'll ever know. We sweepingly refer to all of this as 'My Life.' These activities can also be described as movements. What we call a 'body' can be seen as movements that flow, combine, and stabilize into 'muscle' or 'spine' or 'eyes.' I see movement as what we are rather than as something we do.

"Our time together will enhance our sensitivity to movement, whether we're experiencing it as moving 'muscle' or moving 'thoughts,' whether we're involved in the softness of a breath or the play of language, whether we're meandering through skin or feeling the wonder of meaningfulness as it shapes and colors the moment. For me, 'life' and 'movement' are one." $675

Caring and Conflict

Joel Dweck Isaacs & Anne Clark Isaacs

The leaders write: "Our goal in this workshop is to help each person touch their deepest placing of longing to be whole. Starting from this inner place, we will strive for group interactions of the same quality. Together, participants and leaders alike, the risks we take in knowing and revealing ourselves can create an intimate community.

"Feelings provide self-knowledge, depth, and pleasure, especially when they flow freely. Relating to others is most gratifying when these feelings are expressed openly and directly. We will work to realign the point of balance where the hope for contact and love is often countered by the fear of being engulfed or abandoned. We will explore ways to expand our options beyond isolation or giving up oneself to be close."

The leaders have worked together for over a decade, sharing a commitment to relationship and community. Their training in numerous disciplines allows them to tailor each workshop to the needs and desires of the participants. They use Reichian emotional release, group process, play, nurturing, confrontation, and healing energy, and have an appreciation of the spiritual nature of self and relationship. When asked to characterize intimate relationship, one of them exclaimed, "It's heaven and hell?" This workshop aims toward easier access to heaven and shorter time in hell. $675

Maggie Seeley & Thom Allena

Human needs, environmental values, and spiritual concerns are finally being acknowledged as integral parts of organizational life. "Corporate soul" is a new buzz term in management circles and signifies the need for organizational life to become more human and cooperative. People are motivated to make a difference, and in today's corporate world these differences now consist of psychological and spiritual considerations as well as economic concerns.

Organizational leaders now practice "power with" rather than "power over" employees and use quality circles, teamwork, and a "win-win" ethic as conflict resolution techniques; and employee ownership incentives are helping employees find their work more satisfying, productive, and profitable. Now that organizational life has been given a "heart", new ideas are constantly evolving to change the way management operates.

This workshop will provide tools, techniques, and experiential work for those who wish to:

- improve their leadership effectiveness and organizational vision
- find more intuitive ways to develop a "kinder, gentler" empowering management style
- learn to balance profitability and productivity with human concerns
- express their personal vision by working "spiritually smarter" rather than through workaholic or technoholic strategies
- learn ways to integrate humor, creativity, and play as part of a more productive environment
- experience team building and partnership models based on the integration of masculine and feminine behaviors
- examine theories X, Y, Z, then create a new management paradigm
- create a workbook and develop a personal plan of action

This workshop is for leaders, managers, directors, supervisors, and other people who wish to work "spiritually smarter," and improve their own and their organization's consciousness and business practices. $675

The Power of Voice

Arthur Samuel Joseph

This course introduces a method called Vocal Awareness, which includes vocalizing, sound meditation, movement, song study, and development of the speaking voice as a mean for deepening contact with the Self. Participants will work individually and in groups exploring breathing, toning, a capella and accompanied vocalizing with poetry, sonnets, and songs.

Vocal Awareness is an art form that addresses in precise ways how language affects the brain. It is now well-known in the field of psychoneuroimmunology that endorphins are released by the brain in response to verbal cues and visual imagery. Research also points to a strong correlation between language, breath, and psycho-physical response. Knowing this, developing one's own language becomes a means for self-integration.

The aim of this workshop is to explore the voice as metaphor, to tap into issues of self-expression and self-esteem, and to have fun while developing vocal abilities. It is valuable for lay people and professionals alike, and is open to beginners through advanced. Tape recorders are required.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

A Week with Paul Rebillot

Paul Rebillot writes: "Within each of us there lives a demon — our own personal critic — whose greatest joy comes from criticizing, denigrating, and destroying every experience we have. We're either too early or too late, too old or too young, too fat or too thin, and when we fall in love, we're never good enough. This demon, who commands us to be who we aren't in order to satisfy someone we can never satisfy, is the demon that we will seek to experience during this workshop.

"Why not take the chance of looking inside ourselves and finding the completeness of who we are, instead of limiting ourselves with who we think we should be and who we hope we are not? When we find the truth about ourselves, our natural response is to want and to work for the best that we can be.

"People in the helping professions who have experiencing this form have found it adaptable and useful in their own work."
$675

Weekend of September 4–6

Inner Sound and Voice

Jill Purce

This is a workshop of practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the Self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psychophysical effects of breathing, chanting, mantric and sonic meditations, learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance, to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures, including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other methods. $350

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, "There is room for both of us." Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs.

In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken expectations they project onto each other, heal past hurts that create distance, and learn new ways of communicating. They will have a supportive environment where they can experience themselves as courageous and able to take risks. Experiential processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation. $350

Spiritual Autobiography

Dan Wakefield

Participants will use drawing to evoke memories of former eras of their lives, to look at past experience in a new way, to write about it and share their stories with others. Insights from childhood and adolescence, singular experiences of their lives, and the role of a friend or mentor will provide the material for creation in pictures and words. Such re-experiencing can offer fresh understanding and appreciation of the richness of one's life; connections emerge as the story of crucial turning points is told.

A concluding exercise will show participants how to draw a road map of their journey that can serve as a guide for continuing to write their on-going spiritual autobiography. The "right to reticence" and confidentiality will be honored in the process; the workshop offers acknowledgment and appreciation rather than criticism of writing or experience. $350

An "open seat" is just that: it is a place of total acceptance. Whatever lives in you — joy and sorrow, need and power, fear and desire — everything is encouraged, through gestalt process, to express itself so that your being can find its own true balance and discover its resources.

This work is especially beneficial to people who are feeling stuck, unable to move out of old patterns, to direct their energy into new life forms. When we are stuck we are usually trapped in unresolved issues from the past or limiting self-concepts that block our way into the future. Gestalt process, enhanced by elements of ritual and drama, allows people to work with their subconscious material, such as dreams and fantasies, in order to bring new energies and awareness to their ways of living and dealing with day to day problems. Discovery of the true self gives people the courage and the capacity for authentic expression in their personal lives, in their communities, and in the cultural or political movements to which they feel committed. $350

Week of September 6–11

Accepting Life's Transitions: Letting Go – Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

The only certainty in life is change, yet we often resent our transitions because of patterns of fear and self-denial. Old beliefs keep us stuck in our resentments, unsuccessful marriages, friendships and careers, and can cause illness, sorrow, and the inability to forgive. Transitions are crossroads in our lives that give us the opportunity to take time out and reconnect with our truth. It is never too late to change. Transitions are doors to the renewal of our passions, courage, and commitments.

This workshop will provide you with ways to help complete the past, be open to the present, and create a future. Participants will experience a safe, supportive environment that includes taking risks, intense body work, Gestalt imagery, dance, and meditation, in order to support the transitions that keep us committed to the process of discovering ourselves. $675

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the Coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on heir own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process (LEP) is a spiritually-oriented approach to self development and professional growth based on Eastern and Western energy dynamics. Specially designed subtle and intensive moments (micro-ments) can increase energy flow and lead to the discharge of non-essential processes in your body (e.g. repressed emotions, chemical toxins, etc.) Each of us has an energy frequency that can be felt when attuned through LEP. This unique vibration helps us center and ground ourselves as well as find clearer direction and meaning in daily life. Each participant will have a chance to feel their unique energy process and explore it afterward in process inquiry.

Life Energy Process includes: dance, theater, massage, pool work, and various other forms. The workshop is of particular interest to professionals and laypersons who are excited by the integration of theory, pleasure, and hands-on application of energy concepts. $675

Sue McKibbin & Patricia Moore

Lack of alignment between one's inner values and purpose and one's work in the world can result in frustration, hopelessness, boredom, and cynicism. But when people shift from outer- to inner-directedness and bridge purpose and action to their life, they find that meaning, empowerment, and well-being can emerge.

Participants will explore these issues through processes ranging from meditation and journey work, to questionnaires and self-assessment instruments. Individual and group exercises related to each participant's work situation will be used. Five themes will be explored:

- Purpose, values, and vision
- Personal transition processes
- Balancing individual and organization polarities
- Practical tools for the inner journey
- Sources for personal transformation and organization paradigm shifts

Participants will have the option of an individualized assessment for an additional $100 fee. This would include an individualized work preference analysis and report. Leaders will contact participants about this option.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

The Medicine Wheel Way

Carol Proudfoot-Edgar & Bob Edgar

This workshop will draw on the Native American Medicine Wheel ceremonies and teachings as resources for personal growth. Just as Western psychological theory provides a framework for describing human stages of development, so does the Medicine Wheel offer a framework for self-individuation. Both systems embody steps for healing. A primary difference, however, is that the Medicine Wheel way of living views humans as sacred beings and maintains that each individual must find their own balance of spirit, body, emotion, and mind.

The Medicine Wheel way has guided many peoples through their journeys of self-discovery. It illuminates the relationship of all things, each direction on the wheel having its particular meaning and pointing to aspects needed for integration. With this tool, information can be brought forth from the memory so that essential elements for balance are not ignored. Ceremonies and rituals mark the passage of seasons and significant events of individual and group life, and connect the individual to the great mystery of life.

This experiential workshop will use these ancient teachings, providing a supportive means for participants to continue their process of self-development and to deepen their relationship with the natural world. Activities will include learning the Medicine Wheel, learning about shamanism and the shamanic journey method, finding totem animals as guides, assessing one's current situation or season in life, and gathering one's resources for the next cycle of change. Drumming, chanting, and rituals will be used in a climate of trust and acceptance within which we will also be increasing our appreciation and respect for the natural world. Participants are encouraged to bring journals, drums, and rattles (if you have them).

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

Weekend of September 11–13

Experiencing Esalen

Experiencing Esalen Staff

This workshop is designed for people who have not previously been to Esalen. Its emphasis is on finding those approaches to self-awareness that work most effectively for the individual participant. These may include: sensory awareness, gestalt practice, group process, guided fantasy, meditation, massage. There is also time to explore the natural magnificence of the Big Sur coast.

Recommended reading: Perls, Gestalt Therapy Verbatim (Real People Press). $350

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods for improving their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop is valuable for anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility — painlessly and immediately.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $350

Making a Living with Your Left Foot

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

"Create like a god; work like a slave."

Constantin Brancusi pasted these words on the steps to his sculpture studio. Even he had to renew his courage every day, for the creative life is and must be a heroic life.

Why is it so easy to immerse oneself in routine work and so difficult to find and do what we really want to do? Many original ideas flit through awareness every day, but most fizzle into nothing. The flow of creativity is a human birthright, yet conditions must give it rise and foster its growth. Then comes the 99% cultivation that raises the raw germ of an idea to fruition.

Artistic self-expression demands intrepid hope, self-esteem, and dedication, especially when bills must be met with everyday employment. Everyone who works and also creates after hours fights a valiant battle against stagnation. How to make friends with one's deep self ? How to give it utterance? How to find the medium? Detect the message? Live by the real priorities?

Many have made creativity a form of spiritual discipline in daily life — so can we. Not only Constantin Brancusi, but hosts of others who have had to earn money while creating can help us. Wallace Stevens and Franz Kafka worked in insurance. Pearl Buck was a missionary in China; Karen Blixen ran a coffee plantation. John Masefield clerked in a customs office; Albert Einstein in a patent office. Bernard Malamud wrote short stories after lunch at the Census Bureau; T.S. Eliot was a banker. Anton Chekov, John Keats, Somerset Maugham, William Carlos Williams and Arthur Schnitzler were all physicians who managed to produce literature as well. Their examples can guide us and give us faith.

This workshop is designed for those whose lives, however successful, are (or ought to be) divided between paid professional activities and some form of satisfying expressive project or serious personal interest.

We will use meditation, journaling, interpersonal interaction and Gestalt to help ourselves and each other rise above the humdrum. Bring an open mind, a journal, and the glimmer of an idea for your own creative life. $350

Self-Transformation: The Art of the Actor for Everyday Life

Jane Marla Robbins

Transforming feelings of anxiety and insecurity into feelings of self-confidence and joy is a miracle that can happen in all areas of one's life — physical, emotional, spiritual. This transformation can help us fulfill our potential for the roles we have chosen to play — whether it be child, parent, artist, shaman, charismatic speaker, sensualist, or spouse.

Some of the techniques to be explored and discussed include: the actor's physical preparation; vocal preparation; mental and emotional preparation; spiritual preparation; relaxation; sense memory; the magic "as if"; personalization; substitution; playing a character; animal exercises; overcoming self-consciousness; perfect props; unspoken mantras; speaking the truth; breathing; the inner walnut; and the psycho-physical action.

Participants can learn how to replace old fears and paranoid projections with self-manufactured pleasures and positive projections. Many "real-life" situations ordinarily fraught with worry can easily be transformed using the Actor's Imagination. The power and pleasure of being able to create a sense of well-being and self-confidence at will can be experienced by everyone, and, once it has been discovered, it cannot be easily shaken.

No previous acting experience is necessary. $350

Finding My Place: A Workshop for Men

Jerry Johnson

"After twenty years of women's liberation, men are the new continent." Coming from Nancy Friday, an American feminist writer, this is a provocative statement. However, many American men are asking, "If this is true, what does it mean for me?"

The media has begun to confirm that many old patterns and definitions of masculinity are no longer valid. Films show male friendship and bonding without war; magazines explain new roles for men in parenting and other aspects of life that were previously the exclusive domain of women.

Participants will try to explore the often repressed parts of their masculinity which can form the basis for new self-identity and relationship. The workshop will combine universal male themes, ancient spiritual rituals, and experiential exercises to help men create a new mode of feeling. Themes will include:

- How does my absent father continue to shape my self-image?
- Do I have an inner guide to masculinity?
- How do I move beyond competition and fear in relating to other men?
- Is there a way to respond to contradictory messages from women about being sensitive and/or strong?

This workshop is for men who want to grow beyond old, traditional definitions of manhood but don't know where to begin, and for men who would like to explore the isolation they feel from the lack of meaningful relationships with other men. $350

Week of September 13–18

The Practical Art of Creative Risk-Taking

David Schiffman

To make effective, creative choices, you need courage, imagination, and the willingness to know your heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of our natures, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

During this week we will focus on how to develop a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, we will explore our capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Self-Acceptance Training: Basic

Richard Olney & Heather Burch

This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. It is defined as "the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgment, self-criticism, or self-evaluation." The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual's relationship with the universe.

Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cognitive examination of the individual's "pretends" and illusions that obstruct self-acceptance. Limited to 25 people. $675

Harriet Goslins & Patti Laurence

This workshop is open only to those who have previously worked with Harriet Goslins. The major emphasis will be on new, advanced floorwork that leads toward grace, agility, and clearing up remaining areas of chronic dysfunction. Participants will attend to issues of further discovery, attempt to let go of that which no longer serves them, and learn how to hear and trust the body's inner voice.

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants are given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clear," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continual change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness through the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life.

Cliff Dwelling: The Adventure of Spontaneity

Nina Wise

As part of a research experiment, rats were once put in a maze with one path leading to a small room with food, another leading to a room charged with an electrical current, and a third path leading to a room with playthings. The rats learned to avoid the electric shock, but the food room and the play room were equally popular. Play, it seems, can be as essential and instinctive to living beings as food and nutrition.

With the advent of technology and specialization, we modernized folk have forgotten how to play together. In tribal societies, people sing, make music, drum, dance, and tell stories as part of their daily lives. Play is an integral part of their culture, as it still is in our's. Yet we let singers sing, dancers dance, actors act, while we simply sit and watch. Maybe we have forgotten how good it feels to participate.

This workshop is about remembering; remembering how to dance, how to sing, how to tell stories about our lives, how to make it up as we go along, how to be together in a way that is lively, spontaneous, and creative. The workshop will include meditation, chanting, relaxation, movement, singing, writing, drawing, and theater games. We will also do spontaneous performance with and for each other in a safe and supportive environment.

Note: Everyone is afraid of performing, even professionals. Don't let your fear stop you. It's fun, challenging, and rewarding. $350

Daughter – Mother Dialogue

Mary Catherine Bateson & Sevanne Kassarjian

In this weekend workshop conducted by Mary Catherine Bateson and her daughter, Sevanne Kassarjian, enrollment is limited to mother-daughter pairs or close analogues. There is no maximum age, but a minimum age of sixteen is suggested, and mothers wishing to bring infants should bring their own mothers as well.

A variety of techniques of life history narrative and dramatic improvisation will be used to explore the cross-generational relationship, to enrich communication, and deepen understanding of the inevitable tensions and rewards. Women who are already mothers will have the opportunity to explore their self-understanding as daughters, and daughters who are not yet mothers to think about future parenthood. The group will explore the symbolism of mothering and nurturence for its positive and negative aspects in our society, and examine the mythological basis of the relationship between mothers and daughters. $350

Embodiment & Vision

Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)

The perception of wholeness is the consciousness of healing. — Ernest Holmes

Laura DeNuccio writes: "This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

"Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Learning to listen from within can lead back to the ancient wisdom of the Earth — returning us to our sacredness and wholeness. Participants will use breath, sound, and movement as meditations for enlivening the vitality of cells and tissue, for dissolving energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind. The sound meditations have the potential of moving the individual past the limitations of language, creating openings for new thought and inspiration. The emphasis will be on self-care, renewal, and nourishment.

"The group will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one's inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What is meaningful and significant to you? What's truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth. While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group can experiment with co-creating community, environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore this ever-unfolding adventure of spirit."

Action Theater: Really Pretending

Ruth Zaporah

When we were children, we frequently created our reality through pretending. We played freely in a spontaneous world. But in our adult world, we are often left with only a memory of this freedom. The Action Theater process rekindles this spirit of play, of being open to change and present to life.

Action Theater is a system of exercises and games that integrates mind, body, and spirit and leads toward free and spontaneous experience. Sessions begin with simple movement improvisations; participants come into, feel, and stretch their bodies. From this orientation they play within forms that increase awareness of movement and vocal verbal expression. Range of emotion expands; images, characters, and situations emerge from the territories of awareness, memory, and the imagination.

Each Action Theater event serves as a mirror. In the realm of awareness, there is little distinction between the theater and the street. Who we are, how aware we are, how we process our perceptions and reactions is the same everywhere. In the studio, we improvise within forms relevant to movement and theater, but the lessons affect our daily lives.

The workshop accommodates the novice, the explorer, and the practiced. $675

Chakra Integration and Esalen Bodywork

Laurie Lioness Parizek & Dean Marson

Chakras are vital life-enhancing centers that have their roots in the physical body, along the spine and deep in the brain. When open, they blossom like energetic flowers; balanced, they refine the mainstream current of energy in the central nervous system and help to integrate the physical, spiritual, and energetic life of each individual.

This workshop will use meditation, sound, supportive hands-on work, and sensitive touch to balance the chakras and the mainstream spinal current and gently and consciously open the channel that connects the earth to the heavens in each of us. Experiences will be both private and shared.

A flowing bodywork style, deep pressure point release, healing visualizations, gentle, energetic touch, and a diet that nourishes the spiritual as well as the physical will be explored and integrated. The leaders will emphasize centering, grounding, and breath practices.

Participants will be given guidelines for developing their own hands-on chakra balancing session. Some hands-on experience is necessary. Please bring your favorite musical instrument and personal healing tools.

Self-Acceptance Training: Advanced

Richard Olney & Heather Lynne Burch

This workshop is basically experiential, but time will also be given to theoretical and didactic considerations of interest to professional therapists. Please refer to September 13-18 for complete workshop description.

Please note: Due to the time given to the didactic material in this advanced workshop, not everyone will have a chance to work personally with the leaders. $675

Giving and Receiving

Gabriele Hilberg

Giving and receiving are fundamental, nourishing interactions between people which affirm our sense of worthiness and belonging. While at an integrated level giving and receiving are one and the same, most of us do not easily experience the transcendent quality inherent in this process.

Children intuitively defend against manipulative ways of being cared for. They can sense their parents own unfulfilled needs, which eventually makes them unable to appropriately respond to the child's needs. They sometimes form a nourishment barrier, which, in adulthood, can disable them from receiving love and support from others.

Participants will examine their own nourishment barriers and patterns of inappropriate giving through exercises and group interactions. The technique of family sculpturing will be introduced, which will allow underlying family dynamics to emerge. Such work facilitates awareness of the relationship between present behavior and childhood beliefs. With such awareness, we can then move beyond the barriers that prevent us from appropriate giving and receiving. $675

For the last three decades, Joseph Chilton Pearce has been synthesizing scientific brain research in physics, biology, and psychology in an effort to understand and map nature's plan for the development of human intelligence. He writes:

"The intelligence of the heart is the only force that can pull our garments of self together; it is the nurturing power so many of us missed right from the beginning of life, that unconditional love which alone would have assured us of the evolutionary progress nature intended. That progress is nothing but the progression of love toward its own source, and that source is the heart."

In this seminar, Pearce will share his findings on the three-part human brain and how each art has its own language, its own development cycle, its own purpose. He will talk about the difference between intellect and intelligence, the ego's inability to self-analyze, and the physiological connection between the heart and the brain that prevents our triune brain from being continually at war with itself.

Joseph Pearce's discourse will offer participants a glimpse of their own developmental cycle — where it was rich, where lacking — and give them tools for enriching the inner journey to their own hearts.

Endarkenment

Will & Ailish Schutz

Sometimes in our search for enlightenment we become humorless, and our search becomes tedious. Growth demands a respite from intensive struggle.

This workshop can provide a vehicle for the turn downward. We shall explore: how to establish and maintain meaningless relations; what to worry about while meditation; advanced covert blaming and inducing guilt in loved ones; how to become the most sympathetic victim/martyr in your social group; guilt without sex. This approach, similar to Feldenkrais's "live the disasters" and the "homeopathic principle" (Will Schutz, Body Fantasy), can be as valuable for attaining enlightenment as the direct route — and more fun. In addition, participants in this workshop will have opportunities to explore, play with, and celebrate the shadow — that which we usually hide. $350

Vicki Topp & Ray Swartley

Participants will be instructed in basic methods used in giving a pleasurable and beneficial massage. Fundamental elements of body work, such as breath awareness, grounding movement, quality of touch, and stress reduction, will be introduced. The workshop is available to beginners as well as to those who wish to brush up on their massage skills.

A Week with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $675

The Nature of Movement: Aikido and Wilderness

Steven Harper & Wendy Palmer

In this week-long workshop, participants will work indoors with energy awareness and principles derived from aikido, and outdoors on short day-hikes into Big Sur's backcountry to explore the movement that nature inspires. Both aikido and hiking are moving meditations which, when done well, require the individual to be in harmony with the natural world. There will be an opportunity to take what is learned on the aikido mat out into the natural world and bring what is learned from nature onto the aikido mat. Participants can then begin to integrate what they learn from aikido and from nature into their lives.

All evenings and most meals will be at Esalen. Participants need not have previous experience in aikido or hiking. $675

Meditation: The Living Dance

David Streeter

The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation. This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way.

In our retreat atmosphere we will prepare the body-mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. We will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama), and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a silent listening hike in the wilderness, group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery, and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life, and that crystal-clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

Their experience with thousands of workshop participants over the past 27 years has led Anne and Jim Armstrong to believe that everyone is intuitive — that intuition is part of humankind's standard equipment. The goal of this workshop is to have everyone experience their own innate intuitive ability, using it at will, on demand. This will be accomplished through exercises and meditation, with a minimum of discussion in order to allow each individual to recognize his or her own particular style of perception, and to trust the intuitive input one receives. Anne will use her intuitive abilities developed over the past 30 years to guide the participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

The spiritual and ethical aspects of the intuitive/psychic process will also be addressed, as well as the leaders' belief that intuition development is the gateway to Divine Wisdom, and should be the outgrowth of a healthy spiritual practice. We will demystify the intuitive/psychic process, and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives — personal, professional, and spiritual. Real life situations presented by participants will be selected for psychic/intuitive practice. $675

Yao Tamakloe

Yao Tamakloe is a West African teacher of dance, music, and anthropology. He has danced and taught with Babatunde Olatunji and Katherine Dunham for over ten years. Along with his wife Anindo Abukutsa, from Kenya, and his instructor from Ghana, Nanc C.K. Watercolors, Nature, and the Self

Sim Van der Ryn

Watercolor sketching is a quick, fluid, and fun way to capture the essence of a place. As an expressive medium, it teaches us many things about ourselves and our responses to place. We will start with simple beginning techniques, using a minimum of equipment so you can begin to explore your own individual possibilities and style. The rich and varied Esalen site offers all kinds of inspiring watercolor possibilities which the leader can help you to see and paint.

$350 (plus an $85 materials fee paid directly to the leader. It includes brushes, pigments, palette, and papers which will last you for many painting sessions after the workshop).

Finding Inspired Work in Mid-Life

Peller Marion

At 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns recently said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people usually don't live to be 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them, largely because their life seems effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop, drawing from the conceptual base of adult development theory and models of aging, will explore these issues. Through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as: What's my dissatisfaction? Who am I? What's my definition of success? The leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to revaluate one's work and relationships to gain clarity, focus, and direction toward one's life contributions. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

Ethics and Affect: Confronting the Virtues

Price Cobbs & George Leonard

Participants in group process work are urged to express feelings rather than opinions, to avoid making judgments and giving advice. The question remains as to whether such honest, non-judgmental expression of feelings can be applied to larger ethical and social considerations.

In this workshop, Ethnotherapy founder Price Cobbs and human potential pioneer George Leonard will seek to join the realm of feeling with that of ethical action. This will be an all-out, no-hold-barred encounter, in which the traditional virtues will be subjected to the test of the affects, and vice versa. Cobbs and Leonard will assist participants in avoiding denial, self-deception, self-righteousness, and an unthinking reliance on political correctness. Participants will be encouraged to experience and understand how their inner feelings influence their opinions and their actions in the world. Empassioned participation will be encouraged. $350

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart — Michael Murphy, (Chivas Irons) Golf in the Kingdom.

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It may be experienced not simply as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

During these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Trigger Point and Esalen Massage

Arthur Munyer & Esalen Massage Practitioners

The human body is a rich source of information and intelligence. Trigger point, the movement of myofascial tissue through soft, deep contact with pressure points, and Esalen massage are methods of working with the body that can help the practitioner communicate with stressed, blocked, and chronically troubled areas. This workshop will combine these modalities, along with joint release, movement, and studies in anatomy. It will also address concerns of burnout, depression, creativity, and peer support for those who have chosen a demanding profession. It is especially suggested for body workers, physicians, physical therapists, chiropractors, and other health care practitioners who want to expand their hands-on skills.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

A Confluent Somatic Approach

Steven Vasquez

This workshop is about the nuances involved when illness, injury, or pain become resolved beyond the conventional expectations of medical science. Information from people who beat the odds of recovery from "terminal" illness, "incurable" diseases, or difficult injuries will be reviewed. The role of belief, attitudes, and relationships in affecting the body will be experientially explored.

This confluent somatic approach synthesizes medical research, cross-cultural concepts, ancient spiritual practices, and modern psychology. It combines methods drawn from Ericksonian hypnosis, Focusing, and family systems theory with hands-on work to reduce physical symptoms. Abstract concepts like state-dependent memory, psychoneuroimmnology, and chakra systems are broken down into practical applications.

Workshop material will be experiential and didactic. Processes for tracking unconscious personal myths that underlie medical conditions will be demonstrated. Complex medical jargon, psychological processes, and esoteric energy methods will be simplified into functional uses that can affect health recovery in conventional psychological and medical settings.

The Writer's Way: A Personal Adventure Through Writing

Nancy Bacal

The Jewish High Holidays offer people of all denominations an opportunity for community and reflection. This is an invitation for anyone with an open heart to turn this holy time into a satisfying ritual of creativity. Using the pen, we will explore together our individual stories. Beginning with a series of writing exercises designed to bypass judgment and self-criticism, we will tap our reservoir of experience. Daily excursions on the page will encourage each participant to transform the burdens of our lives into stories, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. Guidance will be specific enough to excite the imagination yet loose enough for each of us to experiment with form and image and remain open to surprise.

This workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the would-be writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, walks, meditation, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The intention will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, stimulating relationship with our work.

Taoism and the Shen

Master Share K. Lew

Traditional Taoist concepts of health, longevity, and harmony with nature will be introduced by Master Lew, a temple-trained Taoist priest from southern China. The core of the workshop will be instruction in "the Shen," a set of twelve non-strenuous exercises (six standing, six sitting), whose primary purpose is self-healing. These exercises also develop concentration, increase visual and auditory acuity, and enhance sensitivity to oneself and others. Master Lew will discuss the use of everyday foods and Chinese herbs in healing and tell stories from his life in the monastery.

Master Lew, now 74, first began to teach Taoist internal cultivation to non-Chinese in 1970. His monastery style, Tao Ahn Pai, dates back 1300 years to Lui Tung Pin, a historical personage of the Tang Dynasty and one of the Eight Immortals of Taoism.

Following the Thread, Revealing the Fabric

David Silverstein & Joyce Lyke

The leaders write: "Most of us go through life ignoring, judging, or rejecting the content of our inner or unconscious life rather than paying attention to the information and messages we are giving ourselves. In our haste to be doing, we have forgotten our Being, and we have surrendered to the conditioning that limits a fuller experience of who we are.

"By attending to whatever is emerging in the moment, with interest and curiosity, we can begin to follow the thread of our inner life, detach ourselves from our conditioned responses, and perhaps discover that which is most essential, the fabric of our Being.

"The purpose of this workshop is to bring us closer to ourselves. We will combine meditation, breath exercises, sound, movement, and personal work in this week of inquiry. Through various awareness practices we will work and play with what emerges without coercion or judgment." $675

The Vision and Practice of Human Transformation

George Leonard

It may be argued that, in potentia, every human being is a genius, and that the ultimate creative capacity of the human brain/body is, for all practical purposes, infinite. Each of us is a prodigious learning animal, and our ultimate destiny may well be to evolve capacities that would now be termed extraordinary. Perhaps it is only due to the limitations imposed by faulty notions of childrearing and schooling, along with the failure of national vision and practice, that we rarely develop even a small fraction of our potential.

In this hands-on workshop, human potential pioneer George Leonard, informed by his work with Michael Murphy in the development of integral Transformative Practice, outlines a new human vision and provides a practical map with which you can begin your journey toward the realization of your inborn genius and creativity. The workshop will involve discussion, demonstration, and the gentle movement and imaging exercises of Leonard Energy Training (LET), a practice inspired by the art of aikido.

Chakra Psychology

Nancy Rosanoff

The chakra system is generally known to be an ancient Hindu concept of spiritual energy centers located along the spine, which are awakened or energized as individuals progress spiritually. This course gives participants a modern understanding of how to use the chakras as guides in their quest for psychological and spiritual development.

Awakening the chakras allows people to observe the interaction between the body, mind and spirit. The chakras can thus become tools to balance daily life within the context of a greater spiritual reality, with such practical applications as: enhancing self-understanding, improving loving relationships, changing unwanted behavior patterns, and unblocking creative energy.

Participants will work with their chakra spirit guides, yoga stretches, chants, meditation, breathing and awareness exercises, drawing, and writing to explore their chakras and themselves, open blockages, and heal past pains.

A Retreat for Women of Experience: Mid-life and Beyond

Lenore Lefer & Anne Yeomans

The gifts of woman are many. They have too often been undervalued and made invisible until we sometimes cannot see them ourselves. Today, more than ever, the earth needs these gifts.

This is an opportunity for women in midlife and beyond to come together to explore the issues that are on our minds and in our hearts. What are the challenges we each face? How can we support each other in reclaiming and honoring our passion, our tears and our outrage, our laughter, and our beauty? How can we express our deepest values at this time in our lives?

The retreat will include time to speak and tell our stories, and time for silence. Each day will include periods of hatha yoga, walking meditation, and group process.

Themes to be explored will include:

- cultural perspectives on the older woman
- issues of loneliness and companionship
- the wisdom of the body
- sexuality and intimacy
- menopause
- power and self-expression
- self-care in the midst of responsibilities
- spiritual questions of mid-life

It is our hope that these days together will strengthen our trust and renew our spirit so that we can return to our lives with more joy, more tenderness toward ourselves and others, and more boldness towards living all that is important to us. $350

Pushing, Pulling, and Lifting: Feldenkrais in Daily Life

Laurence Goldfarb

This workshop introduces the Feldenkrais Method*, and its application to the movements of everyday life. The focus will be on finding the gentle strength inherent in our physical design and using it to make pushing, pulling, and lifting easier and more comfortable. We will focus on the following questions:

- What is the human body's blueprint for motion?
- How does this plan determine what is safe? Efficient? Comfortable?
- What interferes with optimal movement?
- Can learning new ways of moving help us overcome limitations?
- How can easy, light, painless movements improve our abilities?

Participants will be verbally guided through a series of movement sequences composed to experientially answer these questions. Interactive group exercises designed to enhance observational abilities and lecture-discussions designed to clarify the how and why of the Method will supplement the movement lessons.

Although this course is open to anyone interested in improving his or her ability to move (and understanding of movement), it will be of particular interest and benefit to those who work with others in recovering from chronic pain, rehabilitating from disability, preventing work and sport injuries, and improving human performance. This includes physical and occupational therapists, doctors and nurses, dance teachers and coaches, bodyworkers and movement therapists, ergonomists and injury prevention specialists. $350

New Competences for an Age of Uncertainty

Donald Michael

Because we live with unprecedented levels of complexity and uncertainty, an abiding crucial challenge for each of us is learning how to be better learners. The old answers and questions are increasingly ineffective. Yet conventional definitions of competence encourage each of us, as well as organizations, to avoid learning by denying or disguising uncertainty so that we appear to know what we are doing. The result is increasing stress, anxiety, and inadequate personal and organizational performance.

This seminar will introduce a set of interlocking skills or "new competences" necessary for making humane and effective decisions when uncertainty can provide the occasion for learning — in work places and in interpersonal and family situations. These skills include: acknowledging and specifying high levels of uncertainty, error embracing, being future-responsive, boundary spanning, interpersonal communication, and self-knowledge.

The approach will be both cognitive and experiential. Participants will have the opportunity to become more comfortable with the vulnerability that accompanies facing their uncertainties; to question the need to act cautiously out of fear of making a mistake; and to reexamine the incentives for those defensive posturings that make it so hard to act responsibility and compassionately. Story Magic and Jewish Intuition

Rabbi William Cutter
& Stephanie Waxman

In the beginning was the word —John 1:1

Why are people still telling stories that are thousands of years old? What makes a story Jewish? How can we use Jewish stories in our own lives, even it we aren't Jewish?

Jews have always seen stories as the "unfolding of God." These stories reflect an attempt to understand the spiritual possibility in the commonplace event. This workshop combines the theological insights of the rabbinical tradition with the story-telling techniques of theater improvisation. Through non-verbal interpretation, personal memories, and collective dreaming, we will probe the essence of various Jewish stories, from the Bible to folktales, to the stories of the Baal Shem Tov and Nachman of Bratzlav.

Climbing inside these tales uncovers their deeper meanings which have resonated for centuries, and can still speak to our own everyday lives. $350

Gestalt Practice

Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear —
And when used — is inexhaustible.
—Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form — nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is *intra*personal rather than *inter*personal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in direct awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Liberate your Creativity: Improvisation in Life and Art

Stephen Nachmanovitch

All children share the quality of free play, open access to their own spontaneous creativity and imagination. Although each of us carries that essential source of creativity within ourselves, as we grow older we develop layers of inhibition and judgment that shut us off from this source. Whether or not we are artists, we have a need to express ourselves, but much of the time we feel blocked and frustrated. Our capacity for critical judgment makes a wonderful servant but a terrible master.

Learn to utilize the power of improvisation in busting blocks that inhibit the flow of creativity. Improvisation, that spontaneous balancing of technique and inspiration, is the key to all creativity. All artwork begins with that first moment the pen touches the empty page, the bow touches the violin, the brush touches the empty canvas.

Working with a Zen approach to creativity, we will try to liberate the freedom to create in the moment that comes from being in touch with our spiritual center, and explore ways of touching that center as a matter of daily practice.

The leader will present practical techniques and exercises for unblocking the flow, using the power of limits, the power of mistakes, and the material at hand to facilitate the opening of our creative voice. This workshop is for artists in any medium and those who wish to develop their creative powers. Whether you sing, paint, compose, write, or dance, you will create a new work each day of this workshop.

Before the workshop, please read: Nachmanovitch, Free Play: Improvisation in Life and Art (Tarcher). Write P.O. Box 265, Pacific Palisades. CA 90272 to order the book, or for more information. $675

The Aesthetic Self

Luc Brebion

To take part at all deeply in the experience of art requires a particular quality of concentration, a particular stillness of mind, and a particular openness to receive. Immersed in contemplation, we can enjoy the rare privilege of being in the presence of the artist and of letting him or her show us how to reach for what is essential within.

Luc Brebion, a native of France, has combed the museums of Europe in search of artistic treasures. In this year's Aesthetic Self workshop, he will again use a multimedia approach and an experiential method to help participants penetrate works of art and become absorbed by them. Their aesthetic sense will be developed through a uniquely designed presentation of selected masterpieces of painting, music, and literature. Thus trained, they will be given the opportunity to learn the recognitional skill required to truly perceive the substance that real art can offer. $350

Jerry Fletcher, Edward Hinkelman & Kelle Olwyler

Most people have had the experience of having something they were doing "take off" and go surprisingly well, much better than expected. Yet most people assume such times are lucky accidents, that it is not possible to create or sustain such performance deliberately or without stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout.

The results from more than ten years of research and testing by the workshop presenters demonstrate that these times of exceptional performance are not accidental. Each individual has a pattern of actions that produces his or her best results. Once people learn their personal high performance patterns, they can carry out activities in a way that suits them and produce better results for the same effort over sustained periods of time.

This seminar takes participants through a process in which they identify their individual high performance patterns and learn to apply them to their life and work. Developed through years of work with successful managers, executives, professionals, and work teams, it offers an approach to high performance that can be sustained. It is a clear alternative to the stress, fatigue, and eventual burnout that accompanies constantly forcing oneself to peak periods of high output in order to achieve high performance. $675

Biodrama: Know Your Self, Live Your Self

Lorenzo Ostuni & Katriona Munthe

Biodrama is a method for developing human potential and for personal renewal. It employs dream, body language, poetry, imagery, symbols, and music; it is both contemplative and active work. Its roots go back three-thousand years to the spiritual culture of ancient Greece, uniting the Orphic and Eleusinian Mysteries with present-day psychological research.

Participants will be invited to undertake a mystic journey in which to experience fundamental moments of their lives; birth, love, and death. They will work on visions and emotions of preceding states of consciousness and may find that this representative process helps integrate their individual mystery with the collective experience of humankind. This life performance, the first part of Biodrama, often elicits a regenerating experience for the protagonist. Ostuni's commentary on this performance/experience is the second part of Biodrama and will be tape-recorded for each participant.

This ritual performance workshop will be conducted in Italian and English. $675

Cortical Reeducation® and The Feldenkrais® Method

Harriet Goslins, Patti Lawrence & Mark Bender

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. Be reeducating the brain-muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk or injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back, to improve their posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provider approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

An Exploration of Childhood Sexual and Physical Abuse Issues for Healers

Jessica Moore Britt

This workshop is for healers working with survivors of childhood abuse. Our exploration will include: 1) your attitudes, feelings, and experience and how this effects you personally and professionally; 2) at the meeting of healer/client what is needed to facilitate the healing process.

Since sexual and physical abuse impacts the body directly, we will examine this impact on a person's sense of self and how our work can recognize and include the body.

Specifically, we will address the questions of boundaries, the sado-masochistic process, splitting and how to deal with the powerful effects of the superego. We will address the special issues of clients with new or uncertain memories, and the similarities and differences between physical and sexual abuse and the profound effects when both are present in the same client.

We will inquire into how the process of disidentifying from the abusive past is aided when the work is grounded in a spiritual perspective and practice.

This workshop will be both didactic and experiential, and we will be working with each other. Individual and group process will be available as needed.

Jessica writes: "As a survivor I have been working in the healing profession for 20 years, working with abuse issues for the last 12 years. I especially extend an invitation to healers with their own abuse histories."

Conscious Loving: A Body-Centered Approach to Relationship Transformation

Gay & Kathlyn Hendricks

Relationships are the primary arena in which our deepest selves are either concealed or revealed. This workshop is designed for people in close relationships and professionals who counsel couples. Participants will work on the transformation of present relationships while exploring the seven major principles of conscious loving: commitment, learning to love yourself, learning to feel, claiming creativity, learning to tell the microscopic truth, keeping your agreements, and learning to live more consistently in a state of positive energy. This workshop has two major purposes: 1.)to expand the experience of love past previous limits; and 2.)to learn to rest in the essence that underlies persona.

Using video analysis, participants will learn to use the "Five Flags," the five nonverbal signals which reveal stress points in relationships. Based on the leaders' experience with over 1500 couples, they will introduce breath and movement techniques that accelerate the process by which people in close relationships can attain their goals. Participants will learn techniques designed to make it easier to tell the truth, and take healthy responsibility for feelings and issues.

Among the tools to be used: video feedback, movement processes, breathwork, and dyadic communication activities. Reading Conscious Loving (Bantam) before the workshop is highly recommended. $675

Handwriting Patterns: Possibilities for Healing and Change

Vimala Rodgers

Whether we print or write, the pressure we exert on the pen, the margins we create on the page, the size and slant of our writing, each circle, loop, angle, connective, and individual letter provides a valuable piece to that fascinating puzzle each person calls "myself." Like a fingerprint, our handwriting is uniquely our own, and, like parts of our personality, each component is interrelated. Applied graphotherapy is that science which focuses on altering writing patterns as a means of transforming the attitudes that influence our belief system, which in turn determine the choices we make in our lives.

Using each person's handwriting as the working model of their personality, the leader will study the writing of each participant and suggest a specific writing change as a means of uncovering unacknowledged creativity and untapped potential. By exploring handwriting from this new perspective, participants can learn to identify their own limiting beliefs and attitudes, and be given tools to help heal, transform, and move beyond them. Non-intrusive yet challenging, the transformational process is truly in the hands of the writer.

The Endocrine System: Relating Body, Mind, and Movement

Bonnie Bainbridge-Cohen & Seymour Levine

The endocrine glands secrete major chemical substances that are fundamental to the maintenance of bodily functions, including the nervous system. They influence all cells in the body through their balance and imbalance and have profound effects on the brain.

This workshop will explore the endocrine system from two perspectives, each representing the major interest of the workshop leaders. Seymour Levine, a biological scientist, will emphasize the anatomical and physiological aspects of the endocrine system; Bonnie Bainbridge-Cohen, a noted body worker, will discuss the endocrine glands as they relate to movement, vocalization, development, and perception. This will be a unique forum for the convergence of the movement oriented approach to the endocrine system and the biomedical approach. The workshop will focus on the following: 1) the identification, location, secretions, and cellular function of the endocrine glands; 2) supporting and expressive functions of the glands in movement, vocalization, and states of consciousness; 3) relationship to corresponding reflex points and spinal energy centers; and 4) the underlying perception and developmental process.

This workshop is open to anyone interested in the relationship between movement, the body, and the mind. No prior experience with Body-Mind Centering or prior knowledge of endocrinology is necessary.

Toward Waking Up: Cultivating Mindfulness

Charles Tart

Ordinary consciousness is a kind of waking sleep, an absorption in our personal and cultural illusions. This apparently strange Eastern concept is actually supported in detail by Western psychological data. Given this, how can we awaken? Our essential selves are often invalidated and suppressed in childhood, as part of "education." How can we rediscover and nourish them? Our instinctual and sensory wisdom lies buried under cultural noise and distraction. How can we come to our senses?

G.I. Gurdjieff, one of the first teachers to adapt Eastern spiritual methods to Western culture, developed practices for awakening from our sleep, our cultural trance. Occasional retreats to exotic places like Esalen are quite useful, but ordinary life is the best setting for using psychological and spiritual development practices that emphasize balanced work on mind, emotions, instincts, and body. In this workshop we will examine Gurdjieff's main ideas, adding to them from, and integrating them with, modern growth psychology.

Self-observation and self-remembering will be taught as a primary meditation-in-life for increasing self-understanding and living more effectively in the here-and-now. These techniques use that most marvelous tool that is always with us, our bodies. We will also review basic formal meditation practice as an aid to mindfulness. Emphasis will be on practicing awakening as part of everyday life.

Craniosacral System: Intermediate Workshop

Jim Asher & Jane Harrington

This workshop is open to people with the skills of a basic or introductory class in Craniosacral work. Needed skills include the ability to follow the craniosacral pulse, and some familiarity and experience with the basic protocol.

During this workshop we will go back through the basic series and re-tone the cranium. We will be doing membrane releases and teaching alternate lifts; exploring the way these interface with the standard sequence. The class will teach mouth work, including the maxillas, palatines, and the vomeis relationship to strain patterns. The principles and practice of unwinding and somatic emotional release will be introduced.

The workshop will combine lectures and slides of functional anatomy of the membrane and bony systems and the fluid movement. There will be hands-on demonstrations followed by supervised practice.

Working with the Dreaming Body: An Introduction to Process Work

Nisha Zenoff

Process Work, developed by Dr. Arnold Mindell and his associates in Zurich, is grounded in the belief that all of life's events and experiences have the potential for being useful and meaningful. Nature makes no mistakes — even the unexpected, unusual, and nonsensical occurrences in our lives, if observed and explored, can provide us with valuable information. Process Work provides us with the tools for exploring and working with a wide range of human experiences including: chronic symptoms, dreams, movement, relationships, and groups. Based on the theory of the "Dreambody," the body is seen to mirror dreams, myths, and fantasies. In effect, the body is a dream trying to happen.

A compassionate atmosphere will be provided for participants to gain skills for working on relationship issues, physical symptoms, and dreams. The focus will be on: 1) the basic foundations of process work; 2) the practical skills needed to apply process work concepts to their personal and professional lives; and 3) ways of bringing creativity and a sense of play into the serious business of being alive. It will include discussion, demonstration, and experiential work.

Transitions

Elliot Waker Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg

Disorganization is a natural part of transition and facilitates reorganization. People are almost constantly in a state of transition — whether it be getting married, beginning a new career, becoming a parent, letting go of a relationship, or moving on to the next stage in the life cycle. These changes can be exciting and, at the same time, can evoke a loss of internal balance.

The result can be loss of self-esteem, confusion about one's identity, and doubts about one's perceptions. New feelings and ideas are fragile during these periods of transition and require special nurturance.

The goal of this workshop is to gain perspective on the process of making transitions. Through guided fantasies, self-exploration, and didactic presentations, participants can develop ways of enhancing their understanding of themselves and increasing their overall effectiveness.

The Rosen Method®: Bodywork and Movement

Marion Rosen & Sue Brenner

The body tells the clearest what we want to hide the most. This work is about transformation — from the person we think we are to the person we really are. —Marion Rosen

At its heart, the Rosen Method® is simplicity itself. It works with muscles that are held, and brings about physical and emotional awareness through relaxation. The practitioner's hands contact tense muscles, matching tension with equal pressure. Often the tightness softens, and the area that was held begins to move with the breath. These changes are then used as guides to the client's inner processes — buried feelings, attitudes, and memories.

The bodywork is complemented by movement that encourages natural, free breathing, and uses gentle, stretching, swinging and jumping exercises to improve body alignment and flexibility. The joints are moved through the full range of motion. Accompanied by music, the exercises are performed in a group setting, individually, and with partners. The objective is to release holding and rediscover the joy of movement.

Integrity: The Search for Moral Wholeness

John Beebe

Integrity is one of the deepest needs of the individual, yet its nature is elusive. We encounter its reality when we feel misunderstood or violated, when we do not stand up for what we believe, and when we fail to realize the impact our actions have on other people. Often integrity is the central issue within such emotions as shame and anxiety, and in our personal experiences of pride and guilt.

This workshop will make integrity more tangible by exploring how we feel its absence and presence in interpersonal relationships, and by examining its psychological dynamics. Difficulties with integrity will be highlighted and ways to work on them explored.

Russian films will be shown and discussed in relation to Russian psychology. The workshop will also explore the Stalinist legacy, and examine those historical patterns that might threaten to persist even in contemporary times. There will be discussions comparing Russian and American helping professions and psychological practices, and participants will explore psychology's creative contribution to the dramatic changes involved in the social and political life of Russia today.

Hands On: The Roots of Rhythm Through Drumming & Massage

Gordy Ryan & Peggy Horan

The fundamental nature of hand drumming and massage is very much the same: relaxation into the river of rhythm whose waters soothe our souls and heal our bodies. With this as the goal, participants will explore traditional rhythm and songs from Africa, Brazil, The Caribbean, and New Orleans, with an emphasis on the relaxation and internal equilibrium produced when the player opens to an awareness of "the groove" of giving and receiving vital energy. Through the hands-on practice of massage work, participants will be encouraged to let their inner rhythm guide them in healing the body through intuitive touch.

Change and Self-Esteem

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creativity if one is to live a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, enables one to confront resistance and fear, and increases a willingness to change and take risks.

Sensory Awareness: Awake, Tune-In, and Unfold

Charlotte Selver

Some forty years ago Charlotte Selver's teacher, Elsa Gindler, began exploring the natural potential of the human being. The work which evolved from these explorations was an approach through practice, involving the person as total organism. Gindler's innovative methods very often unearthed, liberated, and cultivated abilities and sensitivities which her students had never been conscious of possessing.

To "awake" means that one's energies — neuromuscular and perceptive — become altered, leading to greater movability, both psychologically and physically, and to a fuller use of the senses and intuitive powers. In order for this to occur, a deeper peace is needed so that sensations can come clearer, and rigidities, pressures, and preconceptions can gradually dissolve. In becoming "tuned in" by another person, or by a task or given situation, one comes fact to face with the creative nature of the organism, with the miracle of potency. Powers arise and come into play which correspond exactly to the demands of the occasion. This calls for permissiveness, subtle reactiveness, and openness to the moment.

The cultivation of these functions can lead to an unfolding of our lives in a far richer and more responsive way than what we are used to. Once again we can restore the delight of ever-new experiencing which was our birthright in childhood, but can be lost in the course of our education into adulthood.

The White Hole in Time: Spiritual Perspectives on the Crisis of Our Times

Peter Russell

This weekend will be an opportunity to explore in depth with Peter Russell the ideas behind his latest book, The White Hole in Time. Drawing on physics, psychology, philosophy, and spiritual teachings, he paints a new picture of humanity and its place in the Universe. He believes that we may have reached a moment towards which evolution has been building for millions of years — an awakening to our true spiritual heritage.

Discussions will focus on the premise that the global crisis now facing us is at its root a spiritual crisis — a crisis of consciousness. Clearly fundamental changes in policies and behavior are required, but it is also time for humanity to ask some deep and searching questions: Who are we? What enables one species out of millions to cause so much havoc? What do we really want? And why are we not achieving it? How can we let go of our attachments? What is the essence of spiritual growth — beyond techniques, teachings, teachers, and texts?

If we do survive this global crisis, what then? We could be approaching an evolutionary climax more profound than any of us have dared to imagine.

Body, Heart and Soul

Paul & Niyaso Christine Carter

This workshop explores the many aspects of sexual life, with the objective of helping to heal old wounds, letting go of restrictive programs, dissolving fears, and becoming free to appreciate your own sensual-sexual nature. The five days are structured as a series of initiations beginning with conception and going through childhood, puberty, adolescence, into the mature union of sexual energy and open-hearted love. The goal of the workshop will be to help bring back into your life:

- a heightened sense of well-being in your body
- a lighter and more open heart
- the ability to communicate without fear
- deeper intimacy in your relationships

When we are free to appreciate our sensual aliveness, when our sexual energy is integrated with the energy of our heart, and when we can let our bodies, hearts, and souls experience their own natural flow, true intimacy can happen in our lives. Council of All Beings

John Seed

The Council of All Beings is a series of rituals created to help individuals feel their connection with nature in their hearts and bodies. By rediscovering our interconnectedness with all beings, we see that the pain of the earth is our own pain, and the fate of the earth is our own fate. The Council of All Beings empowers people to act on behalf of the earth, and gives clarity and direction for the work ahead.

Participants will have the opportunity to review the human evolutionary journey, to shed their solely human identification in order to feel greater empathy for the myriad species and habitats of the Earth. Through personal sharing, meditation, and ritual, participants will explore the depths of their concern and love for the planet in this time of crisis. As many individuals have discovered, alignment with a larger identity clarifies, dignifies, and heals one's personal conflicts. In the same fashion, it clarifies and orders patterns of consumption, needs for intimacy and support, and priorities for action. This gathering provides tools for putting this into practice in daily life.

This work draws upon current scientific findings to expand our understanding of the ecological crises that threatens the planet. The leader will discuss systems theory and the Gaia hypothesis to provide a solid, rational-conceptual foundation for the deep ecology movement, and relate them to spiritual traditions thousands of years old that attune individuals to the Earth. $350

Linda Tellington-Jones

This course will provide hands-on practice of the Tellington Touch, a method which has been used successfully for healing and communicating with an intriguing variety of animals. Tellington Touch releases tension, fear, and pain, and enhances cellular function and overall well-being. The benefits to the toucher are as great as to the touched.

Participants will learn how to use this method to treat shock, to release chronic and acute pain, and to alleviate allergies in both humans and animals. Eleven "touches" will be taught, with participants practicing on each other and working with live animals in the Gazebo. $350

Courage

Joyce Frazee

In the mouth of the dragon there are many jewels. — Buddhist proverb

For some of us it takes courage just to live our daily lives. Every day we awaken to face the demons in our lives — demons that come in many forms: perfectionism, guilt, avoidance, shame, despair, failure. Time passes and we become skillful in living despite the constant awareness that these demons are preventing us from experiencing the fullness of life. Their existence drains our energy and limits, our joy and freedom. But getting close to them, allowing ourselves to confront them, is very difficult to do.

This weekend will give us an opportunity to find the courage to face our demons. Participants will be encouraged to look at the things in their life that are difficult to face, and will be given support to help recognize and confront them. This will be done through gestalt practice, dream work, and bioenergetics. Drawing, dance, and meditation will also be used to recover the jewels from the dragon. $675

Learning and Movement: Feldenkrais Application and Theory

Mark Reese

The Feldenkrais Method® was originally developed by Israeli physicist, judo teacher, and rehabilitation innovator, Moshe Feldenkrais. Feldenkrais based his discoveries on a synthesis of physical, biological, and human sciences, and a self-guided movement reeducation prompted by crippling knee injuries. The Feldenkrais Method® is a learning-based approach to change with profound implications for many professions — rehabilitation, psychology, education, performing arts, athletics, and gerontology. It is also an easy-to-use, self-help method and a path to personal realization.

In this intensive workshop, Mark Reese uses subtle and effortless group movement exercises, discussions, and demonstrations to lead the participants through an exciting, in-depth exploration of The Feldenkrais Method®. The workshop will include specific exercises for care of the back, neck, shoulders, breathing, and posture. Physical awareness will be used to train coordination, flexibility, efficiency, sports performance, and grace of motion throughout the body. The movements of infants will be used to gain insight into adult movement patterns, and the relationship between motion and emotion. The workshop will explore movement-based approaches to psychological learning that parallel Milton Erickson's hypnotic techniques.

Life Stories: Healing the Sorrows

Peter Finkelstein

Painful experience is one of life's givens. However, whether we are discussing the inevitable existential concerns of aloneness, freedom, or death, or the personal tragedies of divorce or untimely loss, it is the manner in which we give form to our painful stories that defines our personal development. The attention we give to the ongoing creation of our own story can help us broaden our sources of satisfaction, concentrate our energies productively, and recognize life's wisdom in its many forms.

Participants will use group exercises and individual work to help them acknowledge and integrate painful life experiences such as divorce and bereavement. Dream interpretation, hypnosis, didactic material, and attention to group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Blocks to the successful completion of healing will be explored.

The Modern Warrior and The Samurai Game

George Leonard & Annie Styron Leonard

A many or woman with outward courage dares to die;
A man or woman with inward courage dares to live. — Lao Tzu

The Modern Warrior is not one who goes to war but rather one who exhibits integrity in every aspect of living, one who seeks to attain control then act with abandon. For the Modern Warrior, life is vivid, immediate, and joyful. He or she lives each day to the full, and is fulfilled in serving others. This workshop is based on the premise that to achieve peace in the world and harmony in daily life, it might well be necessary for men and women to reown the warrior ideal. Through the centering and movement exercises of LET (Leonard Energy Training) as well as through participation in a Samurai Game, you will be invited to get in touch with your own unacknowledged powers, and thus to discover the hidden warrior within. You will practice alternative ways of dealing with conflict and stress. Guidance will be offered on how to apply the warrior idea to daily life. This workshop will not be physically strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

The Voice of the Earth: An Introduction to Ecopsychology

Theodore Roszak & Betty Roszak

If psychosis is the attempt to live a lie, the epidemic psychosis of our time is the lie of believing we have no ethical obligation to our planetary home. Ecopsychology is a growing new approach to therapeutic practice and environmental ethics that seeks to define the ecological dimensions of psychiatric theory.

The sanity that binds us one to another in society is not necessarily the sanity that bonds us companionably to the creatures with whom we share the Earth. If we could assume the viewpoint of nonhuman nature, what passes for sane behavior in our social affairs might often seem to be madness. The urgent need to re-establish the bond between our lives and the environment that supports our lives has created a new psychic priority — the anguish of the "ecological unconscious." At this level our psyche experiences a repression that weighs upon our inherited sense of loyalty to the planet that mothered the human mind into existence.

This workshop will review the relevance of Freud, Jung, Gestalt, and other schools to the creation of an "ecological ego." Discussions will focus on the ecopsychology movement, its relationship to the New Cosmology, and to environmental ethics. Participants will draw upon The Voice of the Earth, Theodore Roszak's latest book, and Betty Roszak's The Crest of the East Pacific Rise and Starbirth, two "sound texts" for voices and musical accompaniment that introduce the aesthetic and experiential dimensions of ecology through exercises in guided poetic imagery.

What Can I Do to Make a Difference?

Richard Zimmerman

For anyone who feels powerless in the face of today's overwhelming problems, the question "What can I do to make a difference?" can be heard as a plaintive cry. In spite of the enormity of the problems challenging our world today, Richard Zimmerman remains an uncommon optimist who actively advocates and believes there are workable solutions to our global problems. Rather than focusing on the size of the problem, he believes making a difference requires that we concentrate on contributing to the solution.

During this workshop participants will explore creative and practical solutions to several pressing issues of our time. Concerns for the environment, human rights, world peace, illiteracy, health issues, and animal rights will be addressed, as well as the philosophy that these complex problems are solvable only through the collective actions of concerned individuals. To that end, the workshop will focus on examining the actions participants can take, and the resources they have available in order to make a difference in dealing with the issues that are closest to their hearts.

Advanced Zero Balancing: The Alchemy of Touch

Fritz Smith

In this advanced Zero Balancing weekend, participants will refine and expand their Zero Balancing skills, examine emotional and psychological content held in different tissues and energy fields of the body, and apply this knowledge to Zero Balancing sessions with each other. There will also be time for discussion and problem-solving. This workshop aims to extend understanding of the healing process as participants deepen their relationships with their work and each other, and explore new ways of interacting with the body/mind through touch.

Prerequisites for this program are the five-day Basic Zero Balancing program, or its equivalent, a working knowledge of Zero Balancing, and the readiness to further develop one's effective use of touch.

The 9 Ways of Zhikr Ritual℠: Ecstatic Movement

Michael Kramer & Paule Marx

In both Sufism and Hasidic Judaism it is well-known that repeating the name of God and the declaration of the Unity of God is a direct method for attaining liberated consciousness. Zhikr comes to us from the Sufi tradition and means to repeat the name of God.

The 9 Ways of Zhikr Ritual is a powerful ceremony utilizing movement, breath, and voice in a ritualized manner in order to produce a state of ecstasy. Ecstasy in this context means that moment when our consciousness becomes a single point without movement, while the Zhikr itself continues with the full force of its movement.

The Arica Zhikr is a one-hour ceremony comprised of nine distinct movements and mantrams in which we repeat the name of God. Primarily we are chanting "Toham Kum Rah", which is a name for the Divine Sparkle inside every human being. The ceremony is an exercise in deep and repetitive breathing that enables us to absorb with maximum effect the vital energy surrounding us. This exercise then allows us to experience a state of awakened consciousness.

We will learn the techniques and movements of the Zhikr on Friday night and Saturday; Sunday morning we will perform the full ceremony and Zhikr ritual itself as the conclusion of our weekend together. $350

Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming

Stephen LaBerge

Dreams are worlds of wonder, where anything imaginable can happen. Unfortunately, most of us sleep through our nightly journeys, unaware of the opportunities available. Only upon awakening do we realize that we have been dreaming.

We are not bound, however, to forever sleepwalk through our dreams. Lucid dreams are dreams in which we know we are dreaming while we're dreaming. Lucid dreamers are fully conscious that the world they are experiencing in the dream is a mental creation, and are completely free to act in the dream without constraints.

Research has shown that people can develop the skill of lucid dreaming, and that it can profoundly affect our brains and bodies. Participants will learn techniques for inducing lucid dreams and explore its uses: self-exploration, creative problem solving, enhancing self-confidence, healing, adventure, and self-integration leading to transcendence.

The scope of the seminar will extend beyond dreams and dream lucidity to provide an understanding of the nature of our experience of the world and our perceptions of "reality." Discussions will explore the possibility of comprehending all perceptions as illusory and waking realities as mental constructions very much like dreams.

The seminar is intended for avid dreamers and people seriously interested in self-exploration and the enhancement of consciousness.

Body Rejuvenation

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is to start to rejuvenate the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body. Transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain. Work on changing the despondent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat one.

The recipe for beginning to rejuvenate a body in one session will be demonstrated to the group, and then experienced and performed by each participant.

This seminar is recommended for everyone. The older you are, the more stuff you have to work with. Class size is limited. Bring a swimsuit — two-piece for women.

Reinventing Love

Robert Solomon

Reinventing Love is an interpersonal probe into the most highly valued of all passions, its promise and its disappointments. The workshop will emphasize the essential creativity of love and the need to express and "reinvent" an emotion that is not torn between defensive individualism and independence. We will explore the myths of love in order to find out why love goes wrong, why we choose the wrong partners, and how to choose the right one in order for love to succeed.

Participants will examine the connection between intimacy and anger, and the fragile connection between love and dependency. Above all, our aim will be to understand why love is so important to us, and why it cannot be abandoned. $350

Healing the Body/Mind Connection: The Rubenfeld Synergy® Method

Ilana Rubenfeld

This workshop will provide an introduction to the Rubenfeld Synergy® Method, an elegant, powerful system that uses gentle touch, movement, gestalt practice, creative imagination, music, and humor.

Memories and emotions stored in the body can create tensions, energy blocks, and imbalances. Through exercises designed to contact, release, transform, and balance these cellular patterns, participants can freely explore their innate healing potential. The atmosphere will be one of acceptance, caring, and laughter, encouraging participants to move toward integration, empowerment, freedom, and new possibilities.

The Body and Zen

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is twofold: 1) to use body work methods and principles for releasing tension, trauma, and toxins from connective tissue; and 2) to circulate the vital energy in an aligned body. The group will draw from Rolfing® (structure), Feldenkrais® (function), and Zen (energy) to obtain these goals.

This is a hands-on workshop. Participants will give and receive body work and learn methods to recognize, work with, and relieve some types of chronic muscle pain. The class will be limited in size (two people per table). Participants are asked to bring a swimsuit, two-piece for women. Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive body work outside of class.

Five Days with Ilana Rubenfeld

Ilana Rubenfeld writes: "I would like to see us go 'out on a limbic' and address our emotional nature. The more integrated and integrative we are as healers, the more powerfully we can serve as agents of positive change in this fragmented world."

This workshop introduces the Rubenfeld Synergy® Method, a holistic system developed over the past 30 years that integrates body, mind, emotions, and spirit for healing of self and others. This blend of gestalt practice, Alexander Technique, Feldenkrais® exercises, and Ericksonian hypnosis will be used as a gateway to contact and express deep feelings and memories locked in the body. Group exercises and individual demonstrations will incorporate gentle touch, movement, music, and humor. Key issues will be:

- Surviving the wounds of a dysfunctional family
- Healing the inner child
- Evoking innate healing potential
- Interdependence between emotions and posture
- Dreams and body metaphors that reveal life patterns
- Playfulness and humor
- Tools for self-care

Five Days with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants can deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $675

Accessing Creative Process

Dianne Laurence

Spontaneity, imagination, trust and risk-taking are all essential ingredients in the creative life of the individual. They are not parcelled out at birth in limited supply, but are parts of our natural makeup and can be exercised and strengthened. Many people have strong creative instincts which they either ignore or mistrust, often claiming that they "just aren't that creative." In fact, the real issue is whether or not they are willing to take the risk and engage in a relationships that challenges their creative power.

Through theater games and painting, this workshop offers laypeople and artists alike an opportunity to see where and how they joyfully participate and where and how they resist. It is useful for people who are stuck, who want to find a way of going deeper, or who just want to play in areas they've been curious about. $675

Embracing the Darkness, Facing the Light: Celebrating Christmas

Richard Allen Hyde, Laurence Hall Jenkins & Deborah Anne Medow

Christmas is thought to be the most joyous celebration of the year, a time of giving and receiving gifts, decorating the house, parties, singing. Yet the spirit of Christmas sometimes gets lost in all the activity and many people yearn for a way to connect more deeply with the meaning of the season. Sadness and depression often accompany these holidays, and unresolved family conflicts can surface in a particularly powerful way.

Participants in this workshop are invited to observe how they feel about Christmas — Christmas present and Christmases past — how they feel about the Christian symbols of the season, about giving and receiving presents, shopping, God, commercialization — whatever comes up. The group will provide a safe and supportive atmosphere to bring these feelings to consciousness, acknowledge them, and honor what they mean to each individual.

A variety of exercises, gestalt awareness, dance, massage, and guided visualization will be used to help discover the deep mythical meanings and expectations this holiday holds for people, and to tap into the wellsprings of joy within. Those who wish can use this process to help plan and celebrate a Christmas ritual on Christmas Eve. $675

Practical Application of Ancient Initiatory Mysteries

Gideon Dreyer

Difficulties and obstructions tend to throw us back upon ourselves. During hard times we are often confronted with the parts of ourselves we usually try to avoid. It becomes easy to blame others for our difficulties, and we often deny what is happening in order to avoid dealing with ourselves. Difficult situations arise — that we can't change. But what we can change is the way we react to them, and how we let them affect our lives.

Participants will examine and focus on the tendency to become immobilized when obstacles cross our path. The teachings given to neophytes during initiation rites in ancient India, Egypt, and Greece will be passed on and explored for their practical application in contemporary life. These initiation rites can help each individual reach a personal understanding of what is needed in order to react to difficult times with strength and confidence. The workshop will focus on spiritualizing thoughts, feelings, and actions, and cultivating the will to act accordingly. In this way, external obstacles become an occasion for inner enrichment and education. The workshop itself could be considered an initiation, inasmuch as each participant can emerge from it existentially changed.

Daniel Marais, a South African born artist schooled at Michaelis Art School in Cape Town and well-known for his conceptual art projects, will assist the leader. $350

A Weekend with David Schiffman

The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning. $350

Biofeedback Assisted Open Focus and Brain Wave Synchrony Training

Les Fehmi & Susan Shor

Brain wave activity is directly correlated with the way one pays attention. Synchrony is associated with "in-to-it," broad-scoped attention and effortless performance; desynchronized brain wave activity is associated with remote, narrow-focused attention and effortful performance. Brain wave synchrony and attention training consequently guide one toward an awareness that is simultaneously narrowed-in on detail, panoramic in scope, and bathed in an effortless sense of the moment.

The Open Focus methods presented in this experiential workshop support the rapid reduction of both conscious and unconscious physical and emotional stress and pain. Rather than ignoring unpleasant experience, participants will practice melting it directly, using attention skills they already possess. This method of dissolving stress and pain generates a sense of well-being and creative energy. Interested workshop participants will receive biofeedback training using an instrument that monitors brain activity from the major lobes of the brain and provides a feedback signal when whole-brain, in-phase synchrony is produced. An Open Focus tape will be provided for home practice.

Moving from Love Addiction to Healthy Intimacy

Jed Diamond

Many of us are successful in our professional lives, but struggle in our love lives. Our romantic relationships are a series of disappointments, yet we continue to pursue them. We seek lovers to make us feel whole, yet we lose our sense of self. We cling to partners who are abusive, and are afraid to let go. Some of us have become relationship anorexics, starving ourselves for love because we are afraid to risk being hurt again. Many of us have become addicts and don't even know it. We turn to each other out of the same needs that drive some people to alcohol and others to cocaine. Interpersonal addiction, love addiction, is not only the most common addiction, it is the core out of which all other addictions emerge.

This workshop offers a safe and supportive setting in which to explore sexual, romantic, and relationship addictions. Participants will delve into the "black hole", the center of their being where they contact their earliest experiences of abuse and abandonment. There they may also find the "golden thread" which can lead them back to their true selves.

Small group interaction, writing, guided meditation, and movement based on aikido and energy awareness will be used to experience the differences between male and female love addictions, healthy love vs. love addiction, and the seven stages of developing joyous and peaceful intimate partnerships.

Hypnotic Innovations: Investigations in Living Using Ericksonian Hypnosis

Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

In the moment before a new idea unfolds, our attention becomes so fully focused that time seems to disappear. Perhaps without quite realizing it, we forget where we are and what's around us. These spontaneous states are the stuff out of which hypnotic experience unfolds and through which unconscious possibilities take form.

In this workshop, participants will investigate the hypnotic approaches developed by Milton Erickson and the systemic principles generated from Gregory Bateson's research in communication. They will explore how unconscious processes can be mobilized to creatively disrupt limiting life patterns, to organize innovative behaviors outside the range of normal conscious controls, and to more fully optimize their current living and work situations. Structured trance experiments and discussion will support the week's work.

This workshop may be of special interest to those in the helping professions as well as managers who want to expand their frames of reference and extend their understanding of Ericksonian hypnosis and communication skills. $675

Awakening Inner Power

Deborah Anne Medow, Mary Tesoro & Tom Elliott

Operating from the assumption that one's innate energies lie largely untapped, this group will explore alternative means of gathering inner power. Leonard Energy Training, a comprehensive system offering tools to meet the problems, pressures, and pain of everyday life situations, will be combined with gestalt to provide a foundation for personal growth and change. Yoga and massage will be interwoven with elements of the martial art of aikido to increase the flow of vital energy through the body, mind, and spirit. $675

Coming Out, Coming In: Defining Oneself Within the Group

David Hawkins

We each have a need to "come out," to express and celebrate our difference. We also have a need to "come in," to join and be seen, respected, validated, and valued. Unless we come out, we risk feeling fraudulent and diminished; unless we come in, we risk feeling alienated and can suffer from the continued, often unconscious, influence of shame. Using a self-examining group as a social microcosm, we can learn to recognize our own use of shame and scapegoating, and create a haven for both coming out and coming in.

If you have been excited, curious, resistant or insistent to proclaim your identity, this workshop offers a time for reflection, comparison, and support. Our goal is to appreciate the unique balance of belonging and individuating that shapes each of our lives. We will work towards a deeper understanding of the following issues:

- the costs and benefits of various shame management strategies
- the value of the minority voice to the group
- the four perspectives from which any group event can be viewed
- how to use these to make the group a corrective lens through which to see more of ourselves $675

Music for Everyone: Finding Your Long-Lost Musician

David Darling

David Darling's magical work with late bloomers, non-prodigies, professional musicians, and "burned out" teachers has been opening hearts to the mystery of sound for the last two decades. Regardless of prior experience, this workshop will take you to a deeper, more powerful music level. Bring an instrument or play on David's collection of world instruments. $350

Fire in the Earth: Poetry, Silence, and the Heart's Desire

David Whyte

A workshop for the New Year concerned with remembering half-forgotten and neglected desires that are central to our personal creativity and destiny. Fire has been an abiding image for creativity throughout human history, but the first steps into that flame depend upon our ability to rest in the silence present in our own bodies. These disciplines of silence are a way of understanding desire at a level deeper than we ordinarily experience.

Much of modern life has a way of distancing us from our bodies; seeing the body as a problem to overcome rather than the center of our experience. In hard times we often find it more difficult to remember rest and silence, and it's during these times that we need them the most. At the very start of the new year, this should be a time to remember through poetry, silence, voice work, and movement, the priorities closest to our heart's desire.

Ability or knowledge of poetry welcomed, but not the least bit necessary. $350

Introduction to Focusing

Mary McGuire & Roseann Kasayka

Focusing is a step-by-step process for gaining entry into a physically felt intelligence called body wisdom or bodily knowing. This method evolved from research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, and found that success cannot be predicted by either the personality of the client or the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be cultivated. The focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

Focusing's applications extend far beyond its use in psychotherapy. It enhances other methods of change or growth and is used in education, business, and work with cancer patients. It offers:

- A way of listening to oneself and others
- A means to personal insights
- A resource for spiritual growth
- A path to healing and reconciliation
- A catalyst for healthier relationships
- A method for reducing stress and preventing burn-out
- A means of getting in touch with one's creativity
- A tool for phenomenological research

This workshop will cover the six steps outlined in Gendlin's Focusing, which participants are encouraged to read before the workshop. Participants will be introduced to a holistic way of paying attention by creating an inner climate of gentleness, friendliness, allowing, receiving, being with, touching, listening, and waiting. This differs from the usual outside climate of forcing, pushing, shoving, and demanding. They will explore how to relate to both positive and negative experiences as they are carried in the body, without the usual response of being overwhelmed by feelings or running away from them. This way of being with oneself allows each experience to unfold in a positive direction, which allows life energy to flow forward in new ways.

You will experience the process through demonstrations, working in partnerships with supervision and feedback. You might want to bring a partner to work with you.

Zen Practice

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy

Zazen is the sitting practice which constitutes the heart, blood, and backbone of the Buddhist perspective. Through use of this clear, core practice, one can begin to penetrate thought itself to the place beyond thought where all thought begins, or that place which has been called "Large Mind."

The majority of time will be spent in refinement of the practice of Zazen (sitting meditation). Support will be given to the body through the use of traditional yoga posturing, stretches, and contemporary breath work.

Participants are asked to wear loose, layered clothing. $675

Focusing, Dream Work, and the Helping Relationship

Mary McGuire & Roseann Kasayka

Focusing originally came out of research conduced by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, and they found that success cannot be predicted by either the personality of the client or the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be cultivated. The focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

This workshop is for psychologists, counselors, social workers, nurses, doctors, and others in the helping professions. Focusing is beneficial to these individuals because it augments their understanding of the client's inner process and aids in their own self-awareness as helper. It allows the practitioner to recognize the vulnerable or painful places in the other where new life wants to emerge, and to facilitate growth in a gentle way that honors the other's experience.

Participants will practice the focusing process called Experiential Listening, a method of listening for the bodily felt sense in what the other is saying and responding from one's own felt sense of the situation. They will also be introduced to Gendlin's integrative approach to dream work. Theories of Freud, Jung, Perls, and others will serve as a source of questions; the answers will come from participants' own dream interpretations and will be explored via this method of awareness of felt experience.

Research has shown focusing to have made a significant difference in the process of therapy clients, the lives of cancer patients, in preventing staff burn-out, and building team spirit among health care professionals. This workshop could be a new beginning.

Feeling and Innovation

Dale Cummings & Karel Samson

Discovering creative solutions in our personal and occupational lives can transform leisure and work and enliven our experience. Webster defines feeling as "the capacity to respond emotionally" and innovation as the "introduction of something new." How these two themes interconnect will be the focus of this workshop.

Participants will use neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, exercises in creativity and innovation, role-playing, and discussion. A period of individual work in a small group setting will provide a safe environment of emotional support. As negative feelings are worked through, active creativity can emerge.

Through its focus on feelings and creativity, this workshop offers encouragement and practical ideas for reinvigorating personal and organizational experiences and for pursuing innovation and new (ad)ventures in daily life. $675

The Physical Basis of Enlightenment: Discussions and Meditation Practice with Richard Baker-roshi

Existence is something you explore and create at the same time. Exploring life with the idea that existence is not a fixed thing is essentially what we are, in our own ways, trying to do. Enlightenment is the goal — fundamental security; overpowering tenderness and gratitude; an actively compassionate, courageous, and life generating state of mind; luminosity. But we really don't know what it all is.

The teaching of Enlightenment is first to accept life as it is without an observer. What are we going do? Where do we start? How do we get our history (our personal history) to acknowledge this project? The human body is the best medium through which to realize truth, to realize this precious human existence. $350

Stephen Aizenstat

Dreams can be imagined as looking-glass parables, each a complex story that reflects the personality and soul of the dreamer. This weekend's program will emphasize the healing potential of dream work. In so doing, the leader will review methods of dream work that consider the personal and collective unconscious.

New methods of dreamwork which take into account the world unconscious will be described. The world unconscious is seen as a deeper and broader dimension of the psyche and is imagined to contain the subjective inner natures (the subtle body) of all phenomena. It is believed that these inner subjective properties are reflected in the images of dreams and are, at an essential level, interrelated. It is at this level of the psyche that dream images provide access to an interconnected source of healing energy. This view, grounded in modern research and ancient wisdom, has practical implications for the use of dreams in physical and psychological healing.

Participants will be shown how to employ specific methods of dreamwork which honor and actualize the healing potential of the psyche. Common dream themes, nightmares, lucid dreaming, archetypal imagery, and the recurring dream will all be discussed. $350

Healing from Sexual Abuse: A Seven-Day Intensive for Survivors

Carolyn Braddock & Guest Staff

Healing does not have to be a struggle — healing can be gentle, sensitive, and friendly. This intensive will explore "victim"/survivor's body, mind, and spiritual belief systems. Since the body was where the abuse occurred, we will focus on body-oriented healing. Attention will be paid to ways in which sexual abuse/assault is carried in the mind/body, and how it affects flashbacks and disassociation, old messages (self-destructive beliefs), addictions, and the ability to let go. Using a gentle approach, we will learn and practice innovative, creative, and proven possibilities for healing.

Participants will learn and practice specific tools for wholeness. Humor, energy awareness, gestalt, role-playing, meditation, Tai Ji, and play will be used, as well as sessions that focus on feelings concerning sexuality, relationships, touch and intimacy, and accepting new patterns. New ways of creating support, phasing back gently, and nurturing will be discussed. This will be a week of safety, exploration, and integration.

Individual work within the group setting will be possible.

To register for this seminar, completion of application questions is necessary. This helps determine some history, what issues are prevalent, what support could be available to the participant during the week, and what forms of body work and/or transformational work has been experienced. For an application, please write or call the leader at: 333 S. Allison Pky. #304, Lakewood, CO 80226-3115, or (303) 985-7310.

Tantra: The Art of Conscious Loving

Charles Muir & Caroline Muir

Few of us have been blessed with healthy childhood conditioning and education regarding the mysteries of sexual love and sexual energy. This can leave many individuals less aware and conscious about their sexuality than they are in other aspects of their lives. Tantra can transform sex into a loving meditation, putting more consciousness, energy, intimacy, joy, and love into sexual exchanges.

Participants will learn and discuss various ways to increase intimacy and passion in their relationship. Tantric meditation and ways to exchange sexual energy in a safe, non-sexual manner will also be taught in the workshop. These methods can then be practiced in a sexual way in the privacy of your own home. This workshop is open to couples only.

Live music will be provided by Michael Stillwater. $675 per participant

The Way of the Shaman: The Shamanic Journey, Power & Healing

Michael Harner

Shamanism is an ancient human strategy for personal learning and for acting on that learning, using normally neglected or hidden potentialities of the heart, mind, and spirit. Shamanic methods can contribute to virtually any aspect of living, as they have for tens of thousands of years, and are especially useful for problem-solving, well-being, and healing.

In this experiential workshop, participants will be introduced to basic methods of the shaman (a specific type of medicine man or woman) and initiated into the classic shamanic journey. Otherwise known through myth and accounts of great spiritual experiences, this visionary method can be used to enter non-ordinary reality to obtain knowledge, to answer personal questions, to maximize power in achieving personal goals, and to contribute to the health of oneself, others, and the Planet. Participants will be aided by traditional drumming and movement and will be provided with methods to study with their individual spiritual teachers in non-ordinary reality, a classic step in shamanic practice.

The shamanic journey can be utilized to help restore spiritual power and health and has practical applications to contemporary daily life. Practices this weekend will include comparison of discoveries and work on personal problem-solving and wellness.

Please bring a bandanna to cover your eyes, a pen and notebook to record your journeys and, if you have them, a drum and/or a rattle. Wear comfortable clothing.

Creating a New Life: Developing Spiritual Strength while Recovering from Addiction

Elizabeth Stratton

The foundation of recovery from any addiction is spiritual strength — the recognition of the healing power of our relationship with God. It gives the recovery process meaning and the individual a will to live.

Creating a new life during recovery is a challenging process. To let go of the past while recovering from it means to see life through new eyes. Beginning each day anew requires dedication, courage, and compassion for the self that is being reborn. It means telling the truth and seeing life and the self through the eyes of compassionate truth.

This workshop provides an opportunity for those individuals who are in the recovery process to develop the healing skills necessary to create a new life. Experiential work will include: establishing and nurturing a relationship with God; self-forgiveness and forgiving others; telling the truth and releasing fear; turning anger into the will to live; healing the physical body from years of abuse; opening the inner energy system through meditation and imagery; developing psychic strength and protection from other people's negativity and addictive behaviors; and experiencing bliss through spiritual substance rather than substance abuse.

Introduction to Craniosacral Work

Hugh Milne

This workshop will introduce the theory and practice of craniosacral work, a subtle, careful, and delicate method for treating illness and for promoting health and healing. It is remarkable in its specificity and effectiveness. The gentlest of approaches, if accurate, can be more powerful than the most invasive.

Craniosacral work can be used to help people with a wide variety of symptoms, from cluster headaches to thoracic outlet syndrome to peripheral ischaemia. While very powerful, this is an inherently safe approach if it is studied from both analytical and intuitive models. To this end, the class will devote an equal portion of time to academic study and to practical, hands-on experience. Emphasis will be on visual and tactile diagnosis. In China, this is called "The Art of Listening." Practice of the demonstrated methods will be encouraged from day one so that a high standard of individual experience can be gained as the class unfolds. Feedback among participants on personal issues as touched on by this work will be an important part of the week. This workshop is for health care practitioners who already have a background in body work.

Spiritual Dimensions of Healing

Elizabeth Stratton

The desire to heal and be healed is a deep need within every human being. Seeing someone we love in pain brings out the instinct to touch that person in a compassionate way. Feeling or being ill ourselves can lead us to explore both spiritual and scientific dimensions of healing that we would otherwise not be open to.

Psychic healing, with its focus on the laying on of hands, understanding the meaning of the illness, and seeing into the heart of the person who is ill, brings a spiritual dimension to healing that can be a valuable adjunct to modern medicine and its high technology.

This five-day workshop will provide both theoretical and practical tools to awaken the healer within. Self-healing methods such as opening the energy centers (chakras), communicating with the body, and guided healing imagery will be explored to assist participants in taking charge of their own health. In addition, participants will begin to learn to work with others in a healing capacity through laying on of hands and psychic scanning.

Relationships: Turning Toward Joy

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared — by their family backgrounds or society — to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $350

Risking the Spotlight

Paula Shaw

Many of us want to step out and expand our participation in life. We would like to be able to feel express ourselves and communicate more freely, and not shrink from the limelight when we find ourselves in it. Some of us might even like to seek it out. But it feels risky. Participating in a group can feel threatening — we become shy and unable to be who we are. Issues of safety, shame, disapproval, deservingness, low self-esteem — to mention only a few — arise when we feel "on the spot." As a result, the freedom and intimacy we may experience on a one-to-one basis eludes us in a larger context, and we end up avoiding the risks of playing a bigger game in life.

This workshop creates a safe environment to risk stepping into the spotlight. Using simple and effective acting techniques including physical and vocal exercises, improv and creative communication games, and individual and group work, we will make our way through fearful inhibitions to joyful and powerful self-expression.

Optional: Bring a memorized performance piece of 1 to 2 minutes; monologue, speech, poem, song, etc. $675

Creating Exact Moments of Healing

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, life-long commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of trauma;
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries;
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation and toward stability and abundance;
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and body work. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals who work with ACAs. Please bring a mirror and photographs of yourself at all ages.

Powerfully Presenting Yourself

Mary Goldenson, Paula Shaw & Bob Corff

Why are some people so inspiring and impactful when they speak? What inhibits us from delivering our message? This workshop will explore the inhibitions to self-expression and communication, and help us move beyond them with more freedom in both our personal and professional lives. It is designed for people who want to develop a more powerful personal and public presentation, and better professional and business communication.

As the increasingly complicated new decade unfolds, work on challenging yourself into the twenty-first century. Courage, passion, and clarity need not be restricted to rare moments in life. There is a power within ourselves that can cut through inauthenticity and reconnect with what deeply and truly moves us and others around us. Learn to live your own dream, express yourself more fully, and experience the satisfaction of being more authentic and self-assured.

Workshop leaders combine their extensive expertise in the fields of psychology and the performing arts to guide you through this

Vision and Embodiment

Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)

This is an educational introduction to vision fitness, integrating inner vision and outer sight. The focus is on discovering 1) how to relax, clear, and reeducate the eye and the self to see, and 2) how one's present reality is distorted or shaped by attitudes, beliefs, and feelings.

Participants will utilize the Bates method of eye relaxation, movement, breath, guided meditation, earth ritual, and the creative use of the Spoken Word. Together they will explore, discover, experience, and expand their vision of possibilities for themselves and the world in which they live.

Recommended reading: Goodrich, Natural Vision Improvement (Celestial Arts); Huxley, The Art of Seeing. $350

Journey into the Sacred Unknown

Myron McClellan

Surrendering to the Sacred Unknown is the key to living passionately in the body, experiencing deep intimacy in relationships, eliciting the creativity of the whole in groups and teams, and unlocking imagination in work and play. The Unknown is refined awareness, the source of all true transformation. It cannot be accessed through thinking, but can be evoked through ritual process, body movement, and sacred music.

In this workshop, the Unknown dimension of consciousness will be called forth to replace the dominating role the ego plays in personal development and achievement, relationships, and group dynamics. The work will involve identifying subconscious barriers to accessing the Unknown, removing them, and replacing them with ways of opening to the Sacred.

The goal will be to focus on learning to live by inquiry and discovery rather than by plan and agenda; to live by commitment rather than control; to live with joy and ease rather than with suffering.

Participants must be willing to do body movement, though no previous experience is necessary. $350

The Extraordinary Human: Theory and Practice

Michael Murphy & George Leonard

In his new book, The Future of the Body, Michael Murphy raises the possibility that by gathering data from many fields — including medical science, anthropology, sport, the arts, psychical research, and comparative religious studies — we can identify extraordinary versions of most, if not all, our basic attributes. Murphy's research has shown that the most reliable path toward the realization of these extraordinary attributes involves transformative practice. He defines such practice as a coherent set of activities designed to produce positive change in a person or group. For a practice to be integral as well, it must aim to cultivate the physical, vital, cognitive, volitional, affective, and transpersonal dimension of human functioning in an integrated way. Leonard Energy Training (LET), was developed by George Leonard as an integral transformative practice.

Michael Murphy will discuss the twelve aspects of human functioning outlined in The Future of the Body: perception of external events, somatic awareness, communication abilities, vitality, movement abilities, capacities to manipulate the environment directly, feelings of pain and pleasure, cognition, volition, sense of self, love, and bodily structure. George Leonard will lead participants in practical exercises that illustrate the possibility of extraordinary human functioning. There will also be discussion of the applications of integral transformative practice to society at large.

Spiritual Healing: Laying On of Hands

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman

This workshop will present practical methods of using the hands as instruments for physical and spiritual healing. The emphasis will be on intentionality and personal clarity as fundamental tools in any healing art.

Couples Workshop

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

Return to the Light: Winder Teachings

Paul Rebillot & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

The winter solstice is a time for restful introspection as the earth's outer darkness allows the inner sun of the soul to regenerate and find expression. Traditional cultures the world over have rested, fasted, and feasted during this time of the year in celebration of the turning point, the cyclic return of the light. This is the time when all creatures prepare for the next cycle of growth.

Despondency, disillusionment, and regrets often weigh on people at this time of year, manifesting as depression or flight into frantic cheerfulness. This workshop offers an opportunity to work through past regrets and unfulfilled ideals, promises, and fairytales of childhood that lie behind them. Movement toward light is movement toward growth and individuation, and as we move through the time of darkness toward spring, it is important to understand the current season of one's life. What has not been completed? What needs healing? What do we need to say goodbye to? What new steps do we need to take as we cross our current thresholds into a new season?

There are many ways to this self-knowledge. Different people have developed different paths, using a variety of metaphors. The principle way we will use in this workshop is the way of the Medicine Wheel, which teaches us to celebrate our cycles and seasons. Through ritual and gestalt open seat, guided fantasy, music, and play, we will seek our own inner solstice, our own turning point on the Medicine Wheel, and there sow the seeds for spring. $675

Authentic Movement

Tina Stromsted

Our bodies form our closest link to the unconscious, providing avenues for deep and lasting change. Authentic Movement is a meditative form of dance influenced by the depth psychology of C.G. Jung. Through moving and witnessing each other move, participants will explore their own inner dance, finding freedom of expression while healing wounds and uncovering images of the self that may have locked them into painful or dissatisfying ways of living. Body-related issues, unresolved developmental material, preverbal memories, and transpersonal experience may emerge, leading toward integration and wholeness.

Designed for mental health professionals, artists, and those interested in personal growth, this experiential process assists participants in bridging body and psyche through expressive movement. Offering a structure within which natural movement can bloom and be nurtured, it allows individuals to discover ways to engage their creativity and make soulful self-contact.

Dealing with Difficult People

Julian Silverman

Occasionally we have difficulties with certain people in the midst of living or working, or providing services for them. These difficulties are usually not carefully examined or ever resolved. Sometimes such people wind up "driving us nuts." This workshop will explore the following:

- a framework for understanding these situations
- a checklist of do's and don'ts which serve to minimize problems with so-called "difficult" people; and
- a practicum for learning to empower yourself in difficult situations

Self-Expression through American Sign-Language

Lorraine Peters

American Sign Language, or ASL, is most often associated with the method of communication for deaf people. Rich with facial expression, pantomime, gestures, and specific signs made with the hands and fingers, it embodies the spirit and cultural uniqueness of the deaf. But ASL can also be a vehicle for the hearing to explore subtle forms of non-verbal communication. It offers them an alternative means of self-expression as they step out from behind the mask of words and reveal themselves through facial expression and body movement.

This workshop invites participants to tune in to their emotions and become aware of the gestures and postures that convey them. While specific ASL signs will be taught, participants will be encouraged to express their individuality by creating new signs of their own. Music, movement, and other experiential activities will be used in an atmosphere of humor and play.

This weekend is for those who want to become more emotionally expressive, for those in theater or dance, or for those who just want to begin learning American Sign Language. Previous sign language skills are not necessary.

Your Deep Mythology: Tap into the Magic

Stanely Krippner & David Feinstein

Each of us operates out of a deeply personal mythology, a guiding theme that animates our lives. This mythology functions largely outside of awareness, yet with uncanny accuracy we choose the characters and create the scenes that correspond to our deepest visions. Some of these visions serve us well, but others inevitably become outdated as we mature as adults. They may have been created in response to the limitations of our parents or other childhood circumstances, and often lead to inner conflict and self-defeating behavior. One of the most powerful steps we can take to enhance our sense of fulfillment and improve our effectiveness in the world is to constructively change this inner mythology, this invisible force that subliminally directs what we think, what we feel, and what we do.

Drawing upon techniques from a spectrum of systems, including Jungian psychology, Gestalt therapy, ancient spiritual disciplines, and modern clinical practice, you will be led through a powerful and moving sequence of experiences designed to discover the strengths of the mythology you are living, and to transform those aspects that no longer serve you. Discover how to understand your life story as an unfolding mythology, and reach into unconscious realms for visions that nourish and inspire. Participants are invited to bring a journal and record any dreams they recall prior to the workshop. $350

A Kind of Presence: The Therapist as a Somewhat Sacred Person

What do we expect when we are in despair and yet go to a man? Surely, a presence by means of which we are told that nevertheless there is meaning — Martin Buber

Ron Kurtz & Amina Knowland

How is it that we become the kind of presence that we must be to be "healers in general and psychotherapists in particular" (Trungpa)? What are the essential elements of that presence? How are they expressed through the psychotherapist as person? And how does this "personhood" manifest, first as qualities we bring to the relationship, and finally as method and technique?

This workshop will approach these questions using the wisdom of Buddhism and Taoism and the teaching exercises of the Hakomi Method of body-centered psychotherapy. Emphasis will be on discovery, particularly the discovery of how we do what we do by being who we are. Participants will also explore how the images and energies which give life to this way of being are evoked, nourished, and sustained. $675

Howard Schechter & Barbara Lee

Rekindling the Spirit in Work is about reconnecting with yourself and the work you do. Through creative exercises and sharing with the group, you will gain clarity about your goals in work, the skills required to reach those goals, and awareness of your strengths. The process allows you to confront and dissolve your major blocks to rewarding work and helps integrate who you are with what you do. This process is far more effective than narrowly focused vocational perspectives. The emphasis is on the question, "Who is working?" From an identification with our highest Self, what we do can flow more easily and be a direct expression in the world of who we are inside.

This workshop is for people who are beginning new careers, in transition, dissatisfied, or simply bored with their work. Participants often come away with a sense of clarity and purpose, and seldom feel the need to make radical shifts in their job or profession. Rather, the subtle inner adjustments of identity, attitude, and perspective create greater job satisfaction and offer direction for taking the next steps in work.

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement, the energy, the willingness to stand to it comes bubbling up in the mood of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for: people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based in trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $675

The Enneagram and Higher Awareness: The Inner Centers of Perception

Helen Palmer

The Enneagram is an ancient system of human development that describes nine different personality styles. Each is defined by a recurring inner concern. No style is better or more effective than another, but they differ radically in their point of view. This will be an oral tradition class, using panels of speakers who represent the types. Their stories will offer a rare glimpse of the private workings of different kinds of mind, and provide a deeper understanding of how these different approaches to life are worked out through each individual.

The Enneagram sees personality as mimicking aspects of higher awareness. In this way, a specific spiritual quality such as faith, hope, or love, was challenged in early life. Personality then formed both as an emotional survival strategy, and as a spiritual path organized to recover the missing quality.

This workshop introduces practices of emptying, focusing, chanting, moving, and observing that demonstrate a correspondence between the chief distortion of type and a specific facet of higher awareness. The practices align the inner centers of belly, heart, and mind through which we perceive our inner nature. Each center opens one of the three intuitive "ways" of knowing, and is attuned to specific aspects of the inner life.

This session can be applied as one of the requirements for the Enneagram Professional Training Program. The emphasis will be on inner material, but not personal process work. If you wish to discuss the workshop, please call (510) 843-7621.

Helen Malcolm-Neeb

Vision painting is a transformative adventure recreating aspects of your life spiritually, professionally, and physically. Through meditation and guided visioning you can explore the many layers of self that motivate your life. Subconscious symbols and dream images are evoked on the path to the inner self. The painting becomes the process of the hand following the emotions and the heart, creating from your highest potential a personal map of the future as you would like it to be.

This is an opportunity to affirm the spirit within from a place of play, creativity, and strength. Beginners and artists are welcome. Create a vision of your future as you want it to be.

Toward a Common Language: Psychotherapy and 12-Step Recovery

Peter Finkelstein & Peter Ways

Participants in "12 Step" programs are often irritated or bored when faced with conventional psychodynamic discussions of their addictive behavior patterns. Similarly, adherents to more classical psychological approaches are frequently condescending and dismissive when they encounter the AA point of view. Although both groups employ combinations of insight and social support in their work, their differences in basic orientation and treatment experience often cause defensiveness and frustration. As a consequence, it becomes very difficult for those involved in these two approaches to learn from each other.

This workshop, co-lead by a psychodynamic psychiatrist and a recovering physician steeped in "12 Step" work, will attempt to develop a common language and inclusive style for dealing with addictive patterns that gathers strength from each model. The workshop will be useful to counselors and therapists from both sides of this conceptual gap, and for all persons wrestling with the similarities and contradictions of "12-Step" and psychotherapeutic approaches.

On Being a Man

David Schiffman

Many men today have sought to honor and embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result of this emphasis, the right to celebrate the honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man's sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own natures which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood, and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and good will, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the "wild man" within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

A variety of experiential processes will illuminate these and similar issues. Traditional initiation rituals and purification ceremonies using drumming, chanting, and a sweat lodge will be incorporated in this journey as well. $350

Ritual, Ecstasy, and Women's Spirituality

Margo Adler

This workshop for women explores the ideas, the rituals, and the celebration that comes out of the women's spirituality movement. Margot Adler uses chant, songs, and sacred circles as ways for women to explore the healing power, joy, and ease that comes from doing rituals with women. The basic philosophy that informs this workshop is Neo-Paganism and Goddess spirituality. This perspective is non-hierarchical and starts with the idea that we, ourselves, are sacred and flowing with potential. Ritual is a tool that can end our alienation from nature and from each other. The workshop explores ways of reclaiming the vitality and mystery of ecstatic religions without the dogmatic and patriarchal attitudes that have caused so many women to leave their own religious traditions.

The workshop will combine joyful exuberance (chants, songs, laughter, and drumming) with time for quiet meditation, including a voyage to meet the Goddess within ourselves. This should be two days filled with joy and fun. Please bring drums, rattles, instruments, and one or two personal items that have special significance to place on a community altar as a way of sharing your own stories. $350

Julian Silverman

A Course in Miracles is a curriculum which uses the mind to empower, inspire, and enjoy oneself. In it, conventional problem-oriented human thinking is regarded as an oppressive force, a force which needs to be understood and then neutralized. The method and perspective of the course is based on the following goals:

- Upgrading our ordinary ways of making sense of things
- Learning how to recognize life's trials as opportunities to heal ourselves, and how to take advantage of these opportunities
- Learning to re-cognize and to recollect routinely and to fulfill our essential value and purposes as human beings. $675

The Unfolding Self

Joyce Lyke & Jessica Britt

We are the night ocean filled with glints of light. We are the space between fish and the moon,
while we sit here together—Rumi

We live in a world of mystery, wonder, and beauty. Unfortunately many of us seldom perceive or participate in this realm of reality. Instead we see and live in a world of conflict, suffering, and uncertainty, often doubtful of life's meaning. Our childhood conditioning creates veils that make it difficult to perceive the truth, which limits our capacity to be present in the unfolding mystery.

This week is for participants who have been working on themselves and would like further inquiry into the relationship between emotional work and spiritual development. Using Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, and individual Reichian and gestalt work, we will inquire into what it means to allow and commit to the unfoldment of the self—the unveiling of the mystery.

How to Tell Your Friends From the Apes: A Workshop in Evolutionary Psychology

Robert Anton Wilson

Developed in the 1920s by Dr. Theodore Schroeder, evolutionary psychology was a major influence on Harry Stack Sullivan, Interpersonal Psychology, Dr. Eric Berne, General Semantics, Existential Therapy, and Dr. Timothy Leary, among others. In this workshop, evolutionary psychology will be updated to include current findings in the neurosciences, and we will discuss Schroder's evolutionary perspective to discovering both past and future genetic programs buried in our brains.

Using simple "experiments" and "games", the leader will guide participants in finding the amoeba within, learning how their reptile brain operates, seeing the monkey-mind in politics and family feuds, exploring "Civilization and its Discontents," and probing the latent potentials of our neurosomatic (mind-body) healing circuitry. We will also probe our neurogenetic vistas ("memories of the future"), the metaprogramming networks that lift us above conditioned reflex mechanisms, and the nonlocal "Holon" in which we find each individual mind contains and reflects the mind of all sentient life throughout space and time.

WARNING: The Attorney General has determined that this workshop may be hazardous to your dogma. $350

Should I Tell The Truth?

Will Schutz

Two of the most popular and powerful films of 1992 — Prince of Tides, and JKF — revolve around the consequences of withholding, one personally, the other socially. The human potential movement placed the issue of openness, or truth, center stage. Various practitioners felt it was essential for the following reasons: to realize full potential; find the god within; utilize total energy; enjoy full relationships; solve social and organizational problems; and allow the cosmic energy to flow through our bodies without a ripple.

More practical heads insisted on the legitimacy and desirability of privacy, secrets, prudence, discretion, the need to know, and compassion for the potential hurt feelings of the recipient of the openness. What is openness, or truth? Is withholding okay, or is it the intellectual's form of lying? Is openness sometimes an excuse for civilized hostility? Is unawareness (deniability) a legitimate justification for not being open? Is it true that people get in trouble not because they tell the truth — but rather because they do not tell enough truth? We will explore and experiment with the consequences and limits — if any — of living a life of total openness.

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come along or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you — singing. $350

The Art of Leadership: Excellence in Business, Management and Communication

Ronald Alexander & Bruce Gregory

This workshop is for executives, managers and other people who are committed to improving their communication and leadership skills. Some of the major areas that will be focused on will include:

- Conflict resolution
- Dealing with the blocks that prevent executives from feeling secure and clearly articulating their vision
- Developing trust with persons who feel threatened or intimidated
- Discovering and addressing blind spots in self-esteem

And the development of creative strategies for building support systems that facilitate the transformation of visions into realities. Some of the group processes will include: giving and receiving feedback on communication and leadership styles, role-playing, problem solving exercises for real life work situations, and exercises for learning to use the unconscious to creatively solve problems. $350

Week of February 21–26

Cross-Cultural Shamanic Practices

Angeles Arrien

Participants of this workshop will be introduced to shamanic tools from diverse cultures in order to access and empower their inner teacher, healer, visionary, and warrior. The universal healing salves of singing, storytelling, dancing, and silence will be engaged to rekindle the spirit and retrieve any soul loss.

KAREN PREUSS

Group members will work individually and collectively to honor ancestor spirits by releasing limiting family patterns; enhance personal and professional power by speaking with "spirit tongue (truth-telling); and experience shamanic practices that reveal internal mythology, help heal wounds, and adjust imbalances.

This week qualifies as a Foundational training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien. $675

Mentations and Deviations℠: Thinking with the Whole Body

Michael Kramer, Paule Marx & Christian Intemann

True mentations are the conscious physical experience of perceptions which occur naturally in our bodies. Participants in this workshop will learn how to utilize their entire body to formulate a complete thought. This training is based upon the teachings of Oscar Ichazo, founder of the Arica Institute.

The goal of this workshop will be to sensitize our entire body and to "set" the mentations. For example, our ears give us the mentation of substance or understanding and with our eyes we perceive the purity of forms; our nose gives us an awareness of the possibilities of any given moment, and with our mouth we perceive our essential needs.

In setting the mentations we use 12 yantras, one for each mentation. Yantras use the principles of color and form and provide a set of symbols that enable our psyche to grasp directly the essential language of the mentations. Music is also an integral part of this training, as the mentations have a direct correspondence with the notes of the 12-tone musical scale.

In contrast to the 12 mentations of the body are the 12 deviations of the mind. They are referred to as "clowns," and are a chorus of misinformation and confusion that arise whenever we attempt to intellectualize the natural flow of perceptions in our bodies. The deviations are determined by the time and place of birth. They act as voices of dissension that impede the clear perception of both our interior and exterior worlds. Participants will learn to recognize and name each deviation's voice, and disarm them all with humor, light-hearted theater, and meditation.

Recommended reading: Interviews with Oscar Ichazo (Arica Institute Press), and Master Level Exercise: Psychocalisthenics (Sequoia Press). $675

Prevent Your Heart Attack

Joe Goldstrich & Norman Kaplan

As an adult, the greatest danger to your health and life is coronary disease — a heart attack often manifested by sudden death. The risks for coronary disease are well-known and this workshop will help you identify and act directly against whatever risks you feel you have. You will be given a pre-workshop questionnaire about your current health habits and asked to obtain a simple blood test for blood sugar and cholesterol before the workshop.

The leaders will review the scientific evidence about the role of each of the following risks and provide practical, individualized guidance for a long-term program that will reduce those which you have: Obesity, particularly upper body or abdominal; high blood pressure; high blood LDL-cholesterol, low HDL-cholesterol; cigarette smoking and passive smoke; job-related stress; Type A personality; physical inactivity.

To lower these risks, participants will discuss the following:

- Diet: low saturated fat, limited protein, moderate sodium, increased essential vitamins, minerals, and antioxidants
- Exercise: An individualized program of medium intensity, aerobic exercise
- Smoking cessation: Use of nicotine skin patches and gum as part of an effective stop- smoking program
- Stress reduction: Massage, meditation, and proper breathing
- Drug therapy as an adjunct to diet to reduce serum cholesterol and cause regression/reversal of coronary heart disease.
- Appropriate alcohol intake, use of aspirin and (for women) postmenopausal estrogens, avoidance of other environmental toxins, and incorporation of other heart-helpful practices.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

Clinical Program for Professionals: Integrating Gestalt, Self Psychology, and Mind-Body Healing

Ronald Alexander & Bruce Gregory

This five-day training program will combine didactic discussion with experiential exercise, supervision of therapist-client dyads, and clinical demonstrations. A full spectrum of treatment cartography will be used to clarify how gestalt, self psychology, and mind-body healing can be effectively integrated to address early developmental trauma, narcissistic issues of the self, and contact boundary disturbances. Emphasis will be on:

- Improving skills of diagnosis
- Formulation of treatment plans that attend to the transition points of the healing process
- Improving intervention skills as they relate to handling resistance, the nurturing of the real self, and facilitation and activation of unconscious healing processes through the use of mirroring, pacing, and the language of mind-body healing.

Particular attention will be paid to assisting therapists to become more aware and effective in dealing with countertransference and projective identification.

Recommended Readings: Masterson, Countertransference and Psychotherapeutic Technique (Bruner Mazel), Erickson & Rossi, Hypnotherapy Casebook; and Polster, Gestalt Therapy Integrated (Brunner Mazel).

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

Making It Float

Robert Hall

There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float. — Conroy

Robert Hall writes: "And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you're willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you're interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we'll not only make it float, we'll take a ride in it."

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

Weekend of February 26–28

A Weekend with Ruth Zaporah and Action Theater

Physical theater improvisation reflects life — in both we walk backwards, knowing where we've been, which is not knowing where we're going. Each step we take is a step into now. As awareness expands, experience becomes more now. The movement, vocal, and language exercises in this training expand awareness. Participants improvise upon an awakened memory and imagination. Integrated thought, emotion, fantasy, and spirit inspire action and speech.

During this weekend, we'll play in the studio and out on the beach, all the time seriously enjoying ourselves. This workshop accommodates the novice, the explorer, and the practiced. $350

The Passion of the Western Mind: Bringing it All Back Home

Richard Tarnas

In light of the current state of humanity and the world, how should we evaluate the Western intellectual and spiritual tradition? What are we to make of this tremendous historical development that has shaped our world and our psyches with such pervasive force? Has the long Western trajectory served some deeper evolutionary purpose, or was it rather humankind's supreme evolutionary error, a sustained epistemological mistake? With the emergence of the global ecological crisis, with the deconstruction of patriarchal, Eurocentric, and anthropocentric assumptions and values, with the rise of multiculturalism and feminism and the resurgence of Eastern and indigenous spiritual traditions, where stands the West?

These are critical questions of our time, especially for those of us who stand at the crossroads of all these intellectual and spiritual impulses — postmodern, countercultural, indigenous, archaic, esoteric, Eastern — and yet who are, in the end, sons and daughters of the West. Every generation must discover a way to transcend its historical foundations. Yet paradoxically it can do so only by first integrating them. What each of us as psychological individuals has long been doing is also what we as a civilization must do — strive to understand that which has constituted us, recover our historical evolution, make the unconscious conscious. For in terms of a civilization, history is, in a sense, the great unconscious. What has been driving us the last four thousand years? Can we envision a conceptual framework large enough and subtle enough that it can make intelligible both the extraordinary achievement of the Western trajectory, and its great cost? Can we find our way to a genuinely integral world view, one that does not secrete a final dualism by embracing everything except the Western or the modern? If ours is indeed a participatory cosmos, what role has been played by our own vast experiment?

Join Richard Tarnas in engaging these questions and issues. The group will draw on sources as diverse, but perhaps ultimately convergent, as depth psychology (the work of Stanislav Grof, the later Jung, James Hillman), sociology of religion (Robert Bellah), philosophy of science (Kuhn, Popper, Feyerabend, Evelyn Fox Keller), Romantic thought (Goethe, Hegel, Rudolf Steiner), and ecofeminist spirituality.

Meditation: The Living Dance

David Streeter

The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation. This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way.

In our retreat atmosphere we will prepare the body-mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. We will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama), and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery, and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life, and that crystal-clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $350

Certification in Clinical Hypnosis

Marc Lehrer, Maggie Phillips, Norman Katz & Adam Burke

This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian and Direct Hypnosis, Neurolinguistics and Biohypnotic Monitoring. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the MFCC and complies with the California State Requirement for Hypnosis Certification, and is designed to help develop hypnotic skills for counseling, medicine, nursing and other health areas, education, and body work. This program is also an opportunity for personal growth and transformation for anyone interested in hypnotic phenomena and the uses of suggestion in daily life.

Hypnotic suggestion, advanced imagery, and relaxation methods will be explored. There will be daily presentations, numerous practice sessions, video examples of Erickson and other practitioners, and extensive written support materials. A hypnosis library will be available for in-depth learning of advanced topic areas and there will be an opportunity to explore personal goals with trance and biofeedback equipment.

The scientific basis of hypnosis as well as the ways hypnosis can be applied will be emphasized. Topic areas will include: induction methods, hypnotic testing, symptom and habit removal, individual and family counseling applications, pain control and psychosomatics, non-verbal and pendulum methods, biomedical hypnotic monitoring, metaphor and story-telling methods, hypnosis with children, regression and uncovering, redecisioning and reframing, self-concept enhancement, stress management, fears and phobias, early trauma, hypnotic dream programming, imagery conditioning, NLP methods, enhancing performance in sports, music, and sensation, self-hypnosis methods, teaching self-hypnosis classes, and other topics related to therapy, health, and personal growth. Selected ongoing exercises drawn from Aikido, Feldenkrais, movement, massage, and shamanistic traditions will complement the traditional topic areas.

Since each of the leaders will present for a number of days, there will be an opportunity to model different ways of deepening your own hypnotic potential, trance induction, and utilization skills. This month-long experience with various faculty members gives each participant an in-depth opportunity to develop vivid personal imagery, make lasting self suggestions, and relate more completely with the unconscious mind.

The certification offered through this program is equivalent to a University modified tutorial course. You complete readings, assignments, and a paper for the hypnosis certificate. Certification is granted based upon the competency demonstrated to the faculty in applying hypnotic techniques with an ethical and professional approach and satisfactory completion of all Great Western University C.E.U. course requirements. The paper and assignments are due no later than four months following the completion of this program at Esalen. Course fees for the Hypnosis Certificate are $300 (12 C.E.Us), payable to Great Western University upon beginning the program at Esalen. It is also possible to obtain four transcripted Graduate Psychology courses rather than C.E.Us (requires additional fees to Great Western University and you must have at least a B.A. degree. Contact Marc Lehrer, Chairman, Dept. of Psychology, Great Western University, 415/397-4929 for further details).

Space is limited for this program so early registration is recommended. Reading lists and information about certificate and graduate credit will be sent upon request or registration.

■ WORK STUDY PROGRAM

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: a general interest section which covers a variety of growth approaches, and a focused interest section which emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program. Two programs are planned for each month. Those scheduled thus far for 1992-1993 include:

August 23–September 20

Seymour Carter, longtime gestalt teacher at Esalen and in Europe, combines studies in sensory awareness, Zen buddhism, aikido, and other body-oriented practices into a group process which provides a safe setting for self-exploration.

This month with David Streeter will give students the opportunity to incorporate the subtle art of contemplation in a community atmosphere. Yoga, massage, and gentle emotional release — along with silent meditation — will be included in the curriculum.

September 20–October 18

Katriona Munthe and Anita Eubank Donovan offer movement, metaphor, and myth as a means for understanding the universal symbols of mankind. Mime and dramatizing dreams will be used for self-exploration and as tools for developing human compassion.

Steven Harper will lead a group exploring "inner" and "outer" nature. With Big Sur's wilderness as a primary teacher, the group will draw from various somatic and contemplative traditions that enhance personal awareness to further explore ourselves and nature.

October 18–November 15

Jackie Rosin and Kay Brownfield offer a month of psychosynthesis. Meditation, guided imagery, music, movement, art, and individual process work will be some of the modalities used. Professionals are invited.

A month with John Soper will focus on ways to improve the quality of life. The work will start with the individual and expand to include the environment.

November 15–December 13

Karuna Licht will lead a women's group and David Schiffman will lead a men's group. The groups will meet separately and at various points come together to create a context in which to explore issues and new ways of relating. The leaders will use a unique blend of innovative methods involving movement, ritual, and creative expression.

December 13–January 10

Robert Nadeau will emphasize functional centering. Using grounding, energy awareness, Aikido, and movement work, the physical, mental, and spiritual aspects of centering will be explored.

This month with David Streeter will give students the opportunity to incorporate the subtle art of contemplation in a community atmosphere. Yoga, massage, and gentle emotional release — along with silent meditation — will be included in the curriculum.

January 10–February 7

Erik Riswold will lead a mind-body-spirit study devoted to the development of integral transformative practice. Through Leonard Energy Training (LET) and other practices, participants will explore personal development in the twelve aspects of human functioning outlined in Michael Murphy's The Future of the Body and create their own program for bodily transformation. Michael Murphy and George Leonard will participate at various times during this month-long program.

Dianne Laurence and participants will use acting, writing, theater, and painting to create a communal performance that will be presented at month's end.

February 7–March 7

Mary Goldenson's (Devarani) program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman and Anita Eubank Donovan will present practical methods of using the hands as instruments for physical and spiritual healing. Emphasis will be on developing intentionality and personal clarity as fundamental tools for any healing art.

■ Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.
